PREFACE TO THE SIXTH EDITION.

ON the 30th of March, 1868,—exactly four years from the present date,—I wrote my preface to the Fifth Edition of this Treatise. A Sixth Edition is now called for, and in submitting it to the Profession I cannot do better than repeat, with scarcely a verbal alteration, what I then said.

In passing my proof sheets through the press, I have, with a feeling akin to parental solicitude, anxiously revised, for the sixth time, both the text and the notes. All the really important decisions on the Law of Evidence, which have been pronounced during the last four years, whether in England or in Ireland, will be found noticed in their proper places ; and at least one hundred and fifty separate enactments, the prolific fruit of our “rapid and restless Legislation” for the same period, have been embodied in the work. I have also carefully expunged every passage in the former Edition, which, owing to the changes in the law, has become a “blind guide” to the student ; and I am rejoiced to find that, notwithstanding all the new matter incorporated in the Work, its bulk is not increased by a single page.

My warmest thanks are again due to Mr. Robert Romer, of No. 4, New Square, Lincoln's Inn, for the valuable aid he has afforded me in re-paging and revising the Indexes. To this most irksome task he has applied, in no scant measure, those remarkable qualities of industry, intelligence and zeal, which won for him, when a student at the University of Cambridge, the highest honours of the Mathematical School, and which have since borne the fruit most earnestly coveted by lawyers, "whom Fate reserves for a bright future."

EXTRACTS FROM THE

THE following Work is founded on "Dr. Greenleaf's American Treatise on the Law of Evidence." Indeed, when in July, 1843, my attention was first especially drawn to the subject of Evidence, with a view to publication, I undertook to discharge the duties of an editor only, and it was not until I had been engaged for many months in that undertaking that I finally determined to abandon it, and to submit to the public a treatise of my own. In taking this step, I had no idle hope of being able to produce a book, which, regarded as an exposition of general principles, should surpass, or even equal, that written by the learned American Professor; but I thought that, by citing more fully the leading decisions of our own Courts, and by introducing such portions of our Statute Law as related to the subject of Evidence, I might possibly compile a work of more practical utility to the English and Irish lawyer. To have introduced this new matter, in the shape of notes to Dr. Greenleaf's Treatise, would have been highly inconvenient; to have interwoven it with his text, and still to have called the work by his name, would have been alike unjust to him and to myself; and, consequently, it appeared to me, that the only alternative left was to publish a work in my own name, for the errors of which I should be alone responsible.

I have still, however, availed myself very largely of Dr. Greenleaf's labours, having adopted, with but few alterations, his excellent general arrangement, having followed to a considerable extent the course even of his sections, and having borrowed many pages of his terse and luminous writing. My object has been to afford to the profession really useful and accurate information; and whether that information were conveyed in my own or in another's language, has been to me, as it will doubtless be to my readers, a matter of indifference.

From the American decisions cited by Dr. Greenleaf, I have made a selection, having referred to such, as, in my judgment, either afforded favourable illustrations of doubtful points of law, or laid down rules superior to those adopted in our own Courts.

With the view of rendering my work useful to the practitioner in Ireland, I have noticed most of the leading decisions of the Four Courts on the Law of Evidence, and have referred to many Irish Statutes on the same subject.

In stating what the law is, I have not been unmindful of what, in my humble opinion, it ought to be; and I have therefore ventured, from time to time, to point out briefly such alterations in the law as I conceive would effect material amendments. The Law-Reformer, by referring to the Index, Title, "Suggestions for Amending the Law of Evidence," will find what I have done on this head.

The book contains no chapter on the Law of Stamps. This omission might perhaps be justified by simply referring to the able works of Messrs. Phillipps and Starkie, in the former of which the subject is not treated, while in the latter, it occupies a very subordinate place in the third volume. But the reasons which chiefly influenced me in deciding to reject the Law of Stamps, were, 1st, that it has been already discussed at large in several distinct treatises; 2nd, that any exposition of it, to be of practical value, must have added much to the bulk of the work, and consequently to its price; 3rd, that it would have delayed the publication for many months; 4th, that this branch of the law will probably ere long undergo very extensive changes; and last, though I confess not least, that it is one of the most repulsive subjects which could be selected by an author for discussion.

In a work of this magnitude, treating as it does of a fluctuating branch of the law, I am well aware that many mistakes must have occurred; for these, my only apology is, that I have spared no labour to avoid them. The language of St. Augustine is an author's best consolation:—"Illi in vos sæviant, qui nesciunt cum quo labore verum inveniatur, et quàm difficile caveantur errores."

PRACTICAL TREATISE

NATURE AND PRINCIPLES OF EVIDENCE.

PRELIMINARY OBSERVATIONS.

§ 1.<sup>1</sup> THE word EVIDENCE, considered in relation to Law, includes all the legal means, exclusive of mere argument, which tend to prove or disprove any matter of fact, the truth of which is submitted to judicial investigation. This term and the word proof are often used as synonymes; but the latter is applied by accurate logicians, rather to the effect of evidence, than to evidence itself.<sup>2</sup> None but mathematical truth is susceptible of that high degree of evidence called demonstration, which excludes all possibility of error. In the investigation of matters of fact such evidence cannot be obtained; and the most that can be said is, that there is no reasonable doubt concerning them.<sup>3</sup> The true question, therefore, in trials of fact is not, whether it is possible that the testimony may be false, but whether there is sufficient probability of its truth ; that is, whether the facts are proved by competent and satisfactory evidence.

<sup>3</sup> See Gamb. Guide, 121. Even of mathematical truths this writer justly remarks, that, though capable of demonstration, they are admitted by most men solely on the moral evidence of general notoriety. Id. 196. See N. York Civ. Code, § 1662.

§ 2.<sup>1</sup> By competent evidence is meant that which the law requires, as the fit and appropriate proof in the particular case, such as the production of a writing, where its contents are the subject of inquiry. By satisfactory evidence, which is sometimes called sufficient evidence, is intended that amount of proof which ordinarily satisfies an unprejudiced mind beyond reasonable doubt. The circumstances which will amount to this degree of proof can never be previously defined ; the only legal test of which they are susceptible is their sufficiency to satisfy the mind and conscience of an ordinary man ; and so to convince him, that he would venture to act upon that conviction in matters of important personal interest.<sup>2</sup> Questions respecting the competency or admissibility of evidence are entirely distinct from those which respect its sufficiency or effect ; the former being exclusively within the province of the court ; the latter belonging exclusively to the jury.<sup>3</sup>

§ 3.<sup>4</sup> This branch of the law may be considered under three general heads, namely, First, The Nature and Principles of Evidence ;—Secondly, The Object of Evidence, and the Rules which govern its production ;—And Thirdly, The Means of Proof, or the Instruments by which facts are established. This order will be followed in the present Treatise ; but before proceeding further, it will be convenient, first, to consider what matters the courts will of themselves notice without proof, and next, to offer a few observations respecting the functions of the judge, as distinguished from those of the jury.

CHAPTER II.

MATTERS JUDICIALLY NOTICED, WITHOUT PROOF.<sup>1</sup>

§ 4.<sup>2</sup> ALL civilised nations, being alike members of the great family of sovereignties, may well be supposed to recognise each other's existence, and general public and external relations. Every sovereign therefore recognises, and, of course, the public tribunals and functionaries of every nation notice, the existence and titles of all the other sovereign powers in the civilised world.<sup>3</sup> If, however, upon a civil war in any country, one part of the nation should separate from the other, and establish for itself an independent government, the newly-formed nation cannot be recognised as such by the judicial tribunals of other nations, until it has been acknowledged by the sovereign power under which those tribunals are constituted.<sup>4</sup> Still the judges are bound, ex officio, to know whether or not the government has recognised such nation as an independent state.<sup>5</sup>

<sup>3</sup> United States of America v. Wagner, 2 Law Rep. Ch. Ap. 585, per Ld. Chelmsford, Ch.; 36 L. J., Ch. 628, S. C. From Yrisarri v. Clement, 11 Moore, 314, 315; 2 C. & P. 225, S. C., it seems that the existence of states unacknowledged by the government must be proved by evidence, showing that they are associations formed for mutual defence, supporting their own independence, making laws, and having courts of justice. The two Reports somewhat differ, but the latter lays down the soundest law. This case is also reported in 3 Bing. 432.

<sup>5</sup> Taylor v. Barclay, 2 Sim. 213. In that case it was falsely alleged in the bill, with the view of preventing a demurrer, that Guatemala, a revolted colony of Spain, had been recognised by Great Britain, as an independent state; but the V.-Ch. took judicial notice that the allegation was false. See, however, Dolder v. Bk. of Eng., 10 Ves. 354, where Ld. Eldon observed, "I cannot affect to be ignorant of the fact, that the revolutions in Switzerland have not been recognised by the government of this country; but, as a judge, I cannot take notice of that." It may well be doubted whether this last case is law.

§ 5. In like manner the judges will recognise, without proof, the common<sup>1</sup> and statute law,<sup>2</sup> the law of nations, the law and custom of parliament, and the privileges and course of proceedings of each branch of the legislature;<sup>3</sup> the prerogatives of the Crown,<sup>4</sup> and the privileges of the royal palaces;<sup>5</sup> the maritime law;<sup>6</sup> the ecclesiastical law;<sup>7</sup> the articles of war, whether in the naval,<sup>8</sup> the marine, or the land service,<sup>9</sup> including those made for the government of the forces in India,<sup>10</sup> but not the book called "Rules and Regulations for the Government of the Army;"<sup>11</sup> royal proclamations, such being acts of State;<sup>12</sup> the rules of

<sup>9</sup> By what is usually § 1 of the Annual Mutiny Act, the Queen is empowered "to make articles of war for the better government of H.M.'s forces, which articles shall be judicially taken notice of by all judges, and in all courts whatsoever;" and by the corresponding sect. of the Annual Marine Mutiny Act, the Ld. High Admiral, or the commissioners for executing his office, "may make, ordain, and establish rules and articles of war under the hand of the said Ld. High Admiral, or under the hands of any two or more of the said commissioners, for the better government of H.M.'s royal marine forces, and for the punishment of mutiny," &c.; "which rules and articles shall be judicially taken notice of by all judges, and in all courts whatsoever." <sup>12</sup> There exists some doubt upon this point. In Dupays v. Shepherd, 12 Mod. 216, Ld. Holt held that a proclamation in print was of as public a nature as a public act of parliament; but in Van Omeron v. Dowick, 2 Camp. 44, Ld. Ellenborough refused to take notice of a proclamation, on the ground that the Gazette containing it was not produced. The marginal

note to this last case is calculated to mislead, as it asserts broadly, that "a judge at Nisi Prius will not take judicial notice of the king's proclamations." The case does not go this length, which is tantamount to saying that royal proclamations must be laid before the jury, but simply decides that, when a judge's memory is at fault, some document must be at hand to establish the fact which he is called upon to notice. Copies of royal proclamations, if purporting to be printed by the Queen's printer, are rendered admissible by 8 & 9 V., c. 113, § 3; see post, § 7. They may be proved also in a variety of other ways. St. Leonards* observes, in 3 V. & P. 28, "It matters very little what is the opinion of any individual conveyancer; but the opinion of the conveyancers, as a class, is of the deepest importance to every individual of property in the state. Their settled rule of practice has, accordingly, in several instances been adopted as the law of the land, not out of respect for them, but out of tenderness to the numerous purchasers who have bought estates under their advice." <sup>5</sup> Barnett v. Brandao, 6 M. & Gr. 630. In that case, where judicial notice was taken by the Ct. of Ex. Ch. of the general lien of bankers on the securities of their customers in their custody, Ld. Denman, in pronouncing the judgment of the court, said, "The law-merchant forms a branch of the law of England; and those customs, which have been universally and notoriously prevalent amongst merchants, and have been found by experience to be of public use, have been adopted as a part of it, upon a principle of convenience, and for the benefit of trade and commerce: and when so adopted, it is unnecessary to plead and prove them. They are binding on all without proof. Accordingly we find that usages affecting bills of exchange and bills of lading, are taken notice of judicially."—P. 665. His lordship then states that, "in the case of a factor, the right to a general lien" is, "in modern practice, treated as a matter of settled law, and no proof is ever required that the special descent of gavelkind and borough English lands,<sup>1</sup> though possibly all other customs incident to such tenures must be specially pleaded and proved;<sup>2</sup> the custom or law of the road, viz., that horses and carriages should respectively keep on the near or left side;<sup>3</sup> and the following rules with respect to navigation,—first, that ships and steamboats on meeting should port

such general lien exists, as a matter of fact;" and he adds, that "the lien of bankers, who are a species of factors in pecuniary transactions, stands on the same footing," and, consequently, their right to such lien "need not be pleaded, but the courts are judicially bound to take notice of it."—P. 666. This lien extends to Exchequer bills.—Id. The judgment of the Ex. Ch. in the above case was afterwards reversed by the House of Lords, but that portion of it which relates to judicial notice of the general lien of bankers, was affirmed. Brandao v. Barnett, 12 Cl. & Fin. 787; 3 Com. B. 519, S. C. So, in Eddie v. E. India Co., 2 Burr. 1226, which turned upon the question, whether a bill payable to A. or order, and indorsed personally to B., could be afterwards indorsed by B. to another, Mr. J. Wilmot observed, "The custom of merchants is part of the law of England, and courts of law must take notice of it as such. There may, indeed, be some questions depending upon customs amongst merchants, where, if there be a doubt about the custom, it may be fit and proper to take the opinion of merchants thereupon; yet that is only where the law remains doubtful, and even then the custom must be proved by facts, not by opinion only; and it must also be subject to the control of law."—P. 1228. Ld. Mansfield, however, with Denison and Foster, JJ.'s, rejected the testimony of witnesses to prove the usage, solely on the ground that the question had already been solemnly settled by two adjudications in the courts of law. See pp. 1224—1226. See also Jones v. Peppercorne, 28 L. J., Ch. 158.

J., Ch. 737, Wood, V.-C., disputed the law as laid down by Mr. Robinson, and acting on the authority of Payne v. Barker, as reported in Bridg. 18, 23, 26, held that the court would judicially notice all the customs incident to borough English tenures.

<sup>3</sup> This rule has recently been embodied by Professor Selwyn, in what an Etonian would call "Longs and Shorts:"—

"Sed precor hoc posthac reminiscere, carpe sinistram : Dextram occurrenti linquere norma jubet."

What is perhaps more to the lawyer's purpose, the rule has also been repeatedly recognised by the judges at Nisi Prius, in actions for negligent driving and riding. See Leame v. Bray, 3 East, 593, as to carriages, and Turley v. Thomas, 8 C. & P. 104, per Coleridge, J., as to saddle horses. See also 14 & 15 V., c. 92, § 13, Ir. their helms, so as to pass on the port, or left, side of each other; next, that steamboats should keep out of the way of sailing ships; and next that every vessel overtaking another should keep out of its way.<sup>1</sup> So, every judge will notice the particular customs which have been tried, determined, and recorded in his own court.<sup>2</sup> So also, the customs of London, which have been certified by the recorder,<sup>3</sup> such, for example, as the custom of foreign attachment<sup>4</sup>—the custom that every shop is a market overt for goods of the same kind as are usually sold there<sup>1</sup>—the custom that married women may be sole traders<sup>2</sup>—and the custom which defines the nature of a liveryman's office,<sup>3</sup>—will be judicially noticed by the respective courts in which the certificates are recorded;<sup>4</sup> but no one court can take notice of a custom, which has merely been certified to another.<sup>5</sup> Neither can judicial notice be taken of the usages prevalent among mining partnerships conducted on the cost-book principle, for, without evidence, the judges cannot determine the meaning of the term “cost-book principle.”<sup>6</sup> Moreover the courts will not take cognisance of the laws, usages, or customs of a foreign state; and so strictly is this rule enforced, that all foreign laws, the laws of the colonies,<sup>7</sup> and even the laws of Jersey,<sup>8</sup> Guernsey, or Scotland, must be proved as facts,<sup>9</sup> unless steps have been taken, either under the Act of 22 &

§ 8. A somewhat nice question respecting the meaning of the word "journals," as used in the third section of this Act, has been raised at Nisi Prius.<sup>1</sup> An action for work and labour was brought by an engineer against the director of a railway company, and the defence was that the plans and sections deposited by the plaintiff had not been drawn in accordance with the Standing Orders of the House of Commons, and that, consequently, the work was valueless. In order to establish this case, it became necessary to prove the Standing Orders, and with that view, the defendant's counsel tendered in evidence a book, which purported to contain the Standing Orders of the House of Commons from 1685 to 1846 inclusive, and to be printed and published by Luke James Hansard, by permission of the Right Hon. Charles Shaw Lefevre, Speaker.<sup>2</sup> The court was then called upon to take judicial notice that these orders were the resolutions of the House, and as such were entered on their journals; and it was argued, that the book produced being a copy of extracts from these journals, must be regarded in the same light as a copy of the entire journals; that the Act, if reasonably construed, must apply to a copy of a part of the journals, as well as to a copy of the whole, and that although it did not directly appear that Mr. Hansard was the printer to the

<sup>2</sup> It is to be regretted that Mr. Hansard, in publishing the Standing Orders and other documents of the House of Commons, does not state in the title-page his official character. The Standing Orders of the Lords purport to be "printed by Geo. E. Eyre and Wm. Spottiswoode, Printers to the Queen's Most Excellent Majesty."

House of Commons, yet this fact might fairly be inferred from the statement that the book was printed by the permission of the Speaker. Mr. Baron Platt intimated an opinion that the evidence was not admissible, but it became unnecessary expressly to decide the point, as the counsel for the plaintiff waived his objection, and the book was put in by consent. In another case of Chubb v. Solomons,<sup>1</sup> Chief Baron Pollock went so far as to reject a printed copy of the journals of the House of Commons; but the ground of his decision does not appear in the report, and it seems that, strangely enough, no reference was made to the Documentary Evidence Act, of 1845, either by the counsel engaged in the cause or by the learned judge. The decision, therefore, cannot be regarded as one possessing any authority.

§ 8 A. An Act, which was passed in the year 1865 to remove doubts as to the validity of colonial laws,<sup>2</sup> has simplified the mode of proving such laws, by enacting in § 6, that “the certificate of the clerk or other proper officer of a legislative body in any colony, to the effect that the document to which it is attached is a true copy of any colonial law assented to by the Governor of such colony, or of any bill reserved for the signification of Her Majesty’s pleasure by the said Governor, shall be primâ facie evidence that the document so certified is a true copy of such law or bill, and, as the case may be, that such law has been duly and properly passed and assented to, or that such bill has been duly and properly passed and presented to the Governor; and any proclamation purporting to be published by authority of the Governor in any newspaper in the colony to which such law or bill shall relate, and signifying Her Majesty’s disallowance of any such colonial law, or Her Majesty’s assent to any such reserved bill as aforesaid, shall be primâ facie evidence of such disallowance or assent.”

§ 9. Other facilities in the proof of foreign and colonial documents had already been afforded in 1851 by Lord Brougham’s Act to amend the Law of Evidence.<sup>3</sup> The seventh section of this statute enacts, that "all proclamations, treaties, and other acts of state of any foreign state, or of any British colony, and all judgments, decrees, orders, and other judicial proceedings of any court of justice, in any foreign state or in any British colony, and all affidavits, pleadings, and other legal documents filed or deposited in any such court, may be proved in any court of justice, or before any person having by law or by consent of parties authority to hear, receive, and examine evidence, either by examined copies, or by copies authenticated as hereinafter mentioned; that is to say, if the document sought to be proved be a proclamation,<sup>1</sup> treaty, or other act of state, the authenticated copy, to be admissible in evidence, must purport to be sealed with the seal of the foreign state or British colony to which the original document belongs; and if the document sought to be proved be a judgment, decree, order, or other judicial proceeding of any foreign or colonial court, or any affidavit, pleading, or other legal document filed or deposited in any such court, the authenticated copy, to be admissible in evidence, must purport either to be sealed with the seal of the foreign and colonial court to which the original document belongs, or in the event of such court having no seal, to be signed by the judge, or if there be more than one judge, by any one of the judges of the said court, and such judge shall attach to his signature a statement in writing on the said copy that the court whereof he is a judge has no seal; but if any of the aforesaid authenticated copies shall purport to be sealed or signed as hereinbefore respectively directed, the same shall respectively be admitted in evidence in every case in which the original document could have been received in evidence, without any proof of the seal where a seal is necessary, or of the signature, or of the truth of the statement attached thereto, where such signature and statement are necessary, or of the judicial character of the person appearing to have made such signature and statement."

§ 10. The Act, too, of 1852, for amending the practice in the Court of Chancery,<sup>3</sup> contains an important clause on this subject; for, after enacting in section twenty-two, that "all pleas, answers, disclaimers, examinations, affidavits, declarations, affirmations, and attestations of honour in causes or matters depending in the High Court of Chancery, and also acknowledgments required for the purpose of enrolling any deed in the said court, shall and may be sworn and taken in Scotland or Ireland, or the Channel Islands,<sup>4</sup> or in any colony, plantation, or place under the dominion of Her Majesty in foreign parts,<sup>5</sup> before any judge, court, notary public, or person lawfully authorised to administer oaths<sup>6</sup> in such same credit to the signatures of the commissioners and registrars of the Old Courts,<sup>1</sup> and of the judges and registrars of the New Courts,<sup>2</sup> of Bankruptcy in England, and of the judges, registrars, and chief clerks of the Court of Bankruptcy and Insolvency in Ireland.<sup>3</sup> So, in all proceedings under the winding-up clauses of the Companies Act, 1862, judicial notice must be taken of the signatures of the officers of the Courts of Chancery or Bankruptcy in England or Ireland, or of the Court of Session in Scotland, or of the registrar of the Court of the Vice-Warden of the Stannaries, whenever such signatures are subscribed to any document made, issued, or signed under such clauses, or any official copy thereof.<sup>4</sup> Many other signatures attached to documents, which are rendered admissible by statutes, need not be proved;<sup>5</sup> and it seems also that, in practice, no proof is required of the handwriting of the keeper, or of the deputy-keeper, of Whitecross Street Prison,<sup>6</sup> which for all purposes of law is now regarded as the Queen's Prison.<sup>7</sup> On the other hand, it appears highly probable that the courts would not recognise the signatures of the Lords of the Treasury to their official letters;<sup>8</sup> and it is even a matter of some doubt whether the royal sign-manual would be judicially noticed. On one occasion,<sup>9</sup> before the House of Peers, a warrant purporting to be so signed was admitted without proof, but as the party putting in this document was prepared to prove it if necessary, the acquiescence of the opposite counsel amounts to little. In another case,<sup>10</sup> the judges decided that the King's sign-manual was admissible to show His Majesty's intention of pardoning a prisoner; and, in a third case,<sup>11</sup> the sign-manual

So in R. v. Swatkins, 4 C. & P. 548, Patteson, J., after conferring with Bosanquet, J., judicially noticed that barley was corn, in an indictment for arson under the Act just mentioned. In R. v. Beaney, R. & R. 416, however, the judges refused to notice that a colt was an animal of the horse species. There the indictment charged the prisoner with stealing two colts. By the Act then in force, the benefit of clergy was taken away from persons stealing "horses, geldings, or mares"; and as colts were not mentioned eo nomine, the prisoner was merely convicted of simple larceny.

§ 19. It does not seem perfectly clear, whether or not the judges of one of the superior courts are bound to notice who are the judges in the other superior courts. In an old case<sup>5</sup> it was objected that they were not; but, though reported by Strange, as well as Andrews, it does not appear from either report whether the decision turned on that, or on another exception that was taken. Probably, at the present day the question would be answered in the affirmative, on the ground that the appointment of the judges is a fact of general notoriety, and as, moreover, their signatures when attached to judicial or official documents must be now judicially noticed.<sup>6</sup> The weight of American authorities is in favour of recognising the justices of even the inferior tribunals;<sup>7</sup> but this doctrine certainly does not prevail in England, as the Court of Queen's Bench not long ago refused to notice who was judge of the then Court of Review.<sup>8</sup> With regard to inferior courts of limited jurisdiction, the superior courts will not, unless when called upon to review their judgment upon a writ of error,<sup>9</sup> take cognizance of the customs and proceedings therein,<sup>10</sup> except so far as they are regulated by statute.<sup>11</sup>

§ 20.<sup>1</sup> In all these and the like cases, where the memory of the judge is at fault, he resorts to such documents or other means of reference as may be at hand, and he may deem worthy of confidence.<sup>2</sup> Thus, if the point at issue be a date, the judge will refer to an almanac;<sup>3</sup> if it be the meaning of a word, to a dictionary;<sup>4</sup> if it be the construction of a statute, to the printed copy;<sup>5</sup> or, in case that appears to be incorrect, to the parliament roll.<sup>6</sup> In some instances, the judge has refused to take cognizance of a fact, unless the party calling upon him to do so could produce at the trial some document by which his memory might be refreshed; as was the case in Van Omeron v. Dowick,<sup>7</sup> where Lord Ellenborough declined to take judicial notice of the King's proclamation, the counsel not being prepared with a copy of the Gazette in which it was published. So, also, in R. v. Withers, tried before Mr. Justice Buller, in which case it became a material question to consider how far the prisoner owed obedience to his sergeant, and this depended on the articles of war, which were not produced at the trial, the judges thought that they ought to have been produced.<sup>8</sup> But in many other cases, the courts have themselves made the necessary inquiries, and that, too, without strictly confining their researches to the time of the trial. Thus, to give but a few examples: in Taylor v. Barclay, where the question was, whether the federal republic of Central America had been recognised by the British Government as an independent state, the Vice-Chancellor sought for information from the Foreign Office;<sup>9</sup> in Chandler v. Grieves, the Court of Common Pleas directed an inquiry to be made in the Court of Admiralty as to the maritime law;<sup>10</sup> in Doe v. Lloyd, the same

Act of 17 & 18 V., c. 81, § 45, must now, in all matters of law, be governed by the common and statute law, and not by the rules of the civil law.

THE FUNCTIONS OF THE JUDGE AS DISTINGUISHED FROM THOSE OF THE JURY.

§ 21. WITH respect to trial by jury,<sup>1</sup> Lord Hardwicke has observed, and all reflecting men will agree in the observation, that "it is of the greatest importance to the law of England, and to the subject, that the powers of the judge and jury be kept distinct;"<sup>2</sup> yet important as this object undoubtedly is, it is one which, even at the present day, is not very perfectly effected. The general principle, that the judge must determine the law, and the jury the fact, is not, and cannot be disputed;<sup>3</sup> but in the

<sup>1</sup> The merits and demerits of trial by jury are fairly set forth in the 2nd report of the Common Law Commiss., pp. 3—6. See also the Common Law Proced. Act of 1854, 17 & 18 V., c. 125, § 1, which gives a limited power to suitors, by consent in writing, to dispense with the jury, and to leave the decision of issues of fact to the judge, provided the Court think fit to allow such trial. The Irish Common Law Proced. Amend. Act, 19 & 20 V., c. 102, § 4, and the Scotch Ct. of Session Act, of 1850, 13 & 14 V., c. 36, §§ 46—48, respectively contain similar provisions.

<sup>3</sup> In R. v. The Dean of St. Asaph, Ld. Mansfield declared, "that the fundamental definition of trial by jury depended upon the universal maxim, ad questionem juris non respondent juratores; ad questionem facti non respondent judices;" and his lordship added—"Where a question can be proved by the form of pleading, the distinction is preserved upon the face of the record, and the jury cannot encroach upon the jurisdiction of the court; when, by the form of pleading, the two questions are blended together, and cannot be separated upon the face of the record, the distinction is preserved by the honesty of the jury. The constitution trusts that, under the direction of a judge, they will not usurp a jurisdiction which is not in their province. They do not know, and are not presumed to know, the law: they are not sworn to decide the law; they are not required to decide the law . . . . It is the duty of the judge, in all cases of general justice, to tell the jury how to do right, though they have it in their power to do wrong, which is a matter entirely between God and their own consciences." 21 How. St. Tr. 1039, 1040. So, in an elaborate essay on this subject, published by Mr. Hargrave, as a note to 1 Co. Lit. 155 b., the learned author states the result to be, "that the immediate and direct right of

deciding upon questions of law is intrusted to the judges; that in a jury it is only incidental; that in the exercise of this incidental right, the latter are not only placed under the superintendence of the former, but are in some degree controllable by them; and, therefore, that in all points of law arising on a trial, juries ought to show the most respectful deference to the advice and recommendation of judges." In America, the same principles have been expounded, in forcible language, by Mr. Justice Story. "Before I proceed," said he, "to the merits of this case, I wish to say a few words upon a point, suggested by the argument of the learned counsel for the prisoner, upon which I have had a decided opinion during my whole professional life. His argument is, that in criminal cases, and especially in capital cases, the jury are the judges of the law, as well as of the fact. My opinion is, that the jury are no more judges of the law in a capital or other criminal case, upon the plea of not guilty, than they are in every civil case, tried upon the general issue. In each of these cases, their verdict, when general, is necessarily compounded of law and of fact, and includes both. In each, they must necessarily determine the law, as well as the fact. In each, they have the physical power to disregard the law, as laid down to them by the Court. But I deny that, in any case, civil or criminal, they have the moral right to decide the law according to their own notions or pleasure. On the contrary, I hold it the most sacred constitutional right of every party accused of a crime, that the jury should respond as to the facts, and the Court as to the law. It is the duty of the Court to instruct the jury as to the law; and it is the duty of the jury to follow the law, as it is laid down by the Court. This is the right of every citizen, and it is his only protection. If the jury were at liberty to settle the law for themselves, the effect would be, not only that the law itself would be most uncertain, from the different views which different juries might take of it, but in case of error, there would be no remedy or redress by the injured party; for the Court would not have any right to review the law, as it had been settled by the jury. Indeed, it would be almost impracticable to ascertain what the law, as settled by the jury, actually was. On the contrary, if the Court should err in laying down the law to the jury, there is an adequate remedy for the injured party by a motion for a new trial, or a writ of error, as the nature of the jurisdiction of the particular court may require. Every person accused as a criminal has a right to be tried according to the law of the land, the fixed law of the land; and not by the law as a jury may understand it, or choose, from wantonness, or ignorance, or accidental mistake, to interpret it. If I thought that a jury were the proper judges of the law in criminal cases, I should hold it my duty to abstain from the responsibility of stating the law to them upon any such trial. But believing, as I do, that every citizen has a right to be tried by the law, and according to the law,—that it is his privilege and truest shield against oppression and wrong,—I feel it my duty to state my views fully and openly on the present occasion." U.S. v. Battiste, 2 Sumn. 243. See further, on this interesting subject, 2 Wynne's Eunomus; with clearness the obscure and shifting boundaries of law and fact. In the present chapter it is proposed briefly to discuss this subject, and to lay down such general rules as may practically be of use in distinguishing the relative duties of judges and jurors.

§ 22. The duty of a judge presiding at a trial by jury is three-fold:—First, he must decide all questions respecting the admissibility of evidence; secondly, he must instruct the jury in the rules of law, by which the evidence, when admitted, is to be weighed; and lastly, he must explain to them and enforce those general principles of law, that are applicable to the point at issue.<sup>1</sup> In discharging the first duty, it frequently happens that the admissibility of a witness or an instrument is found to depend on a disputed fact, in which case all the evidence adduced both to prove and disprove that fact must be received by the judge, and adjudicated on by him alone.<sup>2</sup> Thus, for example—if the question be whether a confession should be excluded on account of some previous threat or promise, the judge must decide, first, whether the threat or promise was really made; and, secondly, whether, if made, it was sufficient in law to warrant the exclusion of the evidence.<sup>3</sup> So, if a dying declaration be tendered in evidence, and its admissibility rest upon the fact that the deceased believed, when he made it, that he was on the point of death, the question whether this fact be satisfactorily proved must be determined by the judge.<sup>4</sup> So, where the receipt in evidence of a deposition depends on the inability of the deponent to attend the trial, the sickness of the witness or other special

<sup>1</sup> Among the questions propounded by the Irish Parliament to the judges of that country in 1641, was one, "whether the judge or jurors ought to be judge of the matters of fact," to which the judges replied, that, "although the jurors be the sole judges of matter of fact, yet the judges of the court are judges of the validity of the evidence, and of the matters of law arising out of the same, wherein the jury ought to be guided by them." 2 Nalson's Coll. of State Pap. 575, 582, Lond. 1683.

<sup>4</sup> So resolved by all the judges, in two cases cited by Parke, B., in Bartlett v. Smith, 11 M. & W. 486; and in one case cited by Ld. Ellenborough, in R. v. Hucks, 1 Stark. R. 523. cause disabling him from attendance must be proved to the satisfaction of the judge.<sup>1</sup> So, the judge alone must decide, whether the declarant in a question of pedigree has been proved to be a deceased member of the family; and it makes no difference in this rule, that the relationship of the declarant happens to be the very question at issue in the cause.<sup>2</sup> So, if proof be offered of the signature of an attesting witness, and the admissibility of this evidence turns on the fact, whether or not the witness has absented himself from the trial by collusion with the opposite party, the judge must decide on the existence of this fact.<sup>3</sup> In like manner, if the question be whether a document has been duly executed, or stamped;<sup>4</sup> or whether it comes from the right custody;<sup>5</sup> or whether sufficient search has been made for it to admit secondary evidence of its contents;<sup>6</sup> or whether notice to produce it has been duly served;<sup>7</sup> or whether, in the event of its being produced under notice, it be the original paper required;<sup>8</sup> or whether it is protected as being a confidential communication;<sup>9</sup> or if a witness be objected to on the ground of unripeness or imbecility of mind;—in all these and the like cases the preliminary question of admissibility must, in the first instance, be exclusively decided by the judge, however complicated the circumstances may be, and though it may be necessary to weigh the conflicting testimony of numerous witnesses, in order to arrive at a just conclusion. So, where evidence is offered of acts done in places other than the place in dispute, it is for the judge to decide, in the first instance, whether there is such a unity of character in these different localities as to render evidence affecting the one admissible with reference to the other, and he will be further called upon to pronounce whether the acts relied on amount to evidence of ownership.<sup>1</sup> Where witnesses were called to prove a general usage in trade, the judge, thinking that their testimony amounted to no more than evidence of opinion, withdrew it from the consideration of the jury, and the Court supported his ruling.<sup>2</sup> It was then laid down, as a distinct principle, that where the evidence was by law admissible for the determination of the point raised, the judge was bound to lay it before the jury; but whether the evidence was admissible or not, was a matter for the decision of the judge alone. In all these cases, however, after the evidence has been finally admitted, its credibility and weight are entirely questions for the jury, who are at liberty to consider all the circumstances of the case, including those already proved before the judge, and to give the evidence only such credit as, upon the whole, they may think it deserves.<sup>3</sup> The judge merely decides whether there is, prima facie, any reason for presenting it at all to the jury; and his decision on this point, if erroneous, may be reviewed by the Court above.<sup>4</sup>

§ 23. Secondly, it is the duty of the judge to point out to the jury any rule of law, which either renders evidence unnecessary, or gives peculiar weight to any particular species of evidence, or defines the manner in which a certain fact must be proved. Thus, he should distinctly explain the nature of any presumptions, which may apply to the point at issue, distinguishing such as are conclusive from those which are liable to be rebutted by counter evidence; and again, dividing this latter class into those presumptions upon which the jury are bound to act, in the absence of conflicting testimony, and those upon which it is expedient, or allowable, to rely. So, if by the common or statute law any document, when proved, becomes conclusive evidence of the facts stated therein, it is the province of the judge to point out to the jury that the existence of such facts cannot be disputed or denied, and that the only question for their deliberation is, whether or not the document be duly proved. So, if the uncorroborated testimony of a single witness be insufficient by law to establish guilt, as, for instance, in charges of treason or perjury, the judge must acquaint the jury with the nature and extent of this rule; and even where a conviction founded upon such testimony would be strictly legal, as in the case of an accomplice becoming witness for the Crown, the judge would not properly discharge his duty, if he did not warn the jury against the danger of placing implicit reliance upon statements coming from such a suspicious quarter. Many judges, indeed, and those of the greatest ability, have not confined their observations within these limits, but have boldly given their opinions respecting the matters of fact; and although this mode of proceeding, when adopted, as it sometimes has been, in a supercilious spirit, may arouse the jealous feelings of a jury, and may excite them, in their anxiety to prove their independence, to pronounce an unjust verdict;<sup>1</sup> yet it may well be doubted whether, in the great majority of instances, it would not promote the real interests of justice, if the judge were temperately to state to the jury what opinions he had formed respecting the merits of the case, and the mode by which he had arrived at his conclusions. The jury would still have the undisputed power of deciding the question as they thought fit; but they would have the advantage of being advised by a man no more liable than themselves to prejudice or partiality, whose long experience in courts of justice must of necessity have rendered him far more competent than they can be to unravel the tangled threads of conflicting testimony. The too common mode of summing up—"Gentlemen, if you think so and so, you will find for the plaintiff, if you think otherwise, you will find for the defendant; gentlemen, the question is for you,"—though sanctioned by the practice of many able, but somewhat lazy judges, and though possibly in accordance with the strict theory of a trial by jury, is but little calculated to promote the attainment of truth; and in complicated cases before a petty jury, is almost tantamount, if not to a direct denial of justice, at least to a decision of the issue by lot.

§ 24. Lastly, the judge must explain to the jury what principles of law are applicable to the point in issue, and in order to enable him to do so correctly, he must distinguish questions of law from questions of fact. This, in ordinary cases, is no difficult task. Thus, for instance, on a charge of larceny, the judge lays down, as a general proposition of law, that all persons who take and remove the personal chattels of another without his consent, and with a felonious intent, are guilty of that crime; and then, according to the circumstances of the case, he explains, with more or less particularity, what constitutes a taking, removing, &c. These, obviously, are questions of law, and together form the major premiss of the syllogism. The jury next decide whether the evidence proves that the goods have been taken and removed in such a manner, and with such an intent, as the judge has previously shown will amount to larceny. These are questions of fact, and together form the minor premiss. Lastly comes the conclusion of guilt or innocence, which may either be drawn by the jury applying to the facts which they find, the rules of law as interpreted by the judge; or, in the event of their considering this task too difficult for them, they are at liberty to find the facts specially, but not the mere evidence on which the facts are founded,<sup>1</sup> leaving the Court to apply the law to such facts, and consequently to pronounce the final decision. But, simple as this process appears to be, the line between law and fact has been very indistinctly drawn in a certain class of cases, and in these cases, therefore, the respective duties of the judge and jury are not yet clearly defined. For instance, if the question be whether a certain party had probable cause for doing an act, or whether he has done an act within a reasonable time, or with due diligence, it is difficult to say whether the definition of what constitutes probable cause, reasonable time, or due diligence, be for the judge or the jury, and specious arguments will not be wanting in favour of the claims of either party. On the one hand, it may be said, that these terms are as capable of judicial interpretation, as the words conversion, or asportation, which must clearly be explained by the judge; while, on the other hand, it may be urged, that they seem rather addressed to the practical experience of practical men, than to the legal knowledge of the mere lawyer; that, being terms of degree, their meaning is subject to indefinite fluctuation, according to the varying circumstances of each particular case, and that consequently they defy all attempts to compress them within exact à priori definitions. In truth, they are neither matters of fact, nor matters of law, exclusively, but are rather matters of quality or opinion, which, for want of a more appropriate name, have been generally termed "mixed cases." They form in logical phrase, the middle term, and are alike common to both the premisses, which are respectively intrusted to the judge and jury, and upon which the ultimate decision must proceed.<sup>1</sup>

§ 25. Having said thus much respecting the general nature of this class of cases, it remains to be seen what decisions have been reported on the subject; and although some of these will be found to rest rather on arbitrary authority than on any definite principle of law, it is hoped that their collection and partial classification may be of some service to the profession, the more especially as precedents have ever been considered in this country as deservedly entitled to respect and deference.

§ 26. First: It is now clearly established—albeit the wisdom of the rule has recently been stoutly disputed<sup>2</sup>—that the question of probable cause must be decided exclusively by the judge, and that the jury can only be permitted to find whether the facts alleged in support of the presence or absence of probability, and the inferences to be drawn therefrom, really exist.<sup>1</sup> For instance, in an action for a malicious prosecution, the jury, provided the evidence on the subject be conflicting, may be asked whether or not the defendant, at the time when he prosecuted, knew of the existence of those circumstances which tend to show probable cause, or believed that they amounted to the offence which he charged; and if they negative either of these facts, the judge will decide as a point of law, that the defendant had no probable cause for instituting the prosecution.<sup>2</sup> This rule,—which is based on the assumption that judges are far more competent than juries to determine the question how far it may have been proper for a person to have instituted a prosecution,<sup>3</sup>—is equally binding, however numerous and complicated the facts and inferences may be; <sup>4</sup> for, although in some cases it would doubtless be attended with great difficulty to bring before the jury all the combinations of which numerous facts are susceptible, and to place in a distinct point of view the application of the rule of law, according as all, or some only of the facts and inferences from facts, are made out to their satisfaction, yet the task is not impracticable; and it would obviously savour of gross inconsistency to hold that a rule, which is undisputed in a simple case, should not equally apply where the facts were complicated.<sup>1</sup> For where could the line be drawn, and who should determine what degree of complexity would transfer the burthen of decision from the judge to the jury? The difficulty, too, is more apparent than real, for it rarely happens but that some leading facts exist in each case, which present a broad distinction to the view, without having recourse to the less important circumstances:<sup>2</sup> and as the judge has a right to act upon all the uncontradicted facts, it is only where some doubt is thrown upon the credibility of the witnesses, or where some contradiction occurs, or some inference is attempted to be drawn from some former fact not distinctly sworn to, that he is called upon to submit any question to the jury.<sup>3</sup>

§ 27. Although the rule is as above stated, where in an action on the case for malicious prosecution the question of probable cause arises, it has been held, both in England and Ireland, that in an action of trespass, the reasonableness of the belief or suspicion, upon which a party acts in causing an arrest or in detaining goods, is a question which the jury may be called upon to decide.<sup>4</sup> Thus, if a magistrate, on being sued for false imprisonment, were to rely, under not guilty by statute, upon want of notice of action or the like, the question whether he believed, with some colour of reason, and bonâ fide, that he was acting in pursuance of his lawful authority, so as to entitle him to the protection of the statute, would, in strictness, be for the jury to determine under all the circumstances, if the plaintiff should desire their opinion to be taken on the evidence; though if, as is commonly the case, these questions were first submitted to the judge on an application for a nonsuit, and the plaintiff did not then desire them to be left to the jury, he would be bound by the decision of the judge, if the Court should think it warranted by the evidence.<sup>1</sup>

§ 28. The question of reasonable time is open to more doubt than that of probable cause. With respect to some subjects, indeed, which from their frequent recurrence admit of the adoption of precise rules as to what constitutes reasonable time, the Courts, for the sake of commercial convenience, have laid down such rules; and in these cases the duty of the jury is clearly confined to the simple task of ascertaining whether the facts proved fall within the rules or not. Thus, notice of dishonour of a bill of exchange must be given within a reasonable time, and this has been held by the judges<sup>2</sup> to mean,—according as the parties live in the same or in different places,—either that the letter containing notice should be so posted that in the due course of delivery it would arrive on the day following that on which the writer has received intelligence of dishonour;<sup>3</sup> or that such letter should be posted before the departure of the mail on the day following the receipt of intelligence;<sup>4</sup> or if there be no post on that day,<sup>5</sup> or if it start at an unseasonable hour in the morning,<sup>6</sup> then the writer shall have an additional day. If, too, the bill be presented through a banker, one day more is allowed for giving notice of dishonour than if it were presented by the party himself.<sup>7</sup> At one time a doubt seems to have been entertained whether, in the event of there being several indorsers to a bill, the holder would have a separate day allowed him for giving

notice to each; but it is now expressly decided that he has in general but one day to give notice to all the parties against whom he intends to enforce his remedy, though each of the indorsers in turn has his day,<sup>1</sup> and though the holder may avail himself of a notice duly given by any other party to the bill.<sup>2</sup> Again, the holder of a cheque, or of a bill or note payable on demand, must present the instrument for payment on or before the day following that on which it was received; for the judges have put this construction upon the term "reasonable time" within which the instrument must be presented.<sup>3</sup> This last rule applies, not only as between the parties to a cheque,<sup>4</sup> but as between banker and customer, unless circumstances exist from which a contract or duty on the part of the banker to present at an earlier, or to defer presentation to a later period, can be inferred.<sup>5</sup> But the rule does not apply to cases where the action is brought by the holder of a banker's cheque against the drawer, unless during the delay the fund has been lost, as by the failure of the banker.<sup>6</sup> When the rule is applicable, it matters not, so far as the liability of the drawer is concerned, whether the instrument be presented for payment by the party himself or by his banker; and, therefore, when an uncrossed cheque, given to a gentleman on the 10th of March, was paid into his bankers' on the 11th, and was presented by them on the 12th to the bankers on whom it was drawn, and who had stopped payment early in the morning, the Court held that the payee could not recover the amount of the cheque from the drawer, as the presentment for payment had not been made within a reasonable time, and the bankers at the time of their failure had sufficient funds of the drawer's to pay the cheque.<sup>1</sup> Had the payee in this case stipulated that his bankers' names should be crossed upon the cheque, or had the drawer discounted his cheque in the country, the result would have been otherwise, for the drawer would then have been considered as agreeing to the arrangement that the necessary course of presentment through a banker should be observed, and the steps actually taken were clearly in conformity with such course.<sup>2</sup>

§ 29. The judges have also, with respect to the presentment of bills for payment, taken upon themselves to decide, as a question of law, what constitutes reasonable hours, and have held that if an instrument be payable at a banker's, it must be presented within banking hours;<sup>3</sup> if elsewhere, at any time when the drawer may be expected to be found at his place of residence or business, though it be as late as eight or nine o'clock in the evening.<sup>4</sup> If, indeed, the banker appoints a person to attend at the office after banking hours for the purpose of returning an answer to a presentment, and such person does return an answer before midnight, no objection can be taken to the unreasonableness of the hour when the presentment was made;<sup>5</sup> and the same rule would seem to prevail if the bill be personally presented to the acceptor before twelve o'clock at night on the day that it falls due.<sup>6</sup> So, a demand or tender of rent on the land must, in order to create or avoid a forfeiture, be made before sunset, this being a rule of convenience adopted by the law to prevent the necessity of one party waiting for the other till midnight. But if the tenant actually meet the lessor, either on or off the land, at any time of the last day of payment, and tender the rent, it will be sufficient, provided there was time before midnight to receive and count the money tendered.<sup>1</sup> The law as to the delivery of goods within reasonable hours was much discussed in the case of Startup v. Macdonald.<sup>2</sup> There the defendant had agreed to purchase certain oil of the plaintiffs, to be delivered within the last fourteen days of March, and the action was brought for not accepting it according to the contract. The defence was that the oil was tendered on the 31st of March at nine at night, which was an unreasonable hour. The jury found by a special verdict that the oil was tendered at half-past eight at night on a Saturday; that there was full time for the plaintiffs to have delivered, and for the defendant to have examined, weighed, and received the whole before Sunday morning; but that the time of tendering was unreasonably late. Upon this verdict the Court of Common Pleas gave judgment for the defendant; but the judges of the Exchequer Chamber (Lord Denman dissentiente) reversed the decision. Mr. Justice Patteson observed, "It may be conceded that the defendant was not bound to be on his premises ready to receive the oil after the usual hours of business; and if he had gone away, and the plaintiffs had afterwards come, and been unable to make a personal tender, they must have suffered for their delay; but as the defendant did wait, and as the tender was made in time to complete the delivery within the time specified, the unreasonableness and impropriety of the time, whatever those words mean, form no answer to the action for not accepting the oil."<sup>3</sup> Mr. Baron Alderson used language to the same effect,<sup>4</sup> and thus laid down the general rule: "Wherever, in cases not governed by peculiar customs of trade, the parties oblige themselves to the performance of duties within a certain number of days, they have until the last minute of the last day to perform their obligation. The only qualification that I am aware of to this rule is, that in acts requiring time in order that they may be completely performed, the party must, at all events, tender to do the act at such period before the end of the last day, as, if the tender be accepted, will leave him sufficient time to complete his performance before the end of that day. In the case of a mercantile contract, however, the opposite party is not bound to wait for such tender of performance beyond the usual hours of mercantile business, or at any other than the usual place at which the contract ought to be performed. The party, therefore, who does not make his tender at that usual place, or during those usual hours, runs a great risk of not being able to make it at all. In this case the plaintiffs have had the good fortune to meet with the defendant, and to make a tender to him in sufficient time. And I think, under these circumstances, that the defendant was bound to accept the goods, and is liable in damages for not accepting them.”<sup>1</sup>

“ § 30. Again, a reasonable notice to quit a yearly tenancy has for centuries received a legal construction, as meaning a six months’ notice, to terminate at the expiration of the current year:<sup>2</sup> and when the tenant holds different portions of the premises from different days, it has been further decided, that the notice refers to the day of entry on the substantial subject of the holding.<sup>3</sup> So, in the case of domestic servants,—which term has been held to include huntsmen,<sup>1</sup> and head-gardeners,<sup>2</sup>—a reasonable notice to quit is a calendar month's warning;<sup>3</sup> but it must be borne in mind that this rule is inapplicable to farm servants,<sup>4</sup> clerks, travellers, governesses,<sup>5</sup> and the like. So, the reasonable period during which a member of Parliament is entitled to freedom from arrest on a ca. sa. has, for at least two hundred years, been fixed at forty days before and after each session, the rule being the same in the case of a dissolution as in that of a prorogation.<sup>6</sup> In all these cases, the question being decided by a precise rule of law, is entirely withdrawn from the consideration of the jury. Again, the reasonable time for which a party charged with an indictable offence may, in England or Ireland, be committed for re-examination is now limited by statute to eight clear days, where the accused is remanded by warrant, or, in England, to three clear days, where he is remanded by verbal order;<sup>7</sup> and although these rules have not been extended by express enactment to cases in which justices deal summarily with defendants by conviction or order, they would probably be considered by the judges as furnishing a guide, which ought on such occasions to be respected. If, therefore, in any of these cases, the question should arise whether a party had been remanded for a reasonable time, the jury would be called upon, as in the case of probable cause, to ascertain the existence of the facts, and to leave the court to determine, upon those facts, whether the time was reasonable or not.<sup>1</sup> On two occasions, indeed, in England,<sup>2</sup> and on one in Ireland,<sup>3</sup> the entire question appears to have been submitted to the jury, but the latter of the two English cases rested upon the authority of the former,<sup>4</sup> and in the former no objection was taken at Nisi Prius to the summing up of the judge, but on a subsequent motion in Banc, its correctness was questioned, and at the second trial the course stated above was distinctly adopted.<sup>5</sup> So, in an action against a sheriff for an escape, the question whether the officer was guilty of unreasonable delay in taking the party arrested to prison, is one for the determination of the judge,<sup>6</sup> as also is the question whether an arrest has been countermanded within a reasonable time,<sup>7</sup> or whether an executor has had reasonable time to remove the goods from the testator's mansion.<sup>8</sup> On the other hand, it appears to have been held, that the questions, whether a crop has been left on the ground for a reasonable time,<sup>9</sup> so as to enable the tithe-owner to compare the tithe set out with the remainder of the produce; whether a copy of a rate has been delivered by an overseer to an inhabitant within such reasonable time as to satisfy the Act,<sup>10</sup> which requires it to be given "forthwith" upon demand and the ordinary course of business or trade, and consequently relate to matters with which the jury are peculiarly acquainted; but whether this be a satisfactory solution of the difficulty is a matter on which no opinion is here expressed.

§ 31. Questions of reasonable skill or care, due diligence, and gross negligence must, in the great majority of instances, be determined by the jury, since the judges can rarely have materials which will enable them to decide such questions by rules of law. Thus, if an action be brought against a surgeon for negligence in the treatment of his patient,<sup>1</sup> or against a gratuitous bailee for gross carelessness in losing the property intrusted to his care,<sup>2</sup> what law can possibly define whether such and such conduct amounts to sufficient negligence on the part of the defendant to entitle the plaintiff to a verdict? In these and the like cases, therefore, the question has usually been left entirely to the jury, and even when they have found a verdict in opposition to the opinion of the presiding judge, the court has generally refused to grant a new trial.<sup>3</sup> In some cases, where the question relates to matters of legal practice, as, for instance, if a sheriff be charged with neglect of duty in not executing a writ, or if an attorney be sued for negligence in conducting an action, the judges would seem to be more competent than a jury to decide whether the facts proved amount to a want of reasonable care; but even in such cases it seems that the province of the judge is merely to inform the jury for what species or degree of negligence the defendant is answerable,<sup>4</sup> and what duty in the particular case

<sup>4</sup> In Godefroy v. Dalton, 6 Bing. 460, the judges decided that an attorney had not been guilty of such negligence as would render him liable to an action. "The cases," said Tindal, C. J., in pronouncing the judgment of the court, "appear to establish in general, that the attorney is liable for the consequences of ignorance or non-observance of the rules of practice of this court; for the want of care in the preparation of the cause for trial; or of attendance thereon with his witnesses; and for the mismanagement of so much of the conduct of a cause as is usually and ordinarily allotted to his devolved upon him, either by the statute or common law, or the practice of the court; and then, having done this, he will leave the jury to consider all the circumstances in evidence, and to decide, first, whether the defendant has performed his duty, and next, whether, in case of non-performance, the neglect was of that sort or degree which was venial or culpable in the sense of not sustaining or sustaining an action.<sup>1</sup> It may here be added, that the judges are the proper parties to decide whether fines, customs, or services are reasonable,<sup>2</sup> as also whether deeds contain reasonable covenants or powers.<sup>3</sup>

of the judge. Moreover, for particular purposes, the decision of these questions is sometimes intrusted to the judge by the express language of the Legislature. Thus, under the Act of 30 & 31 V., c. 142, § 5, a suitor in one of the superior courts, who does not recover more than 20*l.* in any action on contract, or 10*l.* in any action on tort, is not entitled to costs, unless the judge shall certify that there was "sufficient reason" for suing in such court, or unless the court or a judge at chambers shall by rule or order allow such costs. So, the Act of 3 & 4 V., c. 24, enacts, in § 2, that if the plaintiff in an action of trespass or on the case, shall recover less damages than forty shillings, he shall have no costs, unless the judge shall certify that the action was brought to try a right, or that the trespass or grievance was wilful and malicious.<sup>1</sup> So, under the stat. 8 & 9 W. 3, c. 11, § 1, if several persons be sued in trespass, and one or more be acquitted by verdict, the judge, by certifying upon the record immediately after the trial, in open court, that there was reasonable cause for making the parties acquitted defendants, may deprive them of costs.<sup>2</sup> Again, in actions against magistrates for acts done in the execution of their office, the judge must decide whether notice of action is necessary, and the question of bona fides must consequently be determined by him, and not by the jury.<sup>3</sup> So, when an amendment is sought to be made at Nisi Prius, it is the duty of the judge to determine, as a matter of fact, from the pleadings and the evidence, what is the real question in controversy between the parties.<sup>4</sup> of the judge and jury seem to be as follows: first, the jury must determine as a question of fact, whether the communication was made bonâ fide; and then, if the fact be found in the affirmative,—as it must be if the evidence be not sufficient to raise a probability that the communication was colourably made,<sup>1</sup>—the judge must decide, as a question of law, whether the occasion of the publication was such as to rebut the inference of malice.<sup>2</sup> If, however, any doubt should exist as to whether or not the defendant had in some respect exceeded the limits of his privilege, and had made comments, which might be regarded as evidence of actual malice, the opinion of the jury must be taken upon the effect of such evidence.<sup>3</sup>

§ 34. It is still a moot point whether, on an indictment for perjury, the materiality of the matter in which the false swearing is proved, is a question of fact for the jury, or a question of law for the judge; but, according to the better opinion, it ought to be regarded in the latter light.<sup>4</sup> It seems, however, that questions respecting permissive occupation;<sup>5</sup> the assent of an executor to a bequest;<sup>6</sup> the unsoundness of a horse;<sup>7</sup> the delivery of a document as an escrow, unless the question turn solely on the construction of writings;<sup>8</sup> the infringement of a patent,<sup>9</sup> where such infringement does not depend merely on the construction of the

the judge will decide as a pure question of law, whether the case is to be governed lege loci contractus, or lege loci solutionis.<sup>1</sup>

§ 35. The jury must decide whether articles supplied to an infant be necessaries: but their decision is subject to the control of the judges,<sup>2</sup> who have laid down, as general rules of law, first, that this question does not, in any degree, depend upon what allowance the infant may have received from his father, and may have misapplied;<sup>3</sup> secondly, that the articles must be really useful, and therefore that merely ornamental jewellery,<sup>4</sup> or luxurious confectionery,<sup>5</sup> are not necessities; and thirdly, that, if useful, they must be such as would be necessary and suitable to the degree and station in life of the infant.<sup>6</sup> In a case, where the jury, in opposition to the opinion of the judge, found that the hiring of horses and gigs was necessary for an Oxford undergraduate, he being the younger son of a man of fortune, and keeping a horse of his own, the court set aside the verdict as perverse, and granted a new trial.<sup>7</sup> Perhaps the safest rule that can be laid down on this subject is, that the judge must determine whether the articles are capable of being necessities, regard being had to the position of the defendant; and if he should decide in the affirmative, the jury will then have to say, whether under the circumstances they were necessities or not.<sup>8</sup>

Unless this were so, there would be no certainty in the law; for a misconstruction by the court is the proper subject, by means of a bill of exceptions, of redress in a court of error; but a misconstruction by the jury cannot in any way be effectually set right.<sup>3</sup> Thus the court, after obtaining from the jury a mere explanation of technical terms,<sup>4</sup> will construe the specification of a patent, though the interpretation of such an instrument, relating as it does to matters of science and skill, would seem peculiarly adapted to the practical information of jurors;<sup>5</sup> and where a contract for the sale of barley was

Eldon observed, that the intelligibility of the description of a specification was a matter of fact. It is worthy of remark, that in America the sufficiency of the description in a patentee's specification is generally left as a question of fact to be determined by the jury, unless the statement be obviously too vague. *Wood v. attempted to be proved by letters, one of which offered good barley, and the other accepted the offer, "expecting you will give us fine barley and good weight," the court held, that though the jury might be asked as to the mercantile meaning of the words "good" and "fine," yet, after having found that there was a distinction between them, they could not further decide that the parties did not misunderstand each other, but were bound to take the interpretation of the contract, as a matter of law, from the judge.<sup>1</sup> So, the question whether the sum mentioned in an agreement to be paid for a breach, is to be treated as a penalty, or as liquidated damages, is one of law to be decided by the judge, upon a consideration of the whole instrument.<sup>2</sup> So it seems clear, notwithstanding one or two authorities to the contrary,<sup>3</sup> that the court must determine, whether a written acknowledgment of a debt,<sup>4</sup> or of title,<sup>5</sup> is sufficient to take the case out of the statutes of limitation; though, perhaps, in a doubtful case, it may be a prudent course for the judge to express his own opinion, and also to take the opinion of the jury;<sup>1</sup> and if the document is connected with other evidence affecting its construction, then the whole must be submitted to the jury together.<sup>2</sup> So, the question whether a debt incurred during infancy has been ratified in writing by the debtor after the attainment of his majority, is for the court, and not for the jury.<sup>3</sup> With respect to the construction of letters, the rule of law appears to be, that, if extrinsic circumstances be not capable of explaining them, then, like other documents, their interpretation is a pure matter of law, in however ambiguous language they may be couched;<sup>4</sup> but if they be written in so dubious a manner as to bear different constructions, and if they can be explained by other transactions, the jury, who are clearly the judges of the truth or falsehood of such collateral facts, which may vary the sense of the letters themselves, must decide upon the whole evidence.<sup>5</sup> Thus, where a question arose in Ireland whether the defendant had adopted the acceptance of a bill, it was held that the construction of a letter written by him on the subject, taken in connexion with his subsequent conduct, was entirely for the jury.<sup>6</sup> So, where a contract has to be made out partly by letters, and partly by parol evidence, the jury must deal with the whole question.<sup>7</sup> If a document be lost, and oral evidence be given of its contents, the judge must construe its meaning in the same manner as if it had been produced, but the jury may, of course, in such a case be called upon to declare whether they believe the oral testimony.<sup>8</sup>

§ 37. The power of the jury to interpret expressions is not confined to such as are employed in contracts, or have a peculiar commercial meaning; but seems to extend to all phrases, capable of being used in a technical sense, which do not require any knowledge of the law to explain them. Thus, the courts have more than once refused to entertain the question, whether an excavation is a mine, and as such not rateable to the relief of the poor; but having so far laid down a legal principle with reference to the subject, as to decide that the method of working was to be considered, and not the chemical or geological character of the produce,<sup>1</sup> they have declined to go further, and have left the sessions to apply to the question, as one of fact, the information they possess, and their knowledge of the English language.<sup>2</sup> So, it has been held, that the jury must determine what constitutes such a representation of part of a dramatic production, as to subject the person representing it to penalties under the Act of 3 & 4 W. 4, c. 15.<sup>3</sup> But if a word of doubtful import be used in an Act of Parliament, the judge ought to explain its general meaning; and, therefore, when, on the trial of an issue whether a railway was passing through "a town," within the meaning of the Railway Clauses Consolidation Act, the judge merely told the jury that the word "town" was to be understood in its ordinary and popular sense, the court held that this was a misdirection, and granted a new trial in consequence.<sup>4</sup> So, the jury will not be allowed to examine a record, for the purpose of giving their opinion as to what word has been written above an erasure; for the inspection of a record is within the peculiar province of the court.<sup>5</sup>

§ 38. On the rule of law, which intrusts the judge with the interpretation of written instruments, an exception has been engrafted in certain cases, when the writing forms the subject of an indictment or an action on the case, and the guilt or innocence of the defendant depends upon the popular meaning of the language employed. Thus, on a prosecution for libel, the legislature, after much acrimonious discussion between the judges on the one hand, and the advocates of popular rights on the other,<sup>1</sup> has expressly determined,<sup>2</sup> that the question whether the particular publication which is the subject of inquiry, is of a libellous character, and is calculated to injure the reputation of another, by exposing him to hatred, contempt, or ridicule, is one upon which the jury must exercise their judgment and pronounce their opinion, as a question of fact. <sup>2</sup> 32 G. 3, c. 60, § 1, declares and enacts that, on every trial of an indictment or information for a libel, “the jury sworn to try the issue may give a general verdict of guilty or not guilty upon the whole matter put in issue upon such indictment or information; and shall not be required or directed by the court or judge, before whom such indictment or information shall be tried, to find the defendant or defendants guilty, merely on the proof of the publication by such defendant or defendants of the paper charged to be a libel, and of the sense ascribed to the same in such indictment or information.” § 2 provides, that, “on every such trial, the court or judge, before whom such indictment or information shall be tried, shall,* according to their or his discretion, give their or his opinion and directions to the jury on the matter in issue between the King and the defendant or defendants, in like manner as in other criminal cases.” § 3 provides, that a jury may find a special verdict; and § 4 reserves to defendants a right to move in arrest of judgment.

own opinion respecting the nature of the publication, but is not bound to do so as a matter of law.<sup>1</sup> The statute here noticed is strictly applicable to criminal trials only, but, being a declaratory Act, its provisions have been adopted in civil actions for libel, and, for a series of years, it has been the course for the judge, first to give a legal definition of the offence, and then to leave the jury to determine whether the writing complained of falls within that definition or not.<sup>2</sup> It is not, however, absolutely necessary that the judge should explain what constitutes a libel, but he may leave the whole question without reserve to the jury;<sup>3</sup> though if they find a verdict against the defendant, either on an indictment or an action, the court will arrest the judgment, if the writing on the face of it is not libellous.<sup>4</sup>

§ 39. On indictments for writing threatening letters,<sup>5</sup> the respective duties of the judge and jury are not very clearly defined. In some cases the jury have been permitted, upon examination of the paper, to decide for themselves whether or not it contained a menace.<sup>6</sup> In other cases, the question appears to have been exclusively determined by the court;<sup>7</sup> while on a few occasions the opinions of the jury, and of the judges, have alternately been taken on the point.<sup>8</sup>

<sup>11</sup> Although a point of foreign law may have been proved and acted upon in one court, another court will not rely upon the report of such a case, but will require fresh proof of the law, as a matter of fact, on each particular occasion; McCormick v. Garnett, 23 L. J., Ch. 717, per Knight-Bruce, L. J.; 5 De Gex, M. & G. 278, S. C.

the functions of the judge and the jury does not yet appear to be very clearly defined. It would seem, however, that while the existence and abstract meaning of the law must, in general, be determined by the jury on the testimony of the skilled witnesses,<sup>1</sup> it will be the duty of the court to decide, first, as to the competent knowledge of the witnesses called :<sup>2</sup> next, as to the admissibility of the documents by which they seek to refresh their memory; and lastly,<sup>3</sup> as to the special applicability of the law, when proved, to the particular matter in controversy.<sup>4</sup> If, indeed, the admissibility or inadmissibility of certain evidence depends on the existence or interpretation of a foreign law, the proof should exclusively be addressed to the court, as in other cases where questions respecting the admissibility of evidence rests upon disputed facts.<sup>5</sup> Perhaps, also, as all matters of law are properly referable to the court, and as the object of the proof of foreign law is to enable the court to instruct the jury as to its bearing on the case in hand, it will always be advisable for the judge to assist the jury in ascertaining what the law really is.<sup>6</sup>

§ 41. Before leaving the subject of foreign law, it will be important to notice, that the peculiar rules of evidence adopted in one country, whether established by the practice of its courts, or enacted by the legislature for the government of those courts, cannot be permitted to regulate the proceedings of courts in another country, when transactions, which took place in the former country, become the subject of investigation in the latter.<sup>7</sup> The law of evidence is the lex fori which governs the courts. proves a certain fact or not;—these, and the like questions, must be determined, not lege loci contractus, but by the law of the country where the question arises, where the remedy is sought to be enforced, and where the court sits to enforce it.<sup>1</sup> The case of Clark v. Mullick, which was decided before the law was altered by the Evidence Amendment Act of 1851,<sup>2</sup> affords a striking example of this rule. There, the assignees of a bankrupt under an English fiat having brought an action in Calcutta against a debtor of the bankrupt, and the pleas having put in issue the bankruptcy and the assignment, it was held that the affirmative of these issues could not be proved by producing copies of the proceedings in the Bankruptcy Court, purporting to bear the seal of that court, and to be signed by the Clerk of Enrolments; for although, by the statutes relating to bankruptcy, such evidence was sufficient in English courts of justice, it was not at that time admissible in India, as the Acts did not extend to that country.<sup>3</sup> Again, although by the Scotch law, all instruments prepared and witnessed according to the provisions of the Act of 1681, are probative writs, and may be given in evidence without any proof, yet still, if it were required to prove one of these Scotch instruments in an English court, its mere production would not suffice, but it would be necessary to call one or other of the attesting witnesses.<sup>4</sup> The case of Brown v. Thornton<sup>5</sup> is another illustration of this rule. There, a charter-party had been entered into at Batavia; and, in accordance with the Dutch law which prevails in that colony, the contract had been written in the book of the notary, and a copy, signed and sealed by him and countersigned by the governor of Java, had been delivered to each of the parties. In the courts of Java, the contract is proved by producing the notary's book; but in all other Dutch courts the copies are received as due evidence of the original. Under these circumstances, the plaintiff in an English court tendered his copy of the charter-party, as evidence of the contract, but the court held that it was inadmissible, on the ground that English judges could not adopt a rule of evidence from foreign courts. Several other cases could be cited to the same effect;<sup>1</sup> and in all, the distinction is recognised between the cause of action, which must be judged of according to the law of the country where it originated, and the mode of proceeding, including of course the rules of evidence, which must be adopted as it happens to exist in the country where the action is brought.<sup>2</sup>

CHAPTER IV.

THE GROUNDS OF BELIEF.

§ 42.<sup>1</sup> WE proceed now to a brief consideration of the General Nature and Principles of Evidence. No inquiry is here proposed into the origin of human knowledge; it being assumed, on the authority of approved writers, that all that men know is referable, in a philosophical view, to perception and reflection. But, in fact, the knowledge acquired by an individual through his own perception and reflection, is but a small part of what he possesses; much of what we are content to regard and act upon as knowledge, having been acquired through the perception of others.<sup>2</sup> It is not easy to conceive, that the Supreme Being, whose wisdom is so conspicuous in all his works, constituted man to believe only upon his own personal experience; since, in that case, the world could neither be governed nor improved; and society must remain in the state in which it was left by the first generation of men. On the contrary, during the period of childhood we believe implicitly almost all that is told us; and thus are furnished with information, which we could not otherwise obtain, but which is necessary at the time for our present protection, or as the means of future improvement. This disposition to confide in the veracity of others, and to believe what they say, may be termed instinctive. At an early period, however, we begin to find that of the things told to us some are not true; and thus our implicit reliance on the testimony of others is weakened; first, in regard to particular things, in which we have been deceived; then, in regard to persons, whose falsehoods we have detected; and, as these instances multiply upon us, we gradually become more and more distrustful of statements made to us, and learn by experience the necessity of testing them by certain rules.”<sup>3</sup> “Confidence,” exclaimed Lord Chatham, on a memorable occasion, “is a plant of slow growth in an aged bosom ;” and indeed, it may be generally observed, that, as our ability to obtain knowledge by other means increases, our instinctive and indiscriminate reliance on testimony diminishes, by yielding to a more rational belief.<sup>1</sup>

<sup>1</sup> * Gamb. Guide, 87; M’Kinnon, Phil. of Ev. 40. This subject is treated more largely by Dr. Reid in his profound Inquiry into the Human Mind, c. 6, § 24, p. 196, 197, of his collected Works, in these words:—“The wise and beneficent Author of Nature, who intended that we should be social creatures, and that we should receive the greatest and most important part of our knowledge by the information of others, hath for these purposes, implanted in our nature two principles, that tally with each other. The first of these principles is a propensity to speak truth, and to use the signs of language, so as to convey our real sentiments. This principle has a powerful operation, even in the greatest liars; for where they lie once they speak truth a hundred times. Truth is always uppermost, and is the natural issue of the mind. It requires no art or training, no inducement or temptation, but only that we yield to a natural impulse. Lying, on the contrary, is doing violence to our nature; and is never practised, even by the worst men, without some temptation. Speaking truth is like using our natural food, which we would do from appetite, although it answered no end; but lying is like taking physic, which is nauseous to the taste, and which no man takes but for some end, which he cannot otherwise attain. If it should be objected, that men may be influenced by moral or political considerations to speak truth, and therefore, that their doing so is no proof of such an original principle as we have mentioned; I answer, first, that moral or political considerations can have no influence, until we arrive at years of understanding and reflection; and it is certain from experience, that children keep to truth invariably, before they are capable of being influenced by such considerations. Secondly, when we are influenced by moral or political considerations, we must be conscious of that influence, and capable of perceiving it upon reflection. Now, when I reflect upon my actions most attentively, I am not conscious, that in speaking truth I am influenced on ordinary occasions by any motive moral or political. I find, that truth is always at the door of my lips, and goes forth spontaneously, if not held back. It requires neither good nor bad intention to bring it forth, but only that I be artless and undesigning. There may indeed be temptations to falsehood, which would be too strong for the natural principle of veracity, unaided by principles of honour or virtue; but where there is no such temptation, we speak truth by instinct; and this instinct is the principle I have been explaining. By this instinct, a real connection is formed between our words and our thoughts, and thereby the former become fit to be signs of the latter, which they could not otherwise be. And although this connection is broken in every instance of lying and equivocation, yet these instances being comparatively few, the authority of human testimony

Still, in every period of life, and in every state of intellectual culture, man is instinctively more prone to believe than to disbelieve the testimony of others, and this disposition towards

is only weakened by them, but not destroyed. Another original principle, implanted in us by the Supreme Being, is a disposition to confide in the veracity of others, and to believe what they tell us. This is the counterpart to the former : and as that may be called the principle of veracity, we shall, for want of a proper name, call this the principle of credulity. It is unlimited in children until they meet with instances of deceit and falsehood ; and it retains a very considerable degree of strength through life. If nature had left the mind of the speaker in equilibrio, without any inclination to the side of truth more than to that of falsehood, children would lie as often as they speak truth, until reason was so far ripened, as to suggest the imprudence of lying, or conscience, as to suggest its immorality. And if nature had left the mind of the hearer in equilibrio, without any inclination to the side of belief more than to that of disbelief, we should take no man's word, until we had positive evidence that he spoke truth. His testimony would, in this case, have no more authority than his dreams, which may be true or false : but no man is disposed to believe them, on this account, that they were dreamed. It is evident, that, in the matter of testimony, the balance of human judgment is by nature inclined to the side of belief ; and turns to that side of itself, when there is nothing put into the opposite scale. If it was not so, no proposition, that is uttered in discourse would be believed, until it was examined and tried by reason : and most men would be unable to find reasons for believing the thousandth part of what is told them. Such distrust and incredulity would deprive us of the greatest benefits of society, and place us in a worse condition than that of savages. Children, on this supposition, would be absolutely incredulous, and therefore absolutely incapable of instruction ; those who had little knowledge of human life, and of the manners and characters of men, would be in the next degree incredulous ; and the most credulous men would be those of greatest experience, and of the deepest penetration ; because, in many cases, they would be able to find good reasons for believing testimony, which the weak and the ignorant could not discover. In a word, if credulity were the effect of reasoning and experience, it must grow up and gather strength, in the same proportion as reason and experience do. But if it is the gift of nature, it will be strongest in childhood, and limited and restrained by experience ; and the most superficial view of human life shows, that the last is really the case, and not the first. It is the intention of nature, that we should be carried in arms before we are able to walk upon our legs ; and it is likewise the intention of nature, that our belief should be guided by the authority and reason of others, before it can be guided by our own reason. The weakness of the infant, and the natural affection of the mother, plainly indicate the former ; and the natural credulity of youth and authority of age as plainly indicate the latter. The infant, by proper nursing and care, acquires strength to walk without support. Reason hath likewise credulity may be regarded as a fundamental principle of our moral nature, implanted in us by the Almighty for the wisest and most beneficent purposes. As such it constitutes the general basis upon which all evidence may be said to rest.

§ 43.<sup>1</sup> Subordinate to this paramount and original principle, it may, in the second place, be observed, that evidence rests upon our faith in human testimony, as sanctioned by experience; that is, upon the generally experienced truth of the statements on oath of men of integrity, having capacity and opportunity for observation, and without apparent influence from passion or interest to pervert the truth. This belief is strengthened by our knowledge of the narrator's reputation for veracity and intelligence, by the absence of conflicting testimony, and by the presence of that which is corroborating and cumulative.<sup>2</sup>

her infancy, when she must be carried in arms; then she leans entirely upon authority, by natural instinct, as if she was conscious of her own weakness; and without this support, she becomes vertiginous. When brought to maturity by proper culture, she begins to feel her own strength, and leans less upon the reason of others; she learns to suspect testimony in some cases, and to disbelieve it in others; and sets bounds to that authority to which she was at first entirely subject. But still, to the end of life, she finds a necessity of borrowing light from testimony, where she has none within herself, and of leaning, in some degree upon the reason of others, where she is conscious of her own imbecility. And, as in many instances Reason, even in her maturity, borrows aid from testimony; so in others she mutually gives aid to it, and strengthens its authority. For, as we find good reason to reject testimony in some cases, so in others we find good reason to rely upon it with perfect security in our most important concerns. The character, the number, and the disinterestedness of witnesses, the impossibility of collusion, and the incredibility of their concurring in their testimony without collusion, may give an irresistible strength to testimony, compared to which its native and intrinsic authority is very inconsiderable."

<sup>2</sup> Archbishop Whately, in his admirable jeu d'esprit, entitled "Historic Doubts relative to Napoleon Buonaparte," has clearly stated the main tests of human veracity. "I suppose," says he, "it will not be denied that the three following are among the most important points to be ascertained, in deciding on the credibility of witnesses; first, whether they have the means of gaining correct information; secondly, whether they have any interest in concealing truth, or propagating falsehood; and, thirdly, whether they agree in their testimony."—P. 14, 6th ed.

Nisi Prius, it is frequently difficult, and sometimes impossible, to ascertain, with anything like certainty, what characters the witnesses respectively deserve for honesty and intelligence, and how far they are actuated by interested, malignant, or other improper motives. On these heads considerable doubt must almost always exist; although a rigid cross-examination, when skilfully applied,<sup>1</sup> will certainly throw much light upon the subject; and a careful attention to the demeanour of the witness will furnish a no less valuable guide. Thus, while simplicity, minuteness, and ease are the natural accompaniments of truth, the language of witnesses coming to impose upon the jury is usually laboured, cautious, and indistinct.<sup>2</sup> So, when we find a witness over-zealous on behalf of his party; exaggerating circumstances; answering without waiting to hear the question; forgetting facts wherein he would be open to contradiction; minutely remembering others, which he knows cannot be disputed;<sup>3</sup> reluctant in giving adverse testimony; replying evasively or flippantly;<sup>4</sup> pretending not to hear the question, for the purpose of gaining time to consider the effect of his answer; affecting indifference; or, often vowing to God, and protesting his honesty; we have indications, more or less conclusive, of insincerity and falsehood.<sup>5</sup> On the other hand, in the testimony of witnesses of truth there is a calmness and simplicity; a naturalness of manner; an unaffected readiness and copiousness of detail, as well in one part of the narrative as another; and an evident disregard of either the facility or difficulty of vindication or detection.<sup>6</sup>

§ 45. Besides these tests of truth, which are obviously of value in fixing what amount of credit is due to each individual witness, certain general rules must be borne in mind, as tending to shadow forth, rather than define, the relative merits of particular classes of witnesses. Thus, it has been justly observed, that “a propensity to lying has been always, more or less, a peculiar feature in the character of an enslaved people—accustomed to oppression of every kind, and to be called upon to render strict account of every trifle done, not according to the rules of justice, but as the caprice of their masters may suggest ;—it is little to be wondered at, if a lie is often resorted to as a supposed refuge from punishment, and that thus an habitual disregard is engendered.”<sup>1</sup> This passage is cited, as accounting in some measure for the lamentable neglect of truth, which is evinced by most of the nations of India, by the subjects of the Czar, and by many of the peasantry in Ireland.<sup>2</sup>

<sup>4</sup> The woman of Samaria affords a striking example of this proneness to exaggerate. When our Saviour told her she had had five husbands, she went into the city, saying, “Come, see a man, which told me all things that ever I did.” 4th ch. of St. John, v. 29.

<sup>5</sup> Bp. of Tasmania's Lect. on Christ. Catechism, 522. The difficulty of detecting falsehood which has been engrafted on truth has been noticed by Alfred Tennyson, in his charming poem of the “Grandmother :”—

“and the parson . . . said likewise,
That a lie which is half a truth is ever the blackest of lies,
That a lie which is all a lie may be met and fought with outright,
But a lie which is part a truth is a harder matter to fight.”

intermixture of truth disarms the suspicion of the candid, and sanctions the ready belief of the malevolent.<sup>1</sup> Having pointed out this proneness to exaggerate as a feminine weakness, it is only just to add, that in other respects, the testimony of women is at least deserving of equal credit to that of men. In fact, they are in some respects far superior witnesses; for first, they are, in general, closer observers of events than men; next, their memories, being less loaded with matters of business, are usually more tenacious; and lastly, they often possess unrivalled powers of simple and unaffected narration.<sup>2</sup>

§ 47. Sir William Blackstone appears to have thought,<sup>3</sup> that less credit was due to the testimony of a child than to that of an adult; but reason and experience scarcely warrant this opinion. In childhood, the faculties of observation and memory are usually more active than in after life, while the motives of falsehood are then less numerous and less powerful. The inexperience and artlessness which, in a great measure, must accompany tender years, render a child incapable of sustaining consistent perjury, while the same causes operate powerfully in preventing his true testimony from being shaken by the adroitness of counsel. Not comprehending the drift of the questions put to him in cross-examination, his only course is to answer them according to the

Mr. Brougham commented on the same subject with great ability on the Queen's trial. "If an individual," said he, "were to invent a story entirely,—if he were to form it completely of falsehoods, the result would be his inevitable detection; but if he build a structure of falsehood on the foundation of a little truth, he may raise a tale which, with a good deal of drilling, may put an honest man's life, or an illustrious Princess' reputation, in jeopardy." 1 Ld. Br. Sp. 147. And, again: "The most effectual way, because the safest, of laying a plot, is not to swear too hard, is not to swear too much, or to come too directly to the point; but to lay the foundation in existing facts and real circumstances,—to knit the false with the true,—to interlace reality with fiction,—to build the fanciful fabric upon that which exists in nature,—and to escape detection by taking most especial care, as they have done here, never to have two witnesses to the same facts, and also to make the facts as moderate, and as little offensive, as possible." 1 Ld. Br. Sp. 215.

fact. Thus, if he speak falsely, he is almost inevitably detected ; but if he be the witness of truth, he avoids that imputation of dishonesty, which sometimes attaches to older witnesses, who, though substantially telling the truth, are apt to throw discredit on their testimony, by a too anxious desire to reconcile every apparent inconsistency.

§ 48. The testimony of foreigners and of others, who, living out of the jurisdiction, are brought from a distance to the place of trial, often requires to be scrutinised with more than common caution ; for, as such persons speak before a tribunal, which ordinarily knows no more of them than they care for it, whose threat they have no reason to fear, and whose good opinion they utterly disregard, they are obviously far less likely than witnesses living on the spot to be influenced by the dread of having their falsehoods exposed.<sup>1</sup> The detection of perjury, in their case, involves but little loss of character, and no real danger of punishment. A dishonest foreigner, too, who has attained a tolerable knowledge of the language, has always this advantage over a native, that he may modestly conceal his proficiency as a linguist, and avail himself of the assistance of an interpreter, which gives him an opportunity of preparing with due caution his answer to any inconvenient question, while the interpreter, all unheeded, is performing the superfluous part of furnishing him with a needless translation.<sup>2</sup>

perfect rectitude.<sup>1</sup> “That all men are guilty, till they are proved to be innocent,” is naturally the creed of the police; but it is a creed which finds no sanction in a court of justice. As a set-off to this tendency on the part of the police to regard conduct in the worst point of view, it must in fairness be stated, that, in every other respect, the general mode in which they give their testimony is unimpeachable; and that, except when blinded by prejudice, they may well challenge a comparison with any other body of men in their rank of life, as upright, intelligent, and trustworthy witnesses.

§ 50. Perhaps the testimony which least deserves credit with a jury is that of skilled witnesses. These gentlemen are usually required to speak, not to facts, but to opinions; and when this is the case, it is often quite surprising to see with what facility, and to what an extent, their views can be made to correspond with the wishes or the interests of the parties who call them. They do not, indeed, wilfully misrepresent what they think: but their judgments become so warped by regarding the subject in one point of view, that, even when conscientiously disposed, they are incapable of expressing a candid opinion. Being zealous partisans, their belief becomes synonymous with Faith as defined by the Apostle,<sup>2</sup> and it too often is but “the substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen.” To adopt the language of Lord Campbell, “skilled witnesses come with such a bias on their minds to support the cause in which they are embarked, that hardly any weight should be given to their evidence.”<sup>3</sup>

been commuted by cross-examination into contradictions,<sup>1</sup> and if collusion is excluded, and no deception has been practised on the witnesses, the harmony in their evidence cannot be explained upon any other hypothesis than that the statements severally made are true. Each witness taken singly may be notorious for lying; but the chances against their all agreeing by accident in the same lie may be so great, as to render the agreement morally impossible.<sup>2</sup> On this subject it has been profoundly remarked, that “in a number of concurrent testimonies, where there has been no previous concert, there is a probability distinct from that which may be termed the sum of the probabilities resulting from the testimonies of the witnesses; a probability which would remain, even though the witnesses were of such a character as to merit no faith at all. This probability arises purely from the concurrence itself. That such a concurrence should spring from chance, is as one to infinite; that is, in other words, morally impossible. If, therefore, concert be excluded, there remains no cause but the reality of the fact.”<sup>3</sup> So, also, Lord Mansfield justly observed on one occasion, “It is objected that the books [Keble’s and Freeman’s Reports] are of no authority; but if both the reporters were the worst that ever reported, if substantially they report a case in the same way, it is demonstration of the truth of what they report, or they could not agree.”<sup>4</sup> The word “substantially” here used is highly important, with a view to the question of collusion, since it is scarcely possible that several independent witnesses should tell precisely the same tale, without any variation. Dr. Paley, who has treated this subject with great ability in his Evidences of Christianity, states, that “the usual character of human testimony is substantial truth under circum-

<sup>1</sup> On this subject Mr. Brougham thus expressed himself on the Queen’s trial:—“Why were there never two witnesses to the same fact? Because it is dangerous; because, when you are making a plot, you should have one witness to a fact, and another to a confirmation; have some things true, which unimpeachable evidence can prove; other things fabricated, without which the true would be of no avail,—but avoid calling two witnesses to the same thing at the same time, because the cross-examination is extremely likely to make them contradict each other.” 1 *Ld. stantial variety. This is what the daily experience of courts of justice teaches. When accounts of a transaction come from the mouths of different witnesses, it is seldom that it is not possible to pick out apparent or real inconsistencies between them. These inconsistencies are studiously displayed by an adverse pleader, but oftentimes with little impression upon the minds of the judges. On the contrary, a close and minute agreement induces the suspicion of confederacy and fraud."<sup>1</sup> These last observations apply with almost overwhelming force, when the facts deposed to consist of conversations, or of a series of trifling and unimportant events, and the testimony is given after the lapse of a considerable interval of time.<sup>2</sup>

§ 52.<sup>3</sup> Fourthly, in receiving the knowledge of facts from the testimony of others, men are much influenced by their accordance with facts previously known or believed; and this constitutes what is termed their probability. Statements, thus probable, are received upon evidence much less cogent than is required for the belief of those which do not accord with previous knowledge; but while such statements are more readily received, and justly relied upon, care should be taken lest all others be unduly distrusted. While unbounded credulity is the attribute of weak minds, which seldom think or reason at all—quo magis nesciunt, eo magis admirantur—indiscriminate scepticism belongs only to those who, affecting to make their own knowledge and observation the exclusive standard of probability, forget that they are liable to be misled even by their own senses.<sup>4</sup> Such persons, therefore, if they intend to sustain a truly consistent character, should act like Molière's Docteur, in "Le Mariage Forcé," who in answer to Sganarelle's statement that he had come to see him, replied, "Seigneur Sganarelle, changez, s'il vous plait, cette façon de parler. sition décisive, de parler de tout avec incertitude, de suspendre toujours son jugement; et par cette raison vous ne pouvez pas dire, je suis venu, mais, il me semble que je suis venu.”<sup>1</sup> Sceptical philosophers, however, inconsistently enough with their own principles, yet true to the nature of man, continue to receive a large portion of their knowledge upon testimony, derived, not from their own experience, but from that of other men; and this, even when it is at variance with much of their own personal observation. Thus they receive with confidence the testimony of the historian in regard to the occurrences of ancient times; that of the naturalist and the traveller, in regard to the natural history and civil condition of other countries; and that of the astronomer, respecting the heavenly bodies; facts which, upon the narrow basis of their own “firm and unalterable experience,” on which Mr. Hume so much relies, they would be bound to reject, as wholly unworthy of belief.<sup>2</sup>

§ 53. Still, it is not the miscalled philosopher alone, who is too ready to lend an academic faith to a narrative of facts which do not strictly accord with preconceived opinions, mistaken for knowledge. In all ranks and conditions of life, persons of this stamp abound, and the errors, to which their habits of distrust expose them, are at times sufficiently ridiculous. Thus, the king of Siam rejected the testimony of the Dutch ambassador, that, in his country, water was sometimes congealed into a solid mass; for it was utterly repugnant to his own experience.<sup>3</sup> In like manner, the marvellous but true stories narrated by the Abyssinian traveller Bruce, were long considered by his countrymen as mere fictions; and so late as the year 1825, the evidence given by the great railway engineer, George Stephenson, before a parliamentary committee, was much impaired by his having ventured an opinion, that steam-carriages might possibly travel on railroads twelve miles an hour.<sup>4</sup> A contemplation of the instances here given, and of others which will readily occur to the reader, naturally suggests two reflections; first, that, with man's finite knowledge, he should be slow to reject a narrative as incredible, merely because it is beyond, or even contrary to, his own very limited experience; and next, that progress in knowledge is not confined, in its results, to the simple facts ascertained, but has also an extensive influence in enlarging the understanding for the further reception of truth, and in setting it free from many of the prejudices which influence men, whose minds are limited by a narrow field of observation. Thus, Archimedes, deeply imbued as he was with science, might have believed an account of the invention and wonderful powers of the steam-engine, which unscientific Englishmen of the last century would have rejected as incredible and absurd.<sup>1</sup>

§ 54.<sup>2</sup> A fifth basis of evidence is the known and experienced connection subsisting between collateral facts or circumstances, satisfactorily proved, and the fact in controversy. This is merely the legal application, in other terms, of a process familiar in natural philosophy, showing the truth of an hypothesis by its coincidence with existing phenomena. The connections and coincidences in question may be either physical or moral; and the knowledge of them is derived from the known laws of matter and motion, from animal instincts, and from the physical, intellectual, and moral constitution and habits of man.<sup>3</sup> Their force, which will be considered hereafter, depends on their sufficiency to exclude every other hypothesis but the one under consideration. Thus, the possession of goods recently stolen, accompanied with personal proximity in point of time and place, and inability in the party charged, to show how he came by them, would seem naturally, though not necessarily,<sup>4</sup> to exclude every other hypo-

<sup>4</sup> Joseph's cup was found in Benjamin's sack, Gen. c. 44, v. 1—17. The amusing story of the Hunchback, in the Arabian Nights, and the no less diverting story of the Baked Head, in Mr. Morier's Hajji Baba, both turn thesis, but that of his guilt. But the possession of the same goods at another time and place would warrant no such conclusion, as it would leave room for the hypothesis of their having been lawfully purchased in the course of trade. Similar to this, in principle, is the rule of noscitur a sociis, according to which the meaning of certain words in a written instrument is ascertained by the context.

§ 55.<sup>1</sup> In considering this subject, it must always be borne in mind, that in the actual occurrences of human life nothing is inconsistent. Every event which actually transpires has its appropriate relation and place in the vast complication of circumstances of which the affairs of men consist; it owes its origin to those which have preceded it; it is intimately connected with all others which occur at the same time and place, and often with those of remote regions; and, in its turn, it gives birth to a thousand others which succeed.<sup>2</sup> In all this perfect harmony prevails; so that a man can hardly invent a story, which, if closely compared with all the actual contemporaneous occurrences, may not be shown to be false. From these causes, minds enlarged by long and matured experience, and close observation of the conduct and affairs of men, may, with a rapidity and certainty approaching to intuition, perceive the elements of truth or falsehood in the face itself of the narrative, without any regard to the narrator. Thus, an experienced judge may instantly discover the falsehood of a witness, whose story an inexperienced jury might be inclined to believe. But though the mind, in these cases, seems to have acquired a new power, it is properly to be referred only to experience and observation.

§ 56.<sup>3</sup> In trials of fact, it will generally be found that the factum probandum is either directly attested by those who speak from their own actual and personal knowledge of its existence, or

it is to be inferred from other facts, satisfactorily proved. In the former case, the proof rests upon the second, third, and fourth grounds before mentioned; that is, it depends partly upon faith in human testimony, as sanctioned by experience; which faith will be increased or diminished in proportion to the apparent honesty and intelligence of the witnesses, and their opportunities for observation;—partly upon the exercise of reason on the consistency of the narratives given by different witnesses; and here the value of the testimony will vary, according to the number of the deponents, and the apparent absence or presence of collusion;—and partly upon the conformity of the testimony with experience. In the latter case, that is, when the fact in dispute is to be inferred from other facts satisfactorily established, the proof rests upon the same grounds, with the addition of the experienced connection between the collateral facts thus proved, and the fact which is in controversy; which connection constitutes the fifth basis of evidence before stated. The facts proved are in both cases directly attested. In the former case, the proof applies immediately to the factum probandum, without any intervening process, and it is therefore called direct or positive testimony. In the latter case, as the proof applies immediately to collateral facts, supposed to have a connection, near or remote, with the fact in controversy, it is termed circumstantial; and sometimes, but not with entire accuracy, presumptive. Thus, if a witness testifies that he saw A. inflict a mortal wound on B., of which he instantly died, this is a case of direct evidence; and, giving to the witness the credit to which men are generally entitled, the crime is satisfactorily proved. If a witness testifies that a deceased person was shot with a pistol, and the wadding is found to be part of a letter addressed to the prisoner, the residue of which is discovered in his pocket, here the facts themselves are directly attested; but the evidence they afford is termed circumstantial; and from these facts, if unexplained by the prisoner, the jury may, or may not, deduce, or infer, or presume his guilt, according as they are satisfied, or not, of the natural connection between similar facts and the guilt of the person thus connected with them. In both cases, the veracity of the witness is presumed, in the absence of proof to the contrary; but in the latter case there is an additional presumption or inference, founded on the known usual connection between the facts proved, and the guilt of the party implicated. This operation of the mind, which is more complex and difficult in the latter case, has caused the evidence afforded by circumstances to be termed presumptive evidence; though, in truth, the operation is similar in both cases.

§ 57. Much has been said and written respecting the comparative value of direct and circumstantial evidence; but as the controversy seems to have arisen from a misapprehension of the real nature and object of testimony, and can moreover lead to no practical end, it is not here intended to enter into the lists further than to observe, that one argument urged in favour of circumstantial evidence is palpably erroneous. "Witnesses may lie, but circumstances cannot,"<sup>1</sup> has been more than once repeated from the bench, and is now almost received as a judicial axiom. Yet certainly no proposition can be more false or dangerous than this. If "circumstances" mean,—and they can have no other meaning,—those facts which lead to the inference of the fact in issue, they not only can, but constantly do lie; or, in other words, the conclusion deduced from them is often false. Thus, when at Melita the viper fastened on St. Paul's hand, the barbarians said among themselves, "No doubt this man is a murderer;" but when they saw that no harm came to him, "they changed their mind, and said that he was a god."<sup>2</sup> Here, both conclusions were alike false. So, in Macbeth, the master poet of nature has described Lenox, Macduff, and the other chieftains as erroneously assuming, first, that the grooms had murdered the king, because "their hands and faces were all badged with blood, so were their daggers, which unwiped we found upon their pillows:" and next, that "they were suborned" by the king's two sons, who had

<sup>2</sup> Acts, xxviii. 3—5. So, when Jacob saw Joseph's coat of many colours stained with kid's blood, "he knew it, and said, 'It is my son's coat; an evil beast hath devoured him; Joseph is without doubt rent in pieces.'" Gen. xxvii. 33.

“stolen away and fled.” It is no answer to say that these are mere instances of hasty and illogical inferences, which display only the ignorance and presumption of the persons by whom they were drawn, and that the “circumstances which cannot lie” are such as necessarily lead to a certain conclusion. Who is to decide on this necessity? Clearly those who have also to decide on the fact in issue. Throw a case of circumstantial evidence into the form of a syllogism, and it will be found that the major premiss rests solely on the erring experience of the tribunal to whom it is presented. Besides, these very circumstances must be proved, like direct facts, by witnesses, who are equally capable with others of deceiving or of being deceived. So that in no sense is it possible to say, that a conclusion drawn from circumstantial evidence can amount to absolute certainty, or, in other words, that circumstances cannot lie.

§ 58. Although it is not here proposed to take any part in the controversy respecting the comparative weight due to direct and circumstantial evidence; still, it may not be without some advantage to point out briefly the dangers against which juries should especially guard, when called upon to decide cases supported by each of these species of testimony. For instance, in a case sought to be directly established, the witnesses are usually few, and consequently there is the more reason to apprehend conspiracy and fraud; since two or three persons are far more easily found than a larger number, who, from motives of interest or malignity, will combine to aggrandise themselves or to ruin an opponent. Their story, too, being for the most part simple, is readily concocted and remembered, while its very simplicity renders it extremely difficult, on cross-examination, to detect the imposture. It is on this ground that the uncorroborated statements of single witnesses, especially when they testify to atrocious crimes, such as rape, &c.,<sup>1</sup> or are known, like accomplices,<sup>2</sup> to be persons of bad character, and to have an interest in the result, have ever been regarded with merited distrust, and are now, in practice, generally deemed insufficient to warrant a conviction.

§ 59. With respect to cases supported by circumstantial evidence, juries should bear in mind, that, although the number of facts drawn from apparently independent sources renders concerted perjury both highly improbable in itself, and easy of detection if attempted;<sup>1</sup> yet, the witnesses in such cases are more likely to make unintentional misstatements, than those who give direct testimony. The truth of the facts they attest rests frequently on minute and careful observation, and experience teaches the danger of relying implicitly on the evidence of even the most conscientious witnesses, respecting dates, footprints, handwriting, admissions, loose conversations, and questions of identity. Yet these are the links in the chain of circumstances, by which guilt is in general sought to be established. The number too of the witnesses, who must all speak the truth, or some link will be wanting, renders additional caution the more necessary. Besides, it must be remembered, that, in a case of circumstantial evidence, the facts are collected by degrees. Something occurs to raise a suspicion against a particular party. Constables and police officers are immediately on the alert, and, with professional zeal, ransack every place and paper, and examine into every circumstance which can tend to establish, not his innocence, but his guilt. Presuming him guilty from the first, they are apt to consider his acquittal as a tacit reflection on their discrimination or skill, and, with something like the feeling of a keen sportsman, they determine, if possible, to bag their game. Innocent actions may thus be misinterpreted—innocent words misunderstood; and, as men readily believe what they anxiously desire,<sup>2</sup> facts the most harmless may be construed into strong confirmation of preconceived opinions.<sup>3</sup> It is not here asserted that this is frequently the case, nor is it intended to disparage the police. The feelings by which they are actuated, are common to counsel, engineers, surveyors,<sup>4</sup> medical men, antiquarians, and philosophers; indeed, to all persons who first assume that a fact or system is true, and then seek for arguments to support and prove its truth.

§ 60. But, admitting that the facts sworn to are satisfactorily proved, a further, and a highly difficult duty still remains for the jury to perform. They must decide, not whether these facts are consistent with the prisoner's guilt, but whether they are inconsistent with any other rational conclusion; for it is only on this last hypothesis that they can safely convict the accused.<sup>1</sup>

CHAPTER V.

PRESUMPTIVE EVIDENCE.

§ 61.<sup>1</sup> The general head of PRESUMPTIVE EVIDENCE is usually divided into two branches, namely, presumptions of law, and presumptions of fact. PRESUMPTIONS OF LAW consist of those rules, which, in certain cases, either forbid or dispense with any ulterior inquiry. They are founded, either upon the first principles of justice, or the laws of nature, or the experienced course of human conduct and affairs, and the connexion usually found to exist between certain things. The general doctrines of presumptive evidence are not, therefore, peculiar to municipal law, but are shared by it in common with other departments of science. Thus, the presumption of a malicious intent to kill from the deliberate use of a deadly weapon, and the presumption of aquatic habits in an animal found with webbed feet, belong to the same philosophy, differing only in the instance, and not in the principle of its application. The one fact being proved or ascertained, the other, its uniform concomitant, is universally and safely presumed. It is this uniformly experienced connexion which leads to its recognition by the law, without other proof; the presumption, however, having more or less force, in proportion to the universality of the experience. And this has led to the distribution of presumptions of law into two classes, namely, conclusive and disputable.

§ 62.<sup>2</sup> Conclusive, or, as they are elsewhere termed, imperative, or absolute presumptions of law, are rules determining the quantity of evidence requisite for the support of any particular averment, which is not permitted to be overcome by any proof that the fact is otherwise. They consist chiefly of those cases in which the long experienced connexion, just alluded to, has been found so general and uniform, as to render it expedient for the common good, that this connexion should be taken to be inseparable and universal. They have been adopted by common consent, from motives of public policy, for the sake of greater certainty, and the promotion of peace and quiet in the community; and therefore it is, that all corroborating evidence is dispensed with, and all opposing evidence is forbidden.<sup>1</sup>

§ 63. Sometimes this common consent is expressly declared, through the medium of the legislature in statutes. Thus, under "The Bankruptcy Act, 1869," the registration of a special resolution of the creditors for a liquidation by arrangement, or of an extraordinary resolution for composition, is, in the absence of fraud, conclusive evidence that such resolutions respectively have been duly passed, and that the Act has been complied with.<sup>2</sup> So, under the same statute, the approval of the Court, testified as therein mentioned, is conclusive as to the validity of any composition or general scheme of settlement made in pursuance of the Act.<sup>3</sup> All the requisitions of "The Public Schools Act, 1868," in respect to any statutes made by the governing body of a school, "shall be deemed to have been duly complied with," so soon as the statutes themselves have been approved by Her Majesty in Council.<sup>4</sup> So also, under "The Endowed Schools Act, 1869," the order in council approving a scheme is conclusive evidence of its validity;<sup>1</sup> and under "The Valuation Metropolis Act, 1869," "the valuation list for the time being in force shall be deemed to have been duly made."<sup>2</sup> The Act, too, of 16 & 17 V., c. 59, contains a remarkable clause, for it enacts, in § 19, that "any draft or order drawn upon a banker payable to order on demand, which shall, when presented for payment, purport to be indorsed by the person to whom the same shall be drawn payable, shall be a sufficient authority to such banker to pay the amount of such draft or order to the bearer thereof; and it shall not be incumbent on such banker to prove that such indorsement, or any subsequent indorsement, was made by, or under the direction of, the person to whom the said draft or order was or is made payable either by the drawer or any indorser thereof."<sup>3</sup> So, under "The Stamp Act, 1870," "a bill of exchange or promissory note purporting to be drawn or made out of the United Kingdom, is, for the purpose of this Act, to be deemed to have been so drawn or made, although it may in fact have been drawn or made within the United Kingdom."<sup>4</sup>

So, all actions on the case, other than slander, actions of trespass to goods or land, and actions of detinue<sup>3</sup> or replevin, must be brought within a like period of six years after the cause of action shall have accrued;<sup>4</sup> and no action can be maintained for an assault or false imprisonment after the lapse of four years;<sup>5</sup> for slander after the lapse of two years;<sup>6</sup> or for compensation to the families of persons killed by accident, after twelve calendar months from the death of the deceased.<sup>7</sup> So, actions against persons for anything done by them under the authority or in pursuance of any local and personal Act, must be brought within two years after the cause of action shall have accrued, or in the case of continuing damage, within one year after the damage shall have ceased.<sup>8</sup> So, all actions and proceedings against persons acting under any of the statutes passed in 1861, to consolidate the law relating to both in England and the United States. By the 3 & 4 W. 4, c. 27, § 2, all actions to recover land or rent are barred, after twenty years from the time when the right of action accrued; unless, at such time, the plaintiff or the party through whom he claims shall have been under some disability, specified in the Act, in which case he is allowed ten years from the ceasing of the disability; provided that in no case shall an action be brought after forty years from the time when the right first accrued, although the period of ten years shall not have expired. §§ 16 & 17. <sup>1</sup> Amended by 4 & 5 W. 4, c. 83. See Salkeld v. Johnson, 2 Ex. R. 256. In this important case, which was an issue out of Chancery, the Barons decided—1st, That the enjoyment of land, producing titheable matters, without payment of tithe for the period prescribed by the Act stated above, if adverse and as of right, created an indefeasible exemption from tithes, without other proof of the legal origin of the exemption; but, secondly, that the non-payment of tithes of a particular thing for such period, in respect of lands for which tithes of other titheable produce had been paid within the statutable period, did not exempt the payment of the tithes of that particular thing. after the commission of the offence.<sup>1</sup> So, all suits, indictments, or informations, brought or exhibited, for any offence against the Customs Consolidation Act, 1853, or any other Act relating to the customs, in any court, or before any justice or justices, must be brought or exhibited within three years next after the date of the offence committed.<sup>2</sup> So, the prosecution for every offence against the night-poaching Act, must be commenced within six calendar months, if punishable upon summary conviction, and within twelve calendar months, if punishable upon indictment, or otherwise than upon summary conviction.<sup>3</sup> The commencement of the prosecution here spoken of is not the preferring the indictment, but the laying an information,<sup>4</sup> and the obtaining a warrant of apprehension; or at least the issuing a warrant of commitment;<sup>5</sup> and therefore, where the prisoner was apprehended and committed within the twelve months, though the indictment was preferred after the expiration of that term, it was held that the prosecution was commenced in time.<sup>6</sup> Whether the preferring an indictment which is ignored, would be deemed such a commencement of the prosecution as would warrant the conviction of the party upon a subsequent indictment, preferred more than a year after the offence was committed, may admit of more doubt; and the point, though discussed, has never been determined.<sup>7</sup>

one can be tried for any offence against the Mutiny Act, the Marine Mutiny Act, or the Articles of War, which shall appear to have been committed more than three years before the date of the warrant for such trial, unless the accused, from having absented himself, or from some other manifest impediment, shall not have been amenable to justice within that period, in which case he may be tried at any time not exceeding two years after the impediment shall have ceased.<sup>1</sup> Again, every prosecution, action, or suit instituted against any person for contravening the Corrupt Practices Prevention Act, must, unless the party absconds, be commenced within one year of the date of the offence.<sup>2</sup> So, the time for instituting summary proceedings under the Merchant Shipping Act, 1854, is limited to six months, unless either of the parties be out of the jurisdiction.<sup>3</sup> Clauses of a similar nature will be found in a vast variety of other statutes, to which it is here considered unnecessary to make particular reference.<sup>4</sup>

§ 67. It may admit of a serious doubt, whether all, or indeed the majority, of these statutes of limitation depend on the doctrine of presumption. Some of them do so undoubtedly, but others appear to rest solely on the broad ground of general expedience and justice. Interest reipublicæ ut sit finis litium, is a maxim sanctioned by all civilised states: and the legislature, in passing most of these statutes, probably never intended to recognise any legal presumption, but the simple object was to check protracted litigation. When a party has been in undisputed possession of property for a considerable length of time, it is harsh to deprive him of that, which, however obtained, has now acquired the character of a vested interest. No presumption of a former grant is necessary to give validity to his title. It rests on the fact of long uninterrupted enjoyment. So, when a person has foregone a claim for many years, there is no need for presuming that he has, in reality, been satisfied; it is sufficient to say that his right to recover is lost by his own negligence. Indeed, the statute of James, which has been held not to discharge the debt, but merely to bar the remedy, is strongly confirmatory of these views.<sup>1</sup> Before leaving this subject, it may be well to notice a celebrated passage from one of Lord Plunket's speeches, relative to the statutes of limitation. "If time," says his lordship, "destroys the evidence of title, the laws have wisely and humanely [made length of possession a substitute for that which has been destroyed. He comes with his scythe in one hand to mow down the muniments of our rights; but in his other hand the law-giver has placed an hour-glass, by which he metes out incessantly those portions of duration, which render needless the evidence that he has swept away."<sup>2</sup>

§ 68.<sup>3</sup> In other cases, the common consent by which this class of legal presumption is established, is declared through the medium of the judicial tribunals, it being the common law of the land; and these decisions of the courts are respected, equally with the enactments of the legislature, as authoritative declarations of an imperative rule of law, against the operation of which no averment or evidence is received. Thus, for the purpose of determining the legal rights and liabilities of parties, the courts

<sup>7</sup> 1 Russ. C. & M. 515—518; R. v. Dixon, 3 M. & Sel. 15. But if death does not ensue till a year and a day, that is, a full year, after the stroke, it is conclusively presumed that the stroke was not the sole cause of the death, and it is not murder. 4 Bl. Com. 197; Glassf. Ev. 592. The doctrine of presumptive evidence was familiar to the Mosaic Code; even to the letter of the principle stated in the text. Thus, it is laid down in regard to the manslayer, that "if he smite him with an instrument of iron, so that he die,"—or, "if he smite him with throwing a stone wherewith he may die, and he die,"—or, "if he smite him with a hand weapon of wood wherewith he may die, and he die; he is a murderer." See Numb. xxxv. 16, 17, 18. Here, every instrument of iron is conclusively taken to be a deadly weapon; and the use of any such weapon raises a conclusive presumption of malice. The same presumption arose from lying in ambush, and thence destroying another.—Id. v. 20. But, in other cases, the existence of malice was to be proved, as one of the facts in the case; and in the absence of express malice, the offence was reduced to the degree of manslaughter, as at the common law.—Id. v. 21, 22, 23. This very reasonable distinction seems to have been unknown to the Gentoo Code, which demands life for life, in all cases, except where the culprit is a Brahmin. "If a man deprives another of life, the magistrate shall deprive that person of life."—Halhed's Gentoo Laws, b. xvi. § 1, p. 233.

some grievous bodily harm,<sup>1</sup> the judges have held that the prisoner was rightly convicted, though it appeared that his real intent was to wound another person;<sup>2</sup> and an intent to defraud a particular party will be conclusively presumed on an indictment for forgery, provided the defrauding of such party would be the natural result of the prisoner's act, if successful.<sup>3</sup> The law, in such a case, will not relax the rule, even though it should be proved that the prisoner did not entertain the intention charged.<sup>4</sup> In like manner, on a charge of arson for setting fire to a mill, an intent to injure or defraud the mill-owners will be conclusively inferred from the wilful act of firing.<sup>5</sup> The same doctrine should, it seems, on principle, apply to all other crimes.

§ 69. Several decisions, however, are opposed to the general adoption of this rule, and tend to show that, in respect of those statutory offences, the character of which varies according to the intent with which they are perpetrated, the real intention of the prisoner must be left to the jury to be inferred from the facts proved. Thus, on an indictment for cutting,<sup>6</sup> where the intent laid in the several counts was to murder, to disable, and to do grievous bodily harm, but the intent found by the jury was to prevent being apprehended, the judges held that a conviction could not be sustained, though the prisoner had inflicted a serious wound.<sup>7</sup> So, where a party was charged with inflicting an injury dangerous to life with intent to murder, Mr. Justice Patteson held, in one case,<sup>8</sup> that the jury must be satisfied that the prisoner, at the time he committed the assault, had formed a deliberate intention of murdering his victim; but, in a subsequent case,<sup>1</sup> the same learned judge observed, that the jury might infer such intent from the circumstance that, had death ensued, the crime would have amounted to murder. Again, on an indictment under the Act of 9 G. 4, c. 31,<sup>2</sup> charging the prisoner with shooting at the prosecutor with intent to murder him, Mr. Justice Littledale allowed the jury to pronounce a verdict in accordance with the actual intent, which was to kill another person, and the prisoner was consequently acquitted.<sup>3</sup> The principle of this decision has also been recognised by Barons Parke and Alderson, in a case where the prisoner was charged, under 7 W. 4 & 1 V., c. 85, § 2,<sup>4</sup> with causing poison to be taken by the prosecutor with intent to murder him, and it appeared that the prisoner's real intention was to poison another party.<sup>5</sup>

§ 70. Notwithstanding these decisions, and the high reputation of the judges by whom they were pronounced, it is submitted that the distinction which they intend to establish is founded on no sound principle, but goes far towards frittering away one of the most valuable presumptions known to the criminal law. It must also be borne in mind, that other judges of great experience in the administration of criminal justice have refused to recognise this distinction.<sup>6</sup> But whether in these statutory offences the actual intent is to be found by the jury, or the implied intent is to be presumed by the law, it is agreed on all hands to be immaterial, whether the intent charged be the principal or subordinate motive which instigated the commission of the crime. Thus, where the jury found that the prisoner had wounded the prosecutor with the view of preventing his lawful apprehension, but that, in order to effect that purpose, he intended to do him some grievous bodily harm, the judges held that the conviction was right on a count charging the latter offence.<sup>1</sup> The same rule has been recognised where the immediate object of the criminal was to rob the party he wounded, and the wound was inflicted as the means of effecting the robbery.<sup>2</sup>

§ 71. The presumption that a party intends the natural consequences of his acts, is not confined to criminal matters, but extends equally to his civil responsibilities. Thus, the deliberate publication of calumny, which the publisher knows to be false, or has no reason to believe to be true, raises, under the plea of "not guilty" to an action for libel,<sup>3</sup> a conclusive presumption of malice.<sup>4</sup> So, if a party makes a representation, which he knows to be false, and injury ensues to another, the law, whatever his real motives may have been, will infer that he has been actuated by a fraudulent or malicious intent.<sup>5</sup> So, the wilful neglect of a defendant to plead within the time appointed by law, is taken conclusively against him, as a confession of the plaintiff's right of action.<sup>6</sup> So, if a person, in the language of the Bankruptcy Act, "unable to pay his debts as they become due from his own

moneys," spontaneously makes a transfer or payment in favour of any creditor aware of his insolvent state, which necessarily has the effect of defeating or delaying his other creditors, the law conclusively presumes that he made it with that intent; and provided that he afterwards becomes bankrupt within three months from the date of such Act, the transfer or payment will, by the policy of the bankrupt law, be set aside as fraudulent, though all fraud in fact may be distinctly negatived.<sup>1</sup>

§ 72. Conclusive presumptions are also made in favour of judicial proceedings. Thus, it is an undoubted rule of pleading, that nothing shall be intended to be out of the jurisdiction of a superior court but that which is so expressly alleged; and, consequently, the records in the Courts of Counties Palatine, they being superior courts, need not state the cause of action to have arisen within the jurisdiction.<sup>2</sup> In like manner it will be conclusively presumed in favour of all the proceedings of either House of Parliament, that, whenever the contrary does not plainly and expressly appear, the respective Houses, as component parts of the Supreme Court in this country, have acted within their jurisdiction, and agreeably to the usages of Parliament, and the rules of law and justice; and, therefore, if a warrant be issued by the Speaker of the House of Commons at the instance of the House for the arrest of a witness, this document need not contain any recital of the grounds on which it was founded.<sup>3</sup> So, also, it is presumed, with respect to such writs as are actually issued by the superior courts at Westminster, that they are duly issued, and in a case in which the courts have jurisdiction, unless the contrary appears on the face of them; and all such writs will of themselves, and without any further allegation, protect all officers and others in their aid acting under them: and this too, although they be on the face of them irregular, or even void in form.<sup>1</sup> It is true that many of the writs issued by superior courts do recite the cause of their issuing, and show their legality, as, for instance, writs of execution; but others, as writs of attachment, or writs of capias ad respondendum issued before the Act of 1 & 2 V., c. 110, contain no such recital; and, though unquestionably valid, are framed in a form, which, had they proceeded from magistrates or other persons having a special statutory jurisdiction unknown to the common law, would have been clearly insufficient, and would have rendered them altogether void.<sup>2</sup> The respect due to the superior courts, and the credit deservedly given to them, that they will not abuse their powers, or issue process except in due course, and in accordance with the authority entrusted to them by the law, furnish alike the reason and the justification for this somewhat arbitrary presumption.<sup>3</sup>

§ 73.<sup>4</sup> Again the courts are bound to assume, at least prima facie, that the unreversed sentence of a foreign or colonial court of competent jurisdiction is correct; for otherwise, they would, in effect, be constituting themselves courts of appeal, without power to reverse the judgment.<sup>5</sup> Judicial acts are also conclusively presumed to have taken place at the earliest period of the day on which they were done. A judgment, therefore, would be treated as regular, though it were signed several hours after the defendant had died.<sup>6</sup> The records also of a court of justice, and indeed all records, are always presumed to have been correctly made.<sup>7</sup> No evidence, therefore, will be

admissible to show that a charter granted by the Crown was made or delivered at another time than when it bears date;<sup>1</sup> and the day specified in a record of conviction will be conclusive proof of the commission day of the assizes at which the trial took place.<sup>2</sup> In this last case, however, the party against whom the record is produced, may still show, if necessary, by parol evidence the actual day of the trial; because, although by fiction of law the whole time of the assizes is considered as one day, the court will judicially notice that this legal day may consist of many natural days, and will not permit justice to be defeated by a mere arbitrary rule.<sup>3</sup> Proof of the real day of trial would not, in such a case, contradict the record, but would simply explain it. So, if a nisi prius record were to contain two counts, or distinct causes of action, and a verdict awarding damages to the plaintiff were entered generally, parol evidence would be admissible to show that the substantial damages were recovered on one count only.<sup>4</sup> After verdict, whether in a civil or a criminal case,<sup>5</sup> it will be presumed that those facts, without proof of which the verdict could not have been found, were proved, though they are not distinctly alleged in the record; provided it contains terms sufficiently general to comprehend them in reasonable intendment.<sup>6</sup> So, the notes taken by the judge at Nisi Prius are presumed to be correct, and no party is allowed to raise before the Court in Banc any question respecting the rejection

§ 73 A. The solemnity of an act done, though not done in court, will also sometimes raise a conclusive presumption in its favour. Thus, where an award professes to be made de præmissis, the presumption is that the arbitrator intended to dispose finally of all the matters in difference; and his award will be held final, if by any intendment it can be made so.<sup>2</sup> A bond, or other specialty, is also presumed to have been made upon good consideration, so long as the instrument remains unimpeached.<sup>3</sup> By virtue, too, of a somewhat recent statute,<sup>4</sup> “every bill of lading in the hands of a consignee or indorsee for valuable consideration, representing goods to have been shipped on board a vessel, shall be conclusive evidence of such shipment as against the master or other person signing the same,<sup>5</sup> notwithstanding that such goods or some part thereof may not have been so shipped, unless such holder of the bill of lading shall have had actual notice at the time of receiving the same that the goods had not been in fact taken on board; provided, that the master or other person so signing may exonerate himself in respect of such misrepresentation, by showing that it was caused without any default on his part, and wholly by the fraud of the shipper, or of the holder, or some person under whom the holder claims.” Again, every conveyance made under the Act for facilitating the sale and transfer of land in Ireland, is, by that statute rendered “for all purposes conclusive evidence” that all previous proceedings leading to such conveyance have been regularly taken.<sup>6</sup>

favour of the due execution of ancient deeds and wills. When these instruments are thirty years old, and are unblemished by any alterations, they are said to prove themselves; their bare production is sufficient; the subscribing witnesses being presumed to be dead. This presumption, so far as the present rule of evidence is concerned, is not affected by proof that the witnesses are living,<sup>1</sup> and it seems, even actually in court;<sup>2</sup> nor, in the case of wills, by showing that the testator died within the thirty years.<sup>3</sup> But it must appear that the instrument comes from such custody, as though not strictly proper in point of law, is sufficient to afford a reasonable presumption in favour of its genuineness;<sup>4</sup> and that it is otherwise free from just ground of suspicion.<sup>5</sup> Whether, if the deed be a conveyance of real estate, the party is bound first to show some acts of possession under it, is a point not perfectly clear upon the authorities; but the weight of opinion seems to be in the negative, as will hereafter be more fully explained.<sup>6</sup> It is also questionable whether the rule applies to an instrument bearing the seal of a court or a corporation; "because, although the witnesses to a private deed, or persons acquainted with a private seal, may be supposed to be dead, or not capable of being accounted for after such a lapse of time, yet the seals of courts and corporations, being of a permanent character, may be proved by persons at any distance of time from the date of the instrument to which they are affixed."<sup>7</sup>

§ 76.<sup>2</sup> Estoppels may be ranked in this class of presumptions.<sup>3</sup> A man is estopped, when he has done or permitted some act, which the law will not allow him to gainsay. “The law of estoppel is not so unjust or absurd, as it has been too much the custom to represent.”<sup>4</sup> Its foundation rests partly on the obligation to speak and act in accordance with truth, by which every honest man is bound, and partly on the policy of the law, which thus seeks to prevent the mischiefs that would inevitably result from uncertainty, confusion, and want of confidence, were men permitted to deny what they had deliberately asserted and received as true. The doctrine of estoppels has, however, been guarded with great strictness; not because the party enforcing it is presumed to be desirous of excluding the truth; for the more reasonable supposition is that that is true, which the opposite party has already solemnly admitted; but because the estoppel may exclude the truth. Hence estoppels must be certain to every intent; for no one shall be prevented from setting up the truth, unless it be in plain contradiction to his former allegations and acts.<sup>5</sup>

§ 77. These last words extend, not only to a man’s own allegations and acts, but also to those of all persons through whom he claims; <sup>6</sup> or, to express the same sentiment in the technical language of the law, estoppels are equally binding upon parties and privies.<sup>1</sup> Lord Coke has divided privies into three classes; first, privies in blood, as heirs; secondly, privies by estate, as feoffees, lessees, assignees, &c.; and, thirdly, privies in law, “as the lord by escheat, the tenant by the courtesy, the tenant in dower, the incumbent of a benefice,”<sup>2</sup> husbands suing or defending in right of their wives,<sup>3</sup> executors and administrators.<sup>4</sup> In all these and the like cases, the law, acting upon the wise principle, qui sentit commodum, sentire debet et onus, provides that the privy shall stand in no better position than the party through whom he derives his title; but that, if the latter is not at liberty to contradict what he has formerly said or done, the former shall be subject to a like disability.<sup>5</sup> One exception, however, to this rule is admitted in favour of those privies, who would themselves be aggrieved or defrauded by the conduct of the party through whom they claim. For instance, where a man executed a deed with the fraudulent intent of defeating the statutes of mortmain, the court held that his heir-at-law was not estopped from questioning the validity of the indenture, since his claim to the lands was founded, not on the deed, but on his title by descent.<sup>6</sup>

§ 78. Estoppels are usually divided into three classes; namely, those by matter of record, those by deed, and those in pais.<sup>7</sup> The first class will be more conveniently treated, when the admissibility and effect of Judgments,<sup>8</sup> which are the most extensive species of records, come to be discussed; but it may be here observed, that neither a judgment inter partes, nor a deed, will operate conclusively as an estoppel, unless the matter of estoppel appears on the record, and is met by a demurrer,<sup>9</sup> nor unless it has been expressly pleaded by way of estoppel, at least where an opportunity of so pleading it has been afforded.<sup>10</sup> If a party, having such an opportunity, does not avail himself of it, the court will conclusively presume that he has intended to waive all benefit derivable from the estoppel, and will leave the jury to form their own conclusions from the facts presented to them in evidence.<sup>1</sup> If, indeed, no opportunity has arisen for pleading the matter of estoppel in bar, it would seem on principle, that an estoppel by record or by deed ought to be binding when offered in evidence; and such is the actual rule in America,<sup>2</sup> though in this country the point has not yet been expressly decided.<sup>3</sup>

§ 79. With respect, also, to estoppels in pais, no doubt can be entertained, but that they, in general, need not be pleaded in order to make them obligatory; as, for instance, if a man were to represent another as his agent, in order to procure a person to contract with him as such, and this person were so to contract, the contract would bind the principal equally with one made by himself, and no form of pleading could leave such a matter at large, and enable the jury to treat it as no contract.<sup>4</sup> So, if an indorsee were to sue an acceptor on a bill payable to the order of the drawer, and the defendant were to plead that the drawer had no authority to indorse, the plaintiff, though he might reply the

§ 80. It seems now clearly settled that a party is not estopped from avoiding his deed by proving that it was executed for a fraudulent, illegal, or immoral purpose. In one case,<sup>3</sup> indeed, where a man, in order to give his brother a colourable qualification to kill game, conveyed some lands to him, the court held that his widow could not avoid this conveyance in an action of ejectment brought against her by the brother; and in the subsequent case of Prole v. Wiggins, Sir Nicholas Tindal observed that this decision rested on the fact, that "the defence set up was inconsistent with the deed."<sup>4</sup> The case, however, can scarcely be supported by this circumstance, for in an action of ejectment by the grantee of an annuity, to recover premises on which it was secured, the grantor was allowed to show that the premises were of less value than the annuity, and, consequently, that the deed required enrolment, although he had expressly covenanted in the deed that the premises were of greater value.<sup>5</sup> So, also, where a bond has been given, or a covenant made, for an illegal consideration, the obligor or covenantor is not debarred from avoiding the instrument by pleading and proving the illegality;<sup>6</sup>

and this too, though a legal, but untrue, consideration is stated on the face of the deed.<sup>1</sup> Indeed, the better opinion seems to be, that where both parties to an indenture either know, or have the means of knowing, that it was executed for an immoral purpose, or in contravention of a statute, or of public policy, neither of them will be estopped from proving these facts which render the instrument void ab initio;<sup>2</sup> for although a party will thus, in certain cases, be enabled to take advantage of his own wrong,<sup>3</sup> yet this evil is of a trifling nature in comparison with the flagrant evasion of the law, that would result from the adoption of an opposite rule.<sup>4</sup> It seems scarcely necessary to add that a party is not estopped by his deed, if he executed it while, from duress, infancy, or other cause, he was incapable of making a valid contract, or if he was deceived by the fraudulent misrepresentations or acts of other parties.<sup>5</sup>

§ 81. At one time it was thought, that trustees acting for the benefit of the public would not be estopped from disputing the validity of their deeds, because, if they were, the innocent parties, on whose behalf they were acting, might be seriously injured.<sup>6</sup> This doctrine, however, is now distinctly confined to those cases in which the trustees for the public have, in their dealings with another party, violated a public statute, the contents of which are presumed to be known to such party. Therefore, where a bridge Act authorised commissioners to mortgage the tolls, and enacted that the mortgagees should have no preference by reason of priority, the court held that, in an action of ejectment brought by a mortgagee of the tolls against the commissioners, the defendants were estopped from setting up the fact of an earlier mortgage to defeat the legal estate of the lessor of the plaintiff. In this case, no presumption could be made as to the mortgagee's knowledge of the fact that a previous mortgage had been made; and the judges considered that there was no authority for holding, that trustees for a public purpose were in any peculiar state of protection on such a point.<sup>1</sup>

§ 82. Though an estoppel may bind a person acting in one capacity, it does not necessarily follow that it will have a similar effect, when such party is sustaining a totally different character.<sup>2</sup> Thus, where an executor de son tort verbally agreed with the landlord of the intestate to deliver up the premises demised, and afterwards took out letters of administration, he was held not concluded from bringing an action of ejectment against the landlord, who had actually obtained possession under the agreement.<sup>3</sup> But if "an heir apparent, having only the hope of succession, conveys, during the life of his ancestor, an estate, which afterwards descends upon him, although nothing passes at that time, yet, when the inheritance descends upon him, he is estopped to say that he had no interest at the time of the grant."<sup>4</sup> The distinction between these two cases appears to be this, that in the former, the party not estopped was acting for the benefit of others; in the latter, the party estopped was sui juris.

§ 83. In regard to estoppels by deed, a party is not prevented from disputing the correctness of that which is not an essential averment, but is mere description; such, for instance, as the date of the deed ; the quantity of land ; its nature, whether arable or meadow ; and the like ; for these are but incidental and collateral to the principal matter, and may be supposed not to have received the deliberate attention of the parties.<sup>1</sup> It seems, however, that, in this country, if a deed of conveyance distinctly states in the operative part that the consideration money has been received, and the estoppel is properly pleaded,<sup>2</sup> the fact of payment, and the amount paid, are conclusively presumed ;<sup>3</sup> although a receipt indorsed upon the deed will not in itself amount to an estoppel.<sup>4</sup> In America,<sup>5</sup> though the party is estopped from denying the conveyance, and that it was for a valuable consideration, the weight of authority is in favour of treating the statement in the deed as only prima facie evidence of the amount paid, in an action of covenant by the grantee to recover back the consideration, or in an action of assumpsit by the grantor, to recover the price which is yet unpaid.<sup>6</sup>

§ 84. The question how far parties are bound by recitals in deeds has of late years been much discussed ; and the doctrine of Lord Coke, that “a recital doth not conclude, because it is no direct affirmation,”<sup>7</sup> has been expressly overruled. The law on this subject has been ably expounded by Baron Parke, in Carpenter v. Buller.<sup>8</sup> “If a distinct statement of a particular fact is made in the recital of a bond, or other instrument under seal, and a contract is made with reference to that recital, it is unquestionably true, that, as between the parties to that instrument, and in an action upon it, it is not competent for the party bound to deny the recital, notwithstanding what Lord Coke says on the matter of recital in Coke Littleton, 352 b; and a recital in instruments not under seal may be such as to be conclusive to the same extent. A strong instance as to a recital in a deed, is found in the case of Lainson v. Tremere,<sup>1</sup> where, in a bond to secure the payment of rent under a lease stated, it was recited that the lease was at a rent of 170*l.*, and the defendant was estopped from pleading that it was 140*l.* only, and that such amount had been paid. So, where other particular facts are mentioned in a condition to a bond, as that the obligor and his wife should appear, the obligor cannot plead that he appeared himself, and deny that he is married, in an action on the bond.<sup>2</sup> All the instances given in Com. Dig., Estoppel, A. 2, under the head of 'Estoppel by Matter of Writing' (except one which relates to a release), are cases of estoppel in actions on the instrument in which the admissions are contained. By his contract in the instrument itself a party is assuredly bound, and must fulfil it. But there is no authority to show that a party to the instrument would be estopped, in an action by the other party, not founded on the deed, and wholly collateral to it,<sup>3</sup> to dispute the facts so admitted, though the recitals would certainly be evidence; for instance, in another suit, though between the same parties, where a question should arise whether the plaintiff held at a rent of 170*l.* in the one case, or was married in the other case, it could not be held that the recitals in the bond were conclusive evidence of these facts. Still less would matter alleged in the instrument, wholly immaterial to the contract therein contained; as, for instance, suppose an indenture or bond to contain an unnecessary description of one of the parties as assignee of a bankrupt, overseer of the poor, or as filling any other character, it could not be contended that such statement would be conclusive on the other party, in any other proceeding between them."

§ 85. From this passage it would appear that, to make a recital operate as an estoppel, there must be, first, a distinct statement<sup>1</sup> of some material<sup>2</sup> particular<sup>3</sup> fact; secondly, a contract made with reference to such statement;<sup>4</sup> and, thirdly, either an action directly founded on the instrument containing the recital, or one which is brought to enforce the rights arising out of such instrument.<sup>5</sup> In the event of these requisites being satisfied, it would further seem, that the doctrine may, in some cases, be extended to instruments not under seal. In all cases of estoppel by recital, the matter recited requires no proof; since the recital is not offered as secondary, but as primary evidence, which cannot be controverted, and which forms a muniment of title. This rule, however, only applies to so much of a deed as is actually recited; and therefore if it becomes necessary to rely on any

<sup>2</sup> In Carpenter v. Buller, 8 M. & W. 213, the court were strongly inclined to think that, in a deed relating to an adit, a recital that certain neighbouring lands, through which the adit did not pass, belonged to A. B., was an immaterial matter, which a party to the deed was not estopped from denying. The point, however, was not directly decided, as the admission was held inconclusive on other grounds.

<sup>4</sup> In Stronghill v. Buck, 14 Q. B. 787, the court thus stated the law:—"Where a recital is intended to be a statement, which all the parties to the deed have mutually agreed to admit as true, it is an estoppel upon all. But where it is intended to be the statement of one party only, the estoppel is confined to that party, and the intention is to be gathered from construing the instrument." See, also, Young v. Raincock, 7 Com. B. 310.

§ 86. Returning from the limited question of recitals to the general doctrine of estoppels, it is important to bear in mind this rule: that every estoppel must be reciprocal; that is, it must bind both parties, since a stranger can neither take advantage of an estoppel, nor be bound by it.<sup>2</sup> Thus, where a party, possessed of chambers in Lincoln's Inn, which he held as tenant-at-will under the benchers, recited in a deed, by which he conveyed his interest to A., that he was seised of these chambers for life, and subsequently surrendered them to the benchers, who admitted B. as tenant, the court held that B., in defending an action of ejectment brought against him by A., was not estopped from denying that the surrenderor was seised for life.<sup>3</sup> So, where a tenant took certain lands from the assignees of a bankrupt, by a deed in which they were described as freehold, he was held not estopped, as against the bankrupt's wife, who claimed dower, from proving that they were in fact leasehold.<sup>4</sup> So, a conviction on an indictment for obstructing a public highway cannot be pleaded as an estoppel in an action brought by the party convicted against a third person for using the way.<sup>5</sup> Again, the grantee, or lessee of a deed-poll, is not, in general, estopped from gainsaying anything mentioned in the deed; for it is the deed of the grantor or lessor only; yet if such grantee or lessee claim title under the deed, he is thereby estopped to deny the title of the grantor.<sup>6</sup> An exception to this rule requiring reciprocity in estoppels would perhaps be recognised in the case of deed-polls, because in these instruments only one party is intended to be bound, and as he has executed a deed with the same solemnities as an indenture, no valid reason can be urged why the doctrine of estoppel should not apply to him.<sup>7</sup>

§ 87. A further rule with respect to estoppels by deed is this, that a deed which can take effect by interest shall not be construed to take effect by estoppel.<sup>1</sup> Thus, if a lessor has any interest in the demised premises, even though it be for a less period than he professes to grant, the lease shall not work by estoppel, but shall enure to the extent of the lessor's interest, and no further.<sup>2</sup> But if a person, having no title whatever, makes a lease by indenture, this will estop the parties to the deed from alleging the lessor's want of title during the continuance of the lease; and if the lessor subsequently purchases the land, or otherwise obtains an interest in it, the lease which was originally a lease by estoppel, will be converted into a lease in interest, and the heir or assignee of the lessor will be bound thereby, as well as the lessee and his assignees.<sup>3</sup>

be admissible as part of the tenant's case, if he could show that the party claiming as devisee had been guilty of fraud in making the will, and in falsely representing it to him as a valid one;<sup>1</sup> but, excepting in the instance of a clear case of fraud being established, the only course which a tenant can pursue, who wishes to dispute the title of the landlord under whom he entered, is to yield up the premises, and then bring ejectment.<sup>2</sup> So strict is this rule, that, even should a landlord, while proving his own case, in an action against the tenant for use and occupation, disclose the fact that he himself had only an equitable or a joint estate in the premises, the tenant cannot avail himself of that circumstance as a defence to the action.<sup>3</sup> Neither can a lessee, who has once accepted a lease and paid rent under it, dispute the lessor's title, though the deed itself admits upon its face some infirmity in that title.<sup>4</sup> And where a tenant has held premises under a corporation aggregate, and paid rent, he cannot object to their suing him for use and occupation, on the ground that a corporation cannot demise except by deed, and that he has occupied without deed.<sup>5</sup> This rule, too, is applicable in an action of trespass, as well as in ejectment;<sup>6</sup> and it is binding, not only on the tenant himself, but on all who claim in any way through him.<sup>7</sup> Thus, where a lessee gave up possession of the premises to a party claiming them by a title adverse to that of the lessor, and prior to the lease, that party was held to be estopped, as the lessee would have been, from disputing the landlord's

§ 89. But though a tenant cannot deny that the person by whom he was let into possession had title at the commencement of the tenancy, he may show that he had no title at a previous time. Thus, where in ejectment the defendant claimed under a conveyance from a certain company, bearing date 1824, he was allowed to dispute the title of the company to convey the same premises to the lessor of the plaintiff in 1818.<sup>3</sup> So, where a lessee had been let into possession in 1826 under a demise from a tenant for life, and after the death of the tenant for life an ejectment was brought against him by the reversioner, on the ground that the lease was void, the court, while they admitted that the interests of the tenant for life and of the reversioner were so far identical as to preclude the lessee from showing adverse title in another at the date of the lease, allowed him to prove that, before the year 1826, the legal estate was outstanding in a third party, and that, consequently, the reversioner, who claimed in common with the tenant for life under a settlement of a much earlier date, had no legal title to the premises.<sup>4</sup> Again, a tenant may prove that, since the commencement of the tenancy, the title of his lessor has expired or been defeated.<sup>5</sup> Thus, he may prove that his landlord was a tenant pur auter vie, and that the cestui que vie is dead; or that he was a tenant from year to year, and that the superior landlord had given him a notice to quit, or that he was a mere tenant at will, and that the will had been determined.<sup>1</sup> So, also, the tenant may show, that the person who let him in was a mortgagor in possession, who, not being treated as a trespasser, had title to confer on him the legal possession; and he may then further prove that this party has subsequently been treated as a trespasser, whereby both the mortgagor's title, as well as his own rightful possession under him, have been determined.<sup>2</sup> In short, he may rely on any fact, which either amounts to an eviction by title paramount,<sup>3</sup> or shows that the title of his landlord has expired.<sup>4</sup>

§ 90. As to what constitutes a letting into possession, some doubt exists. In one case, where a party was in possession of premises without leave obtained from any one, and a person came to him and said, "You have no right to the premises," upon which he acquiesced, and took a lease from this person, the court held that the relation of landlord and tenant was sufficiently created to debar the one from disputing the title of the other.<sup>5</sup>

On replevin, arowry, and plea in bar stating the above facts, held that A.'s title had expired; that his conduct was an admission of that fact, and that B. was not estopped from alleging it; and per *Ld. But in a subsequent case, where a tenant, being already in possession of premises under a demise from a termor, had at the expiration of the termor's right, when his own title also expired, entered into a parol agreement with another party to hold the premises under him ; but it appeared that he had done so in ignorance of the real facts of the case, and under the supposition that this party was entitled to the premises ; it was held that the agreement was not equivalent to the first letting into possession.<sup>1</sup> This question may, in certain cases, become highly important, because neither a parol agreement by a tenant to hold premises of a party, by whom he was not let into possession,<sup>2</sup> nor an attornment,<sup>3</sup> nor an actual payment of rent to such party, even under a distress,<sup>4</sup> will in themselves operate as estoppels ; but the tenant may still show that he has acted in ignorance, or under a misapprehension of the real circumstances,<sup>5</sup> or, in the case of payment of rent, that some other party was entitled to receive it.<sup>6</sup>

§ 93.<sup>3</sup> Conclusive presumptions are not unknown to the law of nations. Thus, if a neutral vessel be found carrying despatches of the enemy between different parts of the enemy's dominions, their effect is presumed to be hostile,<sup>4</sup> at least if they have been fraudulently concealed. The spoliation of papers by the captured party has been regarded, in all the States of Continental Europe, as conclusive proof of guilt; but in England and America such an act is open to explanation, unless the cause otherwise labours under grave suspicion, or the surrounding circumstances establish a case of bad faith or of gross prevarication.<sup>5</sup> Still, though our law, in its lenity, does not found on the mere spoliation of papers an absolute presumption of guilt, it only stops short of that result; for a case that escapes with such a brand upon it, is saved, as it were, from the fire.<sup>6</sup> Again, the maritime law recognises a presumption all but conclusive against any vessel, which has been captured while entering a blockaded port; and the only mode by which the owner can protect the ship from being condemned as lawful prize, is by establishing a justification on the ground of imperative necessity.<sup>7</sup> When a ship, too, is condemned for breach of blockade, the cargo almost inevitably follows the same fate; for the law conclusively presumes that the owners of the cargo were privy to the intention of violating the blockade, unless they can prove that, at the time when the shipment was made, they could not have known that the blockade had been imposed.<sup>8</sup>

§ 94.<sup>1</sup> In these cases of conclusive presumption, the rule of law merely attaches itself to the circumstances when proved ; it is not deduced from them. It is not a rule of inference from testimony, but a rule of protection, as expedient, and for the general good. It does not, for example, assume that all landlords have good titles ; but that it will be a public inconvenience to suffer tenants to dispute them. Neither does it assume that all averments and recitals in deeds and records are true ; but that it will be mischievous if parties are permitted to deny them. It does not assume that all simple contract debts, of six years' standing, are paid, nor that every man quietly occupying land twenty years as his own, has a valid title by grant ; but it deems it expedient that claims opposed by such evidence as the lapse of those periods affords, should not be countenanced ; and it considers that society is more benefited by a refusal to entertain such claims, than by suffering them to be made good by proof. In fine, it does not assume the impossibility of things which are possible ; on the contrary, it is founded, not only on the possibility of their existence, but on their occasional occurrence ; and it is against the mischiefs of their occurrence that it interposes its protecting prohibition.<sup>2</sup>

§ 95.<sup>3</sup> The second class of presumptions of law, answering to the præsumptiones juris of the Roman law, which may always be overcome by opposing proof,<sup>4</sup> consists of those termed disputable presumptions. These, as well as the former, are the result of the general experience of a connexion between certain facts or things, the one being usually found to be the companion, or the effect, of the other. The connexion, however, in this class is not so intimate, or so uniform, as to be conclusively presumed to exist in every case ; yet it is so general, that the law itself, without the aid of a jury, infers the one fact from the proved existence of the other, in the absence of all opposing evidence. In this mode the law defines the nature and amount of the evidence which is sufficient to establish a primâ facie case, and to throw the burthen of proof on the other party ; and if no opposing evidence is offered, the jury are bound to find in favour of the presumption. A contrary verdict might be set aside as being against evidence.

§ 97. Such being the nature of disputable presumptions of law, it is obvious that, theoretically, they differ from mere presumptions of fact in three important particulars. In the first place, the judge is bound to explain to the jury whatever legal presumptions arise from the facts proved ;<sup>2</sup> next, the jury are bound to give full weight to the presumptions so explained ; and lastly, the court alone, without the intervention of the jury, may draw the proper legal inferences, whenever the requisite facts are developed in the pleadings.<sup>3</sup> In practice, however, the distinction between the two species of presumptions is by no means well defined, and the line of demarcation, even when visible at all, is often overlooked.<sup>4</sup> A presumption which is regarded by some judges as one of law, is treated by others as one of fact ; nay, the same judges place the same presumption at different times in different classes, as if for the purpose of illustrating “ the blessings,” which one of their body has declared that “ we enjoy, in rules capable of flexible interpretation.”<sup>5</sup> The following remarks, which principally apply to disputable presumptions of law, will be found occasionally to extend, from motives of convenience, to cogent presumptions of fact.

§ 97 A. One of the most important legal presumptions is that of innocence. This presumption, which in legal phraseology, "gives the benefit of a doubt to the accused," is so cogent, that it cannot be repelled by any evidence short of what is sufficient to establish the fact of criminality with moral certainty.<sup>1</sup> In mere civil disputes, when no violation of the law is in question, and no legal presumption operates in favour of either party, the preponderance of probability, due regard being had to the burthen of proof, may constitute sufficient ground for a verdict;<sup>2</sup> but to affix on any person the stigma of crime requires a higher degree of assurance; and juries will not be justified in taking such a step, except on evidence which excludes from their minds all reasonable doubt.<sup>3</sup> It has sometimes been asserted with more or less precision, that the presumption in question is confined to the criminal courts, being there specially adopted in favour of life and liberty, for the protection of persons who cannot be heard in their own defence, and as a safeguard against error in convictions which are not open to revision.<sup>4</sup> But this would seem to be a mistake. The arguments just cited are admirable reasons for urging juries to exercise more than ordinary caution in the investigation of grave offences, but the presumption itself appears to rest on a broader basis. The right which every man has to his character, the value of that character to himself and his family, and the evil consequences that would result to society if charges of guilt were lightly entertained, or readily established in courts of justice: these are the real considerations which have led to the adoption of the rule that all imputations of crime must be strictly proved. The rule, then, is recognised alike by all tribunals, whether civil or criminal, and is equally effective in all proceedings, whether the question of guilt be directly or incidentally raised.<sup>5</sup> For example, if an action be brought against an insurance company to recover a loss by fire, and the defendants plead that the plaintiff wilfully burnt down the premises, the jury, before they find a verdict against the plaintiff, must be satisfied that the crime imputed to him was proved by as clear evidence as would justify a conviction for arson.<sup>1</sup> So, the offence of forgery or bigamy must be established by the same strict evidence, whether the question arises in a penal court on a prosecution for any such crime, or in a civil court on a plea of justification to a libel.<sup>2</sup>

question respecting the settlement of these children, were justified in presuming that the first husband was dead at the time of the second marriage, though, had it not been for the presumption of innocence, that of the continuance of life would have prevailed.<sup>1</sup> So, on a trial for bigamy, where a woman had married again only four years after she had separated from her first husband, the court held that the law could not presume the continuance of the first husband's life, but that it was a question of fact for the jury whether he was alive or dead at the date of the second marriage.<sup>2</sup> But, in another case, where the point in issue was the derivative settlement of a man's second wife, and a letter was proved to have been written by the first wife from Van Diemen's Land, bearing date only twenty-five days prior to the second marriage, the court confirmed the order of Sessions, which rested on the presumption that the husband had been guilty of bigamy.<sup>3</sup>

§ 100. An exception to this rule respecting the presumption of innocence, is admitted in some cases of agency; the principle of law being, both in criminal and civil cases, that a person is liable for what is done under his presumed authority.<sup>4</sup> Thus, on an indictment against a contract baker for selling unwholesome bread, where it appeared that the defendant allowed his foreman to use alum, though not in such quantities as to render the bread unwholesome, Lord Ellenborough held that he might legally be convicted, on proof that the servant had introduced alum into the bread to a deleterious extent.<sup>5</sup> So, the directors of a gas company were held criminally answerable, on an indictment for a nuisance, for an act done by their superintendent and engineer, under a general authority to manage the works, though they were personally ignorant of the particular plan adopted, and though such plan was a departure from the original and understood method, which the directors had no reason to suppose was discontinued.<sup>1</sup> In like manner,<sup>2</sup> where a libel is sold in a bookseller's shop by his servant in the ordinary course of his employment, this is evidence of a guilty publication by the master; though, in general, an authority to commit a breach of the law is not to be presumed. This exception is founded upon public policy, lest irresponsible persons should be put forward, and the principal and real offender should escape. But such evidence is not conclusive against the master, who may still prove, under the plea of not guilty, that the publication was in fact made "without his authority, consent, or knowledge," and that there was "no want of care or caution on his part."<sup>3</sup> The same law is applied to the publishers of newspapers,<sup>4</sup> and to the owners of alkali works.<sup>5</sup>

§ 101.<sup>6</sup> The presumption of innocence may be overthrown, and a presumption of guilt be raised, by the misconduct of the party in suppressing or destroying evidence, which he ought to produce, or to which the other party is entitled.<sup>7</sup> Thus, the spoliation of papers, material to show the neutral character of a vessel, furnishes a strong presumption, in odium spoliatoris, against the ship's neutrality.<sup>1</sup> So, if any person on board a vessel, which is being chased by an officer of the preventive service, shall throw overboard, stave, or destroy any part of the lading, the vessel shall be forfeited, because the conduct of such person raises an almost irresistible presumption that the freight so made away with was legally liable to seizure.<sup>2</sup> So, the concealment on board a vessel of any goods, which are liable to duty, justifies the inference that the owner intended to defraud the customs, and the goods will consequently be forfeited.<sup>3</sup> A similar presumption is raised against a party, who, having obtained possession of papers from a witness, after the service of a subpoena duces tecum upon the latter for their production, withholds them at the trial.<sup>4</sup> The general rule is omnia præsumuntur contra spoliatorem.<sup>5</sup> His conduct is attributed to his supposed knowledge that the truth would have operated against him. Thus, also, where the finder of a lost jewel would not produce it, the jury, under the direction of the judge, presumed against him, that it was of the highest value of its kind.<sup>6</sup> But if the defendant has been guilty of no fraud or improper conduct, and the only evidence against him is of the delivery to him of the plaintiff's goods, of unknown quality, the presumption is that they were goods of the cheapest quality.<sup>7</sup>

burying, or by any other way, to conceal his death, she was presumed to have murdered it, unless she could prove by one witness at the least that the child was born dead. This Act was probably copied from a similar edict of H. 2 of France, cited by Domat. But this unreasonable and barbarous rule is now rescinded both in England and America. § 102.<sup>1</sup> The mere fabrication of evidence does not furnish of itself any presumption of law against the innocence of the party, but is a matter to be dealt with by the jury. Innocent persons, under the influence of terror from the danger of their situation, have been sometimes led to the simulation of exculpatory facts ; of which several instances are stated in the books.<sup>2</sup> Again, the exercise by a client of his undoubted right to prevent his solicitor from disclosing confidential communications, can form no just ground for adverse presumption against him.<sup>3</sup> Neither has the mere nonproduction of deeds or papers, upon notice, any other legal effect in general, than to admit the other party to prove their contents by parol,<sup>4</sup> and, as against the party refusing to produce them, to raise a prima facie presumption that they have been properly stamped.<sup>5</sup> It cannot, however, be denied, but that such conduct, in the absence of all excuse, is calculated to produce in the minds of the jury a very prejudicial effect against any person having recourse to it ;<sup>6</sup> and if such person be charged with fraud or other misconduct, and the production of his papers would establish his guilt or innocence, the jury will be amply justified in presuming him guilty from the unexplained fact of their nonproduction.<sup>7</sup> On the same principle, jurors will do well to regard with suspicion the conduct of any party, who, having it in his power to produce cogent evidence in support of his case, is content to offer testimony of a weaker and less satisfactory character.<sup>8</sup>

appears.<sup>1</sup> Thus, on a charge of murder, malice is presumed from the fact of killing, unaccompanied by circumstances of extenuation; and the burthen of disproving the malice is thrown upon the accused.<sup>2</sup> So, if an unauthorised party, with the view of raising money, has put the name of another person to a bill, a felonious intent will be presumed, unless the accused had reasonable grounds for believing that he was authorised to act as he did, and in fact acted on that belief.<sup>3</sup> The same presumption arises in civil actions, where the act complained of is unlawful. Thus, in actions of slander, though it should appear that the defendant was not actuated by ill-will against the plaintiff, malice in law will be inferred from the fact of intentional publication, unless the defendant can show that his language was excusable as a privileged communication, in which case the plaintiff must establish actual malice, and in order to do so, must, either by extrinsic or by intrinsic evidence,<sup>4</sup> prove facts which are inconsistent with bona fides.<sup>5</sup> This distinction rests upon the ground

<sup>1</sup> Ld. Mansfield has, in clear language, pointed out the distinction between those cases, where a criminal intent must be proved, and those where it will be presumed:—"Where an act, in itself indifferent, if done with a particular intent becomes criminal, there the intent must be proved and found; but where the act is in itself unlawful, the proof of justification or excuse lies on the defendant; and in failure thereof, the law implies a criminal intent." *R. v. In this last case, which was an action for words spoken of the plaintiffs in their business as bankers, the law of implied or legal malice, as distinguished from malice in fact, was clearly expounded by Bayley, J., in the following terms:—"Malice, in the common acceptation, means ill-will against a person; but in its legal sense it means a wrongful act, done intentionally, without just cause or excuse. If I give a perfect stranger a blow likely to produce death, I do it of malice, because I do it intentionally, that, when words are proved to have been spoken on a justifiable occasion, the law raises an antagonistic presumption, that the speaker was actuated by proper motives.<sup>1</sup> So, in other actions on the case, as for a malicious arrest, a malicious prosecution, and the like, the fact that the defendant has had recourse to legal proceedings raises a prima facie inference in his favour, which the plaintiff is bound to rebut by proving the absence of all reasonable and probable cause, and the presence of an actual malicious intent.<sup>2</sup>

and without just cause or excuse. If I maim cattle, without knowing whose they are; if I poison a fishery, without knowing the owner, I do it of malice, because it is a wrongful act, and done intentionally. * * If I traduce a man, whether I know him or not, and whether I intend to do him an injury or not, I apprehend the law considers it as done of malice, because it is wrongful and intentional. It equally works an injury, whether I mean to produce an injury or not, and if I had no legal excuse for the slander, why is he not to have a remedy against me for the injury it produces? And I apprehend the law recognises the distinction between these two descriptions of malice, malice in fact, and malice in law, in actions of slander. In an ordinary action for words, it is sufficient to charge, that the defendant spoke them falsely; it is not necessary to state that they were spoken maliciously. This is so laid down in Sty. 392, and was adjudged upon error in Mercer v. Sparkes, Owen, 51; Noy, 35. The objection there was, that the words were not charged to have been spoken maliciously, but the court answered, that the words were themselves malicious and slanderous, and, therefore, the judgment was affirmed. But in actions for such slander as is prima facie excusable on account of the cause of speaking or writing it, as in the case of servants' characters, confidential advice, or communications to persons who ask it, or have a right to expect it, malice in fact must be proved by the plaintiff, and in Edmondson v. Stevenson, B. N. P. 8, Ld. Mansfield takes the distinction between these and ordinary actions of slander." In an action for an alleged libel contained in an answer to inquiries respecting the character of a servant, the jury may find express malice from the simple fact, that the answer complained of was untrue to the defendant's knowledge; Fountain v. Boodle, 3 Q. B. 5.

rated by a non-tidal<sup>1</sup> river, the mid-stream is the presumptive boundary between them.<sup>2</sup> Again, the owner of a several fishery, when the terms of the grant are unknown, is presumed to be the owner of the soil.<sup>3</sup> The law, too, presumes that the soil of unnavigable rivers, usque ad medium filum aquæ, together with the right of fishing, but not the right of abridging the width, or interfering with the course, of the stream,<sup>4</sup> belongs to the owner of the adjacent land; <sup>5</sup> while, in navigable rivers and arms of the sea, the soil primâ facie is vested in the Crown, and the fishery primâ facie is public.<sup>6</sup> Similar presumptions are recognised in respect of land lying on the sea-shore; that which is covered by the ordinary high water—or to speak more accurately, by the medium high tide between the spring and the neap,<sup>7</sup>—is presumed primâ facie to be the property of the Crown, though by grant or prescription it may belong to the lord of the manor, or to any other subject;<sup>8</sup> but, on the other hand, that part of the shore which is overflowed only at spring tide, is presumed to be vested in the proprietor of the adjoining lands.<sup>9</sup> So, land between high and low water mark, though forming part of the body of the adjoining county,<sup>1</sup> is prima facie presumed to be extra-parochial;<sup>2</sup> and this presumption applies to an estuary or arm of the sea,<sup>3</sup> and also to the shore of a tidal river, as well as to the main sea-shore.<sup>4</sup> Again, waste land on the sides, and the soil to the middle, of a highway, are presumed to belong to the owner of the adjoining inclosed land, whether he be a freeholder, leaseholder, or copyholder.<sup>5</sup> This rule, being founded on a supposition that the proprietor of the adjoining land, at some former period, gave up to the public for passage all the land between his inclosure and the middle of the road,<sup>6</sup> is liable to be rebutted by showing that the road was originally dedicated by some other party;<sup>7</sup> and the presumption may also be repelled by proof that the lord of the manor, or even that a stranger, has exercised acts of ownership, either over the spot in dispute, or over other waste land in immediate connexion with it.<sup>8</sup> The presumption just referred to as prevailing in the case of a public highway, will also be recognised in the case of a private occupation road running between two properties; and, in the absence of all evidence of acts of ownership, the soil of the road will be deemed to belong to the owners of the adjoining lands in equal moieties; that is, each owner will be presumed to be the proprietor of the soil usque ad medium filum viæ.<sup>9</sup> The mere fact that the owner of a field has a private right of way over a lane leading only to that field, affords no presumption that the soil of the lane is vested in him.<sup>1</sup> As to roads set out under the first general Inclosure Act, "the herbage and grass arising therefrom" are conclusively presumed to belong to the proprietors of the adjoining lands;<sup>2</sup> and as to those made under the later Act of William the Fourth, the commissioners are directed to award "the grass and herbage growing and renewing upon" them to such persons as in their judgment are best entitled to the same.<sup>3</sup> But both Acts are silent respecting the ownership of the soil, and it seems that as to that, no legal presumption can arise in favour of the proprietors of the neighbouring allotments.<sup>4</sup>

§ 105. Where fields belonging to different owners are separated by a hedge and ditch, the hedge primâ facie belongs to the owner of the field in which the ditch is not; but if there are two ditches, one on each side, the ownership of the hedge must depend upon evidence of acts of ownership.<sup>5</sup> The common user of a wall separating lands or houses which belong to different proprietors, is primâ facie evidence that the wall, and the land on which it stands, belong to them in equal moieties as tenants in common.<sup>6</sup> But this presumption may be rebutted by showing that the wall in fact stands on land, parts of which were separately contributed by each proprietor.<sup>7</sup> Where a tree grows on the boundary of two fields, so that the roots extend into the soil of each, the property in the tree is presumed to belong to the owner of that land in which it was first sown or planted.<sup>8</sup> In the work of Mr. Callis on Sewers,<sup>9</sup> a distinction is drawn between a bank and a wall; the former, support of the other;<sup>1</sup> and although this doctrine does not extend to a case where, by the erection of buildings, an additional weight has been put upon the land,<sup>2</sup> yet the law will presume the grant of an easement entitling the grantor to have his house supported by the soil of his neighbour's property, if the house has been built for more than twenty years.<sup>3</sup> So, where a landowner has built two or more houses adjoining each other, so as to require mutual support, or mutual drainage, and has afterwards parted with his interest in the several houses to different persons, the law will, in general,<sup>4</sup> presume either a grant or reservation, that will entitle each owner to have his house supported by,<sup>5</sup> or drained through,<sup>6</sup> the adjoining buildings. Where, however, a dock and a wharf had belonged to the same owner, and the bowsprits of vessels in the dock had for many years projected over a part of the wharf, the court held, that, in a subsequent grant of the wharf, the law would not imply a reservation in favour of the vendor of the right for the bowsprits to project over the wharf as before.<sup>7</sup>

§ 107. The law also presumes primâ facie that the lord of a manor is entitled to all waste lands within the manor; and therefore it is not essentially necessary that he should show acts of ownership upon them.<sup>8</sup> It is now, too, clearly established, though the point was formerly much doubted,<sup>1</sup> that when a tenant encroaches upon the waste contiguous to his farm and incloses it, he is to be presumed, in the absence of facts proving a contrary intention, to have thus acted for the benefit of his landlord.<sup>2</sup> This presumption will be recognised even though the lands inclosed be the property of a stranger;<sup>3</sup> but it will doubtless be much strengthened, if the landlord of the farm be also the lord of the waste.<sup>4</sup>

§ 108. As men generally own the property they possess, proof of possession is presumptive proof of ownership.<sup>5</sup> This presumption is recognised in the Factors' Acts,<sup>6</sup> in the Irish, Scotch, and English Acts relating to injuries done by dogs to sheep,<sup>7</sup> and also in most of the statutes which authorise the compulsory sale of lands for particular purposes; as, for instance, in the Lands' Clauses Consolidation Act.<sup>8</sup> At common law, too, it may be illustrated by a great variety of cases. Thus, in an action on a policy of insurance effected on a ship and her cargo, the plaintiff may rely on the mere fact of possession, without the aid of any documentary proof or title deeds, unless such further proof be rendered necessary by the opposite party adducing some contrary evidence.<sup>1</sup> This rule applies both to real and personal property, and, in the former case, raises a presumption of a seisin in fee.<sup>2</sup> In actions of trespass to real property, the presumption arising from the simple fact of possession amounts, as against a mere wrong-doer, to conclusive evidence ;<sup>3</sup> and if an action be brought for an injury done to the reversion of an estate, proof of the receipt of rent<sup>4</sup> by the plaintiff will, unless the sum annually received be so small as to raise a presumption that it is a mere quit rent,<sup>5</sup> be sufficient evidence of his title to the reversion as against all the world, except the real owner and persons claiming under him.<sup>6</sup> So, also, in actions against wrong-doers for injuries to personal chattels, proof of possession, when coupled with evidence that the plaintiff has some special property in such chattels, has long been held to constitute a complete title.<sup>7</sup> Therefore, an undischarged bankrupt may probably still, as under the old law,<sup>8</sup> sue in trover a wrong-doer who has taken goods out of his custody; for although the trustee may take possession of his after-acquired property, yet if he allows the bankrupt to treat such property as his own, no third person can cover his own default by setting up a title, upon which the trustee himself does not think fit to insist. So, possession of a ship under a transfer from the rightful owner, which is void for non-compliance with the register

Acts, constitutes a sufficient title in the plaintiff to support an action of trover against a stranger, for converting a part of the ship which was wrecked.<sup>1</sup> So, even a general bailment will suffice, without being made for any special purpose, but only for the benefit of the rightful owner.<sup>2</sup> In Ireland, too, a mere naked possession will entitle a party to maintain trover as against a wrong-doer,<sup>3</sup> and the same doctrine has been acted upon in the English Court of Queen's Bench.<sup>4</sup>

§ 109. Many cases also show, that an apparent stranger to a document may be so far connected with it by the fact of producing it, as to make it ample primâ facie evidence for a jury in support of his claim.<sup>5</sup> Thus, the production by a plaintiff of an I O U signed by the defendant, though not addressed to any one by name, is, in general,<sup>6</sup> abundant evidence, not indeed of money lent, of which it furnishes no proof whatever,<sup>7</sup> but of an account stated between the parties.<sup>8</sup> So, if a letter be given in evidence with the direction torn off, the jury will do well to presume, primâ facie, that it was addressed to the party who produces it.<sup>9</sup>

§ 110. In actions of ejectment, though it is an inflexible rule that the plaintiff must recover by the strength of his own legal title, yet proof of a prior possession, however short, will be primâ facie evidence of title as against a wrong-doer.<sup>10</sup> Thus, where a party received the key of a room from the lessor of the plaintiff, and held the premises for about a year, when the defendant broke in at night and took forcible possession, Lord Tenterden held that the plaintiff was entitled to recover.<sup>1</sup> In another case of ejectment, where the lessor of the plaintiff proved that he had formerly held the premises for twenty-three years, and during that time had received and increased the rent, the court held that the defendant could not rebut the presumption of a seisin in fee arising from these unequivocal acts of ownership, by showing that he himself had subsequently been in possession for a period less than twenty years, for presumption being thus met by presumption, the defendant was bound to establish, if he could, a title of a higher description.<sup>2</sup> In some cases it will be presumed, that the fee-simple of the land carries with it the right to the minerals;<sup>3</sup> but this presumption is not universal, since in mining districts the right to the minerals and the fee-simple of the soil are frequently in different persons; and it may at all times be rebutted by showing, either an absence of enjoyment of the minerals by the owner of the soil, or an actual user of the minerals by a stranger.<sup>4</sup> The law also presumes primâ facie, that the tenant of the surface is tenant of the subjacent strata, but this presumption, like the last, is liable to be defeated, by proof that the surface and the subsoil have been dissevered in title, and have become separate tenements.<sup>5</sup>

§ 111. The presumption of title arising from possession will be obviously much strengthened by proof of uninterrupted enjoyment for a considerable time. In many cases, as before observed,<sup>6</sup>

the legislature has fixed what periods of undisturbed possession will suffice to confer an absolute title; and in these cases, when the party by his pleading shows that he relies upon the statutory limitation, no lapse of time but that of the full period fixed by Act of Parliament will justify a presumption in support of the claim.<sup>1</sup> But if, instead of depending upon the statute-law, the party rests his case, as he may do, upon common-law presumption, or a lost grant, the fact of enjoyment for a less period than the statutory number of years, when coupled with other circumstances, will warrant a jury in finding a verdict in his favour.<sup>2</sup>

§ 112. In other cases, to which the statutes of limitation do not extend, the same principles of presumptive evidence apply, though they are necessarily open to a more vague interpretation. For instance, though a plaintiff in ejectment is bound, as we have just seen,<sup>3</sup> to establish his own title, he will not be required to prove strictly every successive link in it, provided that the property has been long in his possession. If, therefore, he claims under a feoffment, and can show that he has had uninterrupted enjoyment of the premises for twenty years, the court and jury will presume, in his favour, that the necessary formalities of a livery of seisin have been complied with.<sup>4</sup> But this presumption will not be raised where the land has been held for a less period than twenty years,<sup>5</sup> nor will it, where the acts of the parties, or the other facts in the case, lead to a different inference.<sup>6</sup> Again, without any direct proof of the passing of a bye-law, or the loss of it, the court will infer its existence from a usage of long standing; for where rights have been exercised in a particular manner

for many years without interruption, it is only reasonable to presume that they have had a legal origin.<sup>1</sup>

§ 113. The maxim, ex diuturnitate temporis omnia præsumuntur ritè et solemniter esse acta, is of great value, and has been applied to a variety of cases. Under certain circumstances this presumption assumes a conclusive character. One instance has already been furnished<sup>2</sup> in the case of ancient documents, the due execution of which will be presumed on their mere production. The American courts recognise other applications of the rule. Thus, after<sup>3</sup> the lapse of twenty years, they conclusively presume, in favour of every judicial tribunal which has acted within its jurisdiction, that all persons interested in its proceedings have had due notice.<sup>4</sup> So, it has been held in the United States, that where an authority is given by law to executors, guardians, and other officers, to make sales of lands upon being duly licensed by the courts, and they are required to advertise the sales in a particular manner, and to observe other formalities, the lapse of sufficient time, which in most cases is fixed at thirty years, raises a conclusive presumption that all the legal formalities of the sale were observed.<sup>5</sup> The licence to sell, and the official character of the vendor, being provable by record or judicial registration, must in general be so proved; and the deed must also be proved in the usual manner; it is only the intermediate proceedings that are presumed. Probatis extremis, præsumuntur media.

§ 114. One of the most important applications of the presumption under review, is to cases where the rights of the Crown are concerned. Here,<sup>1</sup> though lapse of time does not of itself furnish a conclusive legal bar to the title of the Sovereign, agreeably to the mischievous maxim nullum tempus occurrit regi, yet, if the adverse claim could have had a legal commencement, juries are instructed or advised to presume such commencement, after many years of uninterrupted possession. Accordingly, royal grants, charters, and even Acts of Parliament, have not infrequently been thus found by the jury, after long continued peaceable enjoyment, accompanied by the usual acts of ownership.<sup>2</sup> So, the long enjoyment of port duties, tolls, customary dues, fees, or the like will, if the nature of the case admits of it,<sup>3</sup> be held to warrant the presumption of any fact necessary to make them legal:<sup>4</sup> and if distinct evidence of any such payments be given as far back as living memory goes, the jury, unless evidence to the contrary be shown, will be quite justified in presuming, or, rather, will be directed to presume, that such payments were immemorial, or at least were referable to a legal origin.<sup>5</sup> So, a series of acts of ownership exercised on the seashore by the adjoining proprietor, will afford abundant evidence for a jury to presume that the Crown formerly granted the soil to one of his ancestors;<sup>1</sup> and a similar inference may be drawn from the production of a royal grant conveying the right of wreck.<sup>2</sup> Again, notwithstanding the rule which provides that, in order to constitute a valid dedication to the public of a highway, the owner of the soil must intend to dedicate,<sup>3</sup> the uninterrupted user of a road by the public for forty or fifty years has been held amply sufficient to justify a presumption in favour of the original animus dedicandi, although there was ground for supposing that the soil of the highway was vested in the Crown.<sup>4</sup> Even a qualified or partial dedication of a way may be presumed in like manner from continuous use; and in a recent case in which, as far back as living memory went, the public had enjoyed a right of way across an arable field, and the owner had ploughed up the field including the path, it was presumed that the original dedication of the way was subject to the right of ploughing it up in due course of farming.<sup>5</sup> So,<sup>6</sup> after evidence of nearly forty years' possession of a tract of land, and proof of a prior order of council for its survey, and of an actual survey, an American jury has been instructed to presume that a patent had been duly issued.<sup>7</sup> In regard, however, to Crown and public grants, a longer period is generally deemed necessary, to justify this presumption, than in the case of grants from private persons.

§ 114A. The principles upon which, in cases of incorporeal hereditaments, grants may be presumed, as between private persons, from mere uninterrupted user and enjoyment, have recently been much discussed in Ireland; and it seems now to be finally settled, first, that juries in such cases should not be required to find as a fact that a deed of grant has been actually executed, but that, without believing any grant to have been made, they may often, under the instruction of the court, presume its existence for the simple purpose of quieting possession,<sup>1</sup>—and next, that this presumption may be sometimes raised even against a reversioner, provided it can be either directly proved, or reasonably inferred, that he has had full knowledge of his opponent's actual enjoyment of the right in question, and has tacitly assented thereto.<sup>2</sup> But still the presumption of a grant can only arise, when the person against whom the right is claimed might have interrupted or prevented the user relied on;<sup>3</sup> and, therefore, the grant of a right to the uninterrupted passage of air to a windmill from over the soil of a neighbour, cannot be presumed from an uninterrupted use of the mill for forty years.<sup>4</sup>

§ 115.<sup>5</sup> Juries are also sometimes advised, in more or less forcible terms, to presume conveyances of corporeal hereditaments between private individuals, in favour of the party who has proved a right to the beneficial ownership, and whose undisturbed possession, being consistent with the existence of the conveyance required to be presumed, affords reasonable ground for belief that the legal title has in fact been conveyed.<sup>6</sup> This presumption is

In such case, where the possession is shown to have been consistent with the existence of the fact directed to be presumed, and in such case only, has it ever been allowed.”

§ 116. Subject to these observations, the presumption in favour of a conveyance will, in general, be allowed to prevail, whenever it was the declared duty of trustees to convey to the beneficial owner at a specified time, as upon his attainment of the age of majority, or on the death of a cestui que vie, or after the payment of debts, legacies, portions, or the like; for in such cases it is reasonable to presume that the trustees have performed their duty, and done what a court of equity would compel them to do.<sup>3</sup> A like presumption will probably arise where the duty to convey, though not expressly declared, may constructively be gathered from the object of the trust; as, for instance, where an estate is vested in trustees for a temporary purpose, which has been attained, and no further intention is declared, or can reasonably be inferred, requiring the legal estate to remain outstanding.<sup>4</sup>

§ 117. It has been asserted, and probably with correctness, that this presumption will never be made against the owner of the inheritance, with the single exception of those cases where he has attempted to defeat the solemn acts of himself, or of those through whom he claims. Thus, if a mortgagor attempt to set up an outstanding fee as against a mortgagee for years, or the appointee of a devisee in fee dispute the former right of the deviser to grant a lease of the premises in question, on the ground that the legal estate was, at the time of the grant, outstanding in a trustee, the jury, in cases where the estoppel is not pleaded, may still presume a conveyance; for in the first case<sup>1</sup> the presumption will be made in favour of the honesty of the mortgagor at the time of the mortgage, though against his interest at the time of the trial; and in the second<sup>2</sup> it will equally prevail, in order to give validity and effect to the grant of the deviser, which would otherwise be void.

§ 118. Questions respecting this head of presumptions frequently arose in former times, when juries used to be called upon to presume the surrender of outstanding satisfied terms; <sup>3</sup> but by an excellent Act,<sup>4</sup> which was passed in the year 1845, these questions were finally settled. The Act, after reciting that "the assignment of satisfied terms has been found to be attended with great difficulty, delay, and expense, and to operate, in many cases, to the prejudice of the persons justly entitled to the lands to which they relate," enacts, that "every satisfied term of years, which either by express declaration or by construction of law,<sup>5</sup> shall, upon the 31st day of December, 1845, be attendant upon the inheritance or reversion of any land, shall on that day abso-

§ 119. Notwithstanding this Act, it is perfectly clear that no presumption can be allowed in favour of the surrender of a term which is still unsatisfied,<sup>2</sup> or the continuance of which is found in a special verdict, or admitted in a special case;<sup>3</sup> for whatever individual hardship may result from the rule of law that a plaintiff in ejectment must recover from the strength of his own legal title, it is obviously absurd to permit any inference to be drawn, which is directly opposed, either to the ascertained fact, or to all reasonable belief.<sup>4</sup>

<sup>1</sup> § 3 enacts, that "in the construction and for the purposes of this Act, unless there be something in the subject or context repugnant to such construction, the word 'lands' shall extend to all freehold tenements and hereditaments, whether corporeal or incorporeal, and to all such customary land as will pass by deed, or deed and admittance, and not by surrender, or any undivided part or share thereof respectively."

§ 120. A jury may also, under certain circumstances, presume the surrender of a lease by operation of law; for, although the production by the lessor of a cancelled lease will not warrant the presumption of such a surrender as will satisfy the Statute of Frauds:<sup>1</sup> yet when that fact was coupled with proof that a new lease had been granted to another party, who, like the former lessee, was a mere trustee for the same cestuis que trust, and it further appeared, that when leases were renewed from time to time, the usage was to send in the old lease to be cancelled in the lessor's office, the court held, that from these combined circumstances the jury might infer, that the second lease was granted with the assent of the former tenant, which, according to a recognised case,<sup>2</sup> was as valid a surrender of the first interest by operation of law, as if the former tenancy had been determined in writing.<sup>3</sup> So, the unexplained payment of an abated rent for thirty years by a tenant of premises, which were shown to have been leased to another party for an unexpired term, has been treated in Ireland as evidence from which a jury might presume the surrender of the original lease, and the creation of a new tenancy from year to year, at the abated rent, in favour of the present occupier.<sup>4</sup>

§ 121. The same principle has been applied to a variety of other matters. For example, where ejectment was brought to recover a messuage, which had been demised for a long term of years,—the lease containing a covenant by the lessee that the house should not be used as a shop without the written consent of the lessor, and a proviso for re-entry on the breach of such covenant,—the court held that, on proof of the uninterrupted user of the premises as a beershop for twenty years, the jury ought to be directed to presume that a license in writing had been duly given.<sup>5</sup> Indeed, it may be stated as a general proposition,<sup>6</sup>

that stale demands ought always to be regarded in courts of justice with jealous suspicion,<sup>1</sup> and that long acquiescence in any adverse claim of right is good ground, on which a jury may presume that the claim had a legal commencement;<sup>2</sup> since it is contrary to general experience for one man long to continue to pay money to another, or to perform any onerous duty, or to submit to any inconvenient claim, unless in pursuance of some contract, or other legal obligation.<sup>3</sup>

§ 122. The possession of stolen property recently after the commission of a theft, is primâ facie evidence that the possessor was either the thief, or the receiver, according to the other circumstances of the case;<sup>4</sup> and this presumption, when unexplained,<sup>5</sup> either by direct evidence, or by the character and habits of the possessor, or otherwise, is usually regarded by the jury as conclusive.<sup>6</sup> The question as to what amounts to recent possession, varies according as the stolen article is or is not calculated to pass readily from hand to hand. Thus, where two ends of woollen cloth in an unfinished state, consisting of about twenty yards each, were found in the possession of the prisoner two months after they had been stolen, Mr. Justice Patteson held that the prisoner should explain how he came by the property.<sup>7</sup> But, where the only evidence against a prisoner was, that certain tools had been traced to his possession three months after their loss,

Mr. Justice Parke directed an acquittal;<sup>1</sup> and Mr. Justice Maule pursued a similar course on an indictment for horse stealing, where it appeared that the horse was not discovered in the custody of the accused until after six months from the date of the robbery.<sup>2</sup> So, where goods, lost sixteen months before, were found in the prisoner's house, and no other evidence was adduced against him, he was not called upon for his defence.<sup>3</sup> Indeed, the finding of stolen property in the house of the accused, provided there were other inmates capable of committing the larceny, will of itself be insufficient to prove his possession, however recently the theft may have been effected;<sup>4</sup> though, if coupled with proof of other suspicious circumstances, it may fully warrant the prisoner's conviction, even though the property be not found in his house until after his apprehension.<sup>5</sup> This presumption, which in all cases is one of fact rather than of law, is occasionally so strong as to render unnecessary any direct proof of what is called the corpus delicti. Thus, to borrow an apt illustration from Mr. Justice Maule, if a man were to go into the London Docks quite sober, and shortly afterwards were found very drunk, staggering out of one of the cellars, in which above a million gallons of wine are stowed, "I think," says the learned judge,—and most persons will probably agree with him,—“that this would be reasonable evidence that the man had stolen some of

Abbott, C. J., observed, “The mere naked fact of the spirits being found in the defendant's house during his absence cannot be considered as conclusive evidence of knowledge to support a conviction on this statute. the wine in the cellar, though no proof were given that any particular vat had been broached, and that any wine had actually been missed."<sup>1</sup>

§ 123.<sup>2</sup> The presumption under discussion is not confined to cases of theft, but applies to all crimes, even the most penal. Thus, on an indictment for arson, proof that property, which was in the house at the time it was burnt, was soon afterwards found in the possession of the prisoner, has been held to raise a probable presumption that he was present and concerned in the offence.<sup>3</sup> A like inference has been raised in the case of murder, accompanied by robbery,<sup>4</sup> in the case of burglary,<sup>5</sup> and in the case of the possession of a quantity of counterfeit money.<sup>6</sup>

of the signatures of the defendant, and of the Master in Chancery before whom the answer purported to have been sworn, has been held sufficient evidence that the defendant was regularly sworn to the truth of its contents, though the clerk, who proved the handwriting of the Master, had no recollection of administering the oath, and admitted that the jurat was not written by himself.<sup>1</sup> So, where a town was proved to be in the military occupation of an enemy, and proclamations, purporting to be signed by the general in command, were posted on its walls, this was held to be evidence whence a jury might infer that the placards had been printed and posted by the authority of the commander.<sup>2</sup> Again, on an indictment for bigamy, proof of the solemnisation of the first marriage in a Wesleyan chapel in the presence of the registrar, and of the entry of such marriage in his book, has been held to raise a prima facie presumption that the chapel was duly registered;<sup>3</sup> and in another similar prosecution, where the marriage was shown by a witness present at it to have been solemnised in a parish church by the curate of the parish, it was deemed unnecessary to prove either the registration of the marriage, or the fact of any licence having been granted, or of any banns having been published.<sup>4</sup> So, the constant performance of divine service from an early period in a chapel, raises a prima facie presumption that it has been duly consecrated.<sup>5</sup> ever in the coroner's hands, but in a return which the gaoler had made to a writ of habeas corpus previously issued, the ca. sa. was set out, together with a certificate by the coroner, that this was a true copy of the writ. Upon these facts the court gave such credit to the regularity of the proceedings, as to presume that the writ had in due course come to the gaoler through the coroner.<sup>1</sup> So, where a parish certificate purported to be granted by A, the only churchwarden, and B, the only overseer of the parish, the court, after a lapse of sixty years, during which time the appellant parish had submitted to the certificate, presumed in its favour that, by custom, there was only one churchwarden in the parish, and that two overseers had been originally appointed, but that one of them was dead, and his vacancy not filled up at the date of the certificate.<sup>2</sup> A like presumption was made in favour of a parish indenture of apprenticeship, which was signed only by one churchwarden and one overseer.<sup>3</sup> So, where a parish deed of apprenticeship had been allowed by the justices pursuant to the statute,<sup>4</sup> the court, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, presumed that notice had been duly given to the officers of the parish, where the apprentice was to serve;<sup>5</sup> and where a similar indenture, certified by the allowance of the justices, contained a recital of the order of binding, it was held that no evidence of such order, beyond the indenture itself, was necessary.<sup>6</sup> So, where the deed of apprenticeship, executed thirty years before, and under which the apprentice had regularly served his time, was proved to be lost, and it further appeared that the parish, in which the pauper was settled under this indenture, had relieved him for the last twelve years, the court considered that the sessions had acted rightly in presuming that the deed was

§ 125. In like manner every reasonable intendment will be made in support of an order of justices, provided it appear on the face of the order that the justices had jurisdiction;<sup>2</sup> but this rule does not extend to convictions, which combining, as they do, summary power with penal consequences, are watched with peculiar vigilance by the superior courts, and are construed with at least as great strictness as indictments.<sup>3</sup> Still, even with respect to convictions, if the authority of the magistrate can be distinctly collected from the facts stated on the record, the court will not be astute in discovering irregularities in the proceedings; and the safest rule which can be laid down on the subject is, in the words of Lord Ellenborough, that the court “can intend nothing in favour of convictions, and will intend nothing against them.”<sup>4</sup>

§ 126. Neither does this presumption apply so as in any event to give jurisdiction to inferior courts, or to magistrates, or others, acting judicially under a special statutory power; but in all such cases, every circumstance required by the statute to give jurisdiction must appear on the face of the proceedings, either by direct averment, or by reasonable intendment.<sup>5</sup> There is no

distinction, in this respect, between convictions, commitments,<sup>1</sup> inquisitions, warrants to arrest, examinations, or orders;<sup>2</sup> and whether the order be made by the Lord Chancellor, under the special Act, or by a justice of the peace, the facts which gave the authority must be stated.<sup>3</sup> But though the Court of Queen's Bench, in the exercise of its superintending power, will intend nothing in favour of inferior jurisdictions, it will intend nothing against them, but will decide according to the very language employed in the order or other judicial document.<sup>4</sup> On motions for a prohibition, the judges of that court have more than once emphatically rejected any intendment that the Ecclesiastical Courts would outstep their duty, or act in any way inconsistently with the law;<sup>5</sup> and on the same principle they have refused to anticipate the decision of the master on a question of costs, as they cannot presume that he will decide erroneously.<sup>6</sup>

§ 127. This presumption has, in many instances, been recognised in support of the solemn acts of even private persons, but a reference to a few of the more modern cases will, it is hoped, be sufficient to illustrate its operation in connection with such acts. Thus, although in the case of contracts not under seal, a consideration must in general be averred and proved, yet bills of exchange and promissory notes enjoy the privilege of being presumed, primâ facie, to be founded on a valuable consideration.<sup>7</sup> The law raises this presumption in favour of these instruments, partly, because it is important to preserve their negotiability intact, and partly, because the existence of a valid consideration may reasonably be inferred from the solemnity of the instruments themselves, and the deliberate mode in which they are executed.<sup>1</sup> So, if secondary evidence is tendered to prove the contents of an instrument, which is either lost, or retained by the opposite party after notice to produce it, the court will presume that the original was duly stamped, unless some evidence to the contrary be given.<sup>2</sup> So, under the Act to facilitate leases and sales of settled estates, the execution of a lease by the lessor furnishes sufficient presumptive evidence that the counterpart has been duly executed by the lessee.<sup>3</sup> So, in the absence of all proof, as to which of two deeds of even date was first executed, the court will presume in favour of that order of priority, which will best support the clear intent of the parties.<sup>4</sup> So, where an act has been done by a joint stock company, to the legality of which certain formalities are requisite, and the circumstances are such that acquiescence may be imputed to the shareholders, a compliance with the necessary formalities will, as against the company, be presumed.<sup>5</sup> So, in an action of ejectment brought upon the assignment of a term by the defendant to secure the payment of an annuity to the plaintiff, the court will presume that the annuity has been duly enrolled,<sup>6</sup> and the party relying on the want of the enrolment must prove the negative: "it is like the case of a proviso in an Act of Parliament, in which it is a settled rule, that the party wishing to avail himself of it, must bring himself within it."<sup>1</sup> But no such presumption will be made in favour of conveyances for charitable uses, even after a long and undisturbed enjoyment.<sup>2</sup> The distinction between these cases appears to be, that the Annuity Acts do not prohibit the conveyance of lands to secure the payment of annuities, but the Mortmain Act<sup>3</sup> renders void all gifts of realty to charitable uses, unless by deed indented, executed, and enrolled, agreeably to the provisions therein contained.

§ 128. In like manner where the attestation of a deed has been in the usual form, and the signature of the party has been proved, the jury have more than once been advised to presume a due sealing and delivery, and that, too, in cases where the attesting witness has denied all recollection of any other form having been gone through beyond the mere signing.<sup>4</sup> Neither is it necessary, in order to constitute a valid sealing, that an impression should be made with wax or with a wafer, but an impression made in ink with a wooden block will suffice;<sup>5</sup> and even though no impression appear on the parchment or paper, still, if the instrument be a deed, and on proper stamps, and be stated in the attestation to have been duly sealed and delivered, it will, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, and especially if it be an ancient instrument,<sup>6</sup> be presumed to have been sealed.<sup>7</sup> Moreover, when a deed is executed by a corporate body, the common seal need not be affixed, but the corporation may, if they think fit, adopt any private seal for the occasion, and the jury may presume that the use of the adopted seal was a corporate act, if the instrument purport to be executed by the head and the subordinate members of the corporation "under their seal."<sup>1</sup> The presumption in favour of the due execution of instruments was carried to a great length in the case of Cherry v. Heming.<sup>2</sup> That was an action of covenant brought by the assignor against the assignees of certain letters-patent to recover the consideration money for the assignment, and one of the defendants named Heming pleaded non est factum. At the trial Heming produced the deed, which was signed and executed by all the parties to it except himself; but although a seal had been placed for him in the usual way, his signature was not attached, neither was there any attesting witness to his execution. As, however, he had acted under the deed, and recognised it as a valid instrument, the jury presumed, with the approbation of the court, that he had duly executed it.

§ 128A. Although courts of law are in general bound to presume prima facie in favour of deeds, which appear to have been duly executed, an exception to this rule is recognised, where sales are sought to be set aside by the creditors of the vendor as fraudulent within the Stat. 13 El., c. 5. This excellent Act, made perpetual by 26 & 27 V., c. 125, enacts in substance, that all conveyances of lands or chattels, which are not made for a valuable consideration and bonâ fide, shall be void as against any person, including the Crown,<sup>3</sup> whose claims on the original owner of the property shall be thereby delayed or disturbed.<sup>4</sup> Whenever, therefore, any transaction is sought to be invalidated by virtue of this Act, it becomes necessary for the vendor to establish the justice of his title, and to show affirmatively, not only that the deed under which he claims was duly executed, but that it was made in perfect good faith, and also for a valuable, as contradistinguished from a mere good, consideration.<sup>1</sup> In determining the question of bona fides, the jury will take into consideration all the circumstances connected with the transfer, always bearing in mind, that, if the conveyance is absolute, that is, if it passes to the vendee an immediate right of possession, the fact of the vendor being allowed to continue as the apparent owner of the property, must naturally raise a very strong presumption of fraud.<sup>2</sup> If, indeed, the conveyance or bill of sale is by way of mortgage, and the mortgagee is not to take possession till a default in payment of the mortgage money, then, as the nature of the transaction does not call for any change of possession, the absence of such change will not of itself furnish any evidence of collusion.<sup>3</sup>

§ 129. In deciding upon the validity or invalidity of deeds, courts of equity act upon more enlightened principles than courts of law; and whenever it is shown to them that any person by donation derives a benefit under a deed to the prejudice of another person,<sup>4</sup>—and the more especially so, if any confidential or fiduciary relation subsists between the parties,—they so far presume against the validity of the instrument, as to require some proof, varying in amount according to circumstances, of the absence of anything approaching to imposition, over-reaching, undue influence, or unconscionable advantage.<sup>5</sup> For example, if a deed of gift, or other disposition of property, be made in favour of an attorney by a client,<sup>6</sup> of a medical attendant by a patient, of a parson by one of his congregation,<sup>7</sup> of a “spiritual medium”

by one of his dupes,<sup>1</sup> of a trustee by a beneficiary, of a guardian by a ward, of a parent by a child,<sup>2</sup> of a husband by a wife, of an agent by a principal, or of a shrewd man of business by an infirm ignorant old woman,<sup>3</sup> a court of equity will regard the matter with jealous suspicion, and will either set aside the instrument as conclusively void,<sup>4</sup> or will throw upon the person benefited the burthen of establishing beyond all reasonable doubt the perfect fairness and honesty of the entire transaction.<sup>5</sup> A grotesque attempt has been made in Ireland to extend this salutary doctrine to a case, which assuredly its framers never contemplated. A woman, while living in adultery with a married man, had in the ardour of her affection assigned some of her property to secure a debt which was owing by her paramour. When her passion cooled, her generosity seemed to have cooled also; and after the lapse of a short period she had the hardihood to apply to the Court of Chancery to set aside her assignment on the ground of undue influence. Her prayer was of course rejected, the court holding that the doctrine on which she relied for relief was only applicable when some lawful relation had been contracted between the parties.<sup>6</sup>

which related to their expectancies.<sup>1</sup> Every person, therefore, who dealt with an expectant heir for his reversion was, in equity at least, primâ facie presumed to be a knave; and if the transaction were subsequently disputed, the burthen of proof would lie upon him to establish its entire fairness.<sup>2</sup> The soundness of this doctrine was at length questioned by some of our prominent lawyers,<sup>3</sup> and at their instance an Act was passed in December, 1867, which enacts, that "no purchase made bonâ fide, and without fraud or unfair dealing, of any reversionary interest in real or personal estate, shall hereafter be opened or set aside merely on the ground of under-value."<sup>4</sup>

§ 129 B. Another important presumption recognised in courts of equity is, that a tenant for life, or other person having a partial interest in settled estates, who pays off an incumbrance upon them, intends, primâ facie, to keep alive the charge against the inheritance for his own benefit.<sup>5</sup> This presumption, however, has, on technical rather than substantial grounds, been held inapplicable to a case where a tenant for life had paid off the bond debts of the settlor.<sup>6</sup> Neither does it extend to the case of a charge bearing interest, where,—the rents and profits of the estate having been insufficient to meet the interest,—the tenant for life has paid the balance of it out of his own pocket, without having warned the remainderman of his intention to charge the excess of his payments on the inheritance. Here equity recognises a counter-presumption, and conclusively infers, as against the personal representatives of the tenant for life, either that the

§ 129 c. In dealing with charitable institutions, and in interpreting charitable grants, courts of equity also recognise certain definite presumptions. Thus, if the charity were founded to support a religious establishment, or to promote religious education, and the intentions of the founder be not clearly expressed, the prima facie presumption is, first, that he intended to support an establishment belonging to some particular form of religion, or to promote the teaching of certain particular doctrine; next, that the form of religion or doctrine contemplated was that which he himself had professed; and lastly, if no evidence be adduced of his entertaining peculiar religious views, that the established religion of the country was the one meant to be supported. If, however, the charity were founded for purposes of mere secular education, or if it were one of a purely eleemosynary character, the court, in the absence of any expressed intention to the contrary, will presume that the instruction in the one case was intended to be open at least to all denominations of Christians, and that the bounty in the other might be shared by all persons in distress, whatever erroneous opinions on the subject of worship they might chance to entertain.<sup>2</sup>

§ 129 d. The presumptions, or, rather, the rules of construction recognised by Courts of Equity with respect to joint tenancy are sufficiently singular. Thus, if two persons jointly advance money on mortgage, a mere tenancy in common will be created, though the property be conveyed to them as joint tenants, because in this case the law presumes that men will not willingly speculate with money which they lend.<sup>3</sup> But, on the other hand, if two persons jointly advance money as purchasers, and the sums paid by each be equal, a joint-tenancy will be established, because here it is supposed that men will readily gamble as to survivorship with respect to property which they buy.<sup>1</sup> The reasoning, which draws a distinction between these two cases, has been denounced by an able judge as “not very comprehensible;”<sup>2</sup> and, indeed, it savours of the legal subtlety of a bygone age. Still, the law on this point seems to be settled, though the courts have so far yielded to common sense as to hold, that, if two persons make a purchase, and one of them advances more of the purchase money than the other, there shall be no survivorship, notwithstanding that the words “equally to be divided” be omitted from the deed.<sup>3</sup>

§ 129 E. In the absence of any express stipulation to the contrary the law now presumes, that “all rents, annuities, dividends, and other periodical payments, in the nature of income, whether reserved or made payable under an instrument in writing or otherwise,” accrue from day to day, like interest on money lent, and are apportionable in respect of time accordingly.<sup>4</sup>

§ 130. With respect to the execution, alteration, revocation and construction of wills, the courts recognise several presumptions which it will be expedient to mention in this place.<sup>5</sup> First, it is a general rule that, on proof of the signature of the deceased, he will be presumed to have known and approved of the contents and effect of the instrument he has signed; <sup>6</sup> such knowledge and approval being essential to the validity of the will.<sup>7</sup> This presumption, however, is liable to be rebutted by showing the existence of any suspicious circumstances :<sup>1</sup> and therefore, if the testator, from want of education, or from bodily infirmity, was unable to read,<sup>2</sup> or if his capacity at the time of executing the instrument is a matter of doubt ;<sup>3</sup> or if the party who is materially benefited by the will has prepared it, or conducted its execution, or has been in a position calculated to exercise undue influence ;<sup>4</sup> or if the instrument itself is not consonant to the testator's natural affections and moral duties ;<sup>5</sup>—a more rigid investigation will be enforced, and probate will in general not be granted, unless the court be satisfied by additional evidence, that the paper propounded does really express the true will of the deceased.<sup>6</sup> In cases of extraordinary suspicion, it will of course be highly expedient to prove, either that instructions were given by the deceased corresponding with the actual provisions of the will, or that the instrument was, at the time of execution, read to or by the testator, or that he had expressed some subsequent knowledge and approval of its dispositions ; but this precise species of evidence is not absolutely required, and it will be sufficient if, by any means of proof, a knowledge and approval of the contents of the will can be brought home to the deceased.<sup>7</sup>

the execution of a will by a competent testator, it was either read over to him, or otherwise brought specially to his notice, the Court of Probate, in the absence of fraud, will not only infer, primâ facie, that he approved of the contents, but will recognise a conclusive presumption to that effect. No matter what evidence may be forthcoming to establish a case of obvious error, and to show that some passage has crept into the instrument by the sheer mistake of the draughtsman, the judge will turn a deaf ear to all such testimony, and rejoicing in the safe inflexibility of a procrustean rule, will perpetrate the grossest injustice under the protection of law.<sup>1</sup>

§ 132. Thirdly, when several sheets of paper, constituting a connected disposal of property, are found together, the last only being duly signed and attested as a will, the court, in the absence of direct proof, and even in spite of partial inconsistencies in some of the provisions, will presume that each of the sheets so found formed a part of the will at the time of its execution.<sup>2</sup>

§ 133. Fourthly, in favour of attestations to wills the presumption of law is, that if the testator might have seen, he did see, the witnesses subscribe their names;<sup>3</sup> and the fact of his having been in the same room with them is primâ facie evidence of their attestation in his presence, as an attestation not made in the same room is primâ facie not made in his presence.<sup>4</sup>

execution,<sup>1</sup> and even after the execution of any codicils thereto;<sup>2</sup> and consequently the Court of Probate will, in a case of unexplained alteration, interlineation,<sup>3</sup> or erasure, grant probate of the will in its original form.<sup>4</sup> This doctrine, however,—which is contrary to that which prevails with respect to deeds,<sup>5</sup> resolutions, and other official documents,<sup>6</sup>—will not apply to the filling up of blanks; and therefore, where a testator gave instructions that his will should be prepared with blanks for the amount of the legacies, and the will was found after his death regularly executed, with the amounts filled up in his own handwriting, the court presumed, in the absence of all evidence on the subject, that the blanks were filled up before the will was signed, for otherwise the execution would have been a mere idle ceremony.<sup>7</sup>

§ 135. Sixthly, if a will, traced to the possession of the testator, and last seen in his custody, be not forthcoming on his death, the law, under ordinary circumstances, presumes that it has been destroyed by himself, animo cancellandi; and this presumption, which is obviously founded on good sense, must prevail, unless there be sufficient evidence to rebut it.<sup>8</sup> The declarations of the testator, however, furnish, in cases of this nature, cogent proof of his intentions.<sup>1</sup> In the event, too, of the testator having become insane after the will was made, the burthen of proving that it was destroyed by him while he was of sound mind will lie upon the party who sets up the revocation.<sup>2</sup> Again, the finding of a will among the testator's papers, in which the signature has been cut out, raises a presumption that the mutilation was effected intentionally by the testator himself; and in such a case the will cannot be regarded as revived, though the signature has been again attached by gum to its original place, and the document, when discovered, was in that condition.<sup>3</sup> Where the destruction of a will by the testator operates as a revocation of the instrument destroyed, it also would seem to raise a prima facie, but by no means conclusive, presumption that the testator intended to revoke at the same time every codicil to the will.<sup>4</sup>

§ 136. Seventhly, in the absence of any distinct intimation to the contrary, the law presumes that every testator considers his estate sufficient to answer the purposes to which he has devoted it by his will; and consequently, in the event of any deficiency arising in the assets, all annuities and legacies will, prima facie, be held to abate rateably. No doubt, this rule, like most others in the law, is open to certain exceptions; but in all cases the onus lies upon those who claim priority to furnish conclusive proof, by referring to the language employed, that the testator intended that the bequests should not stand on an equal footing.<sup>5</sup> Again, property specifically bequeathed or devised is prima facie presumed to have been intended by the testator to pass to the legatee or devisee in its entirety; and this presumption will not be rebutted by a codicil, charging certain pecuniary legacies on all the testator's estates, both real and personal.<sup>1</sup> If, too, an annuity be bequeathed by will for an indefinite period, the law will presume in the first instance that it was intended to be given for the life of the annuitant; but this presumption is liable to be rebutted by proof, that the testator has used words which indicate an intention that the annuity should be granted, either in perpetuity, or for a fixed number of years.<sup>2</sup>

§ 136 A. When a legacy is bequeathed to a person, who is also named in the will as an executor, the law presumes, prima facie, that it was given to him in that character; and consequently, if he declines to accept the office, he must relinquish all claim to the legacy, unless he can show from the language employed that the bequest was made to him independently of his character of executor, and solely as a token of personal regard.<sup>3</sup> On the subject of emblements—which is the old technical term, emblance de blet, for the profits of the growing crop—the courts recognise a very capricious presumption;<sup>4</sup> for although the personal representatives of a man dying seised in fee of land are entitled to the emblements in preference to the heir, the law presumes, in the event of a devise of the land, that the testator intended them to pass to the devisee.<sup>5</sup> This presumption may of course be rebutted by a specific bequest of the growing crops to another party; but

second exception is, where, in petitions for damages on the ground of adultery,<sup>1</sup> letters are put in evidence to show the terms on which the husband and wife were living before the seduction; and here, in order to avoid the obvious danger of collusion, it has been deemed necessary that some independent proof should be given that the letters were written at the time they bear date.<sup>2</sup> It may be questionable whether the courts would not now recognise a third exception to the rule in those cases, where indorsements made by a deceased obligee on a bond, acknowledging the receipt of interest, are tendered in evidence by his assignee, with the view of defeating a plea of the Statute of Limitations, set up by the obligor.<sup>3</sup>

§ 138. Subject to the above exceptions, the rule in question is founded on common reason; for in the very great majority of cases documents are actually written on the day they bear date. The doctrine, however, must not be pushed too far; and in applying it to bills of exchange, it must be borne in mind that the date of the bill, though prima facie evidence of the day when it was drawn, is no proof that it was accepted at the same time. The most that the law will presume is that a bill was accepted before its maturity, and within a reasonable time after it was drawn; and it recognises that presumption, because in all ordinary transactions such a course of business would be pursued.<sup>4</sup>

§ 139. The fact that a person has acted in an official capacity is also presumptive evidence of his due appointment to the office, because it cannot be supposed that any man would venture to intrude himself into a public situation which he was not authorised to fill. This rule has been expressly adopted by the legis-

§ 140. The same presumption prevails with respect to certain relations of life. Thus, the relations of landlord and tenant, of partnership, and of master and servant, are frequently presumed from the conduct of the parties being more consistent with that state of things than with any other.<sup>2</sup> So, a presumption in favour of the relation of master and apprentice has more than once been recognised, from the fact of the parties having acted towards each other as they would have done in the case of an apprenticeship, though no direct proof was given of the existence of any indenture.<sup>3</sup> So, also, a cogent legal presumption is raised in favour of the validity of any marriage which is shown to have been celebrated de facto;<sup>4</sup> and this presumption will not be rebutted, in the case of a minor married by licence in her father's lifetime, by the mere fact of the mother's name appearing in the register as the consenting party, and no evidence being adduced to establish the consent of the father.<sup>5</sup> So, if persons live together ostensibly as man and wife the law will, in favour of morality and decency, presume that they are legally married;<sup>6</sup> and so far has this presumption been recognised in Scotland, that even where the connexion was shown to have commenced in adultery, a subsequent valid marriage has been inferred from strong evidence of habit and repute.<sup>7</sup> Two exceptions to this rule are, however, recognised in England; for on an indictment for bigamy, and on a petition claiming damages against an alleged adulterer,<sup>8</sup> an actual marriage must be proved, and even the proof of a ceremony, which the parties suppose to be sufficient to constitute the relation of husband and wife, is not enough, but it must be shown to be sufficient according to law for that purpose.<sup>1</sup> These exceptions rest on the ground, that such proceedings, being of a penal nature, require the strictest proof; and a further reason for the exception in cases of adultery seems to be, to prevent parties from setting up pretended marriages for evil purposes.<sup>2</sup>

§ 141. How far this rule applies to persons suing or being sued as professional men, or as filling particular situations, does not very distinctly appear. In an action against a clergyman for non-residence, Lord Mansfield held that the plaintiff was not bound to prove the admission, institution, and induction of the defendant, but that it was sufficient to show that he had received tithes and acted as the incumbent of the parish.<sup>3</sup> So, where an attorney brought an action of defamation against a party for slandering him in his profession, by threatening to strike him off the rolls for misconduct, he was allowed to recover damages, on proof that he had acted as an attorney, without showing his due admission and enrolment.<sup>4</sup> So, in an action for penalties under the Post-horse Act, brought by the plaintiff as farmer-general, proof of his appointment was dispensed with as against the defendant, who had previously accounted with him in that capacity;<sup>5</sup> and, not to multiply instances, the same laxity of evidence has several times been allowed in actions brought by surgeons<sup>6</sup>

In that case the plaintiff had performed several surgical operations for the defendant, but it was contended that he could not maintain the action, as he was not a member of the College of Surgeons. He recovered a verdict, and the court discharged a rule to set it aside, as no proof had been given that the plaintiff was not duly and attorneys for their fees, and by parsons for their tithes.<sup>1</sup> But these cases appear to rest not so much, if indeed at all, upon the presumption now under discussion, as on the ground that the opposite party had, by his admissions, either by word or deed, rendered it unnecessary to prove the actual appointment.<sup>2</sup> In cases, therefore, where no such admission has been made, the safer, if not the necessary, course will be to prove the appointment in the ordinary manner; and, indeed, this seems consistent with modern practice and with the latest decisions.

§ 142. Thus, in an action brought by a physician for defamation, where the slanderous words denied that the plaintiff was a doctor of medicine, proof that he had acted as such, coupled with evidence of a Scotch diploma, was held insufficient to entitle him to a verdict; and Lord Denman observed, "No doubt a person complaining of a slander upon him in a particular character, must prove that he possesses that character, when the slander does not admit it."<sup>3</sup> In this case, however, the question, whether acting as a physician is sufficient primâ facie proof of

R. 210—212; also the judgment of Heath, J., who observes—"It seems to me that where a defendant, in the course of the transaction on which the action is founded, has admitted the title, by virtue of which the plaintiff sues, it amounts to primâ facie evidence that the plaintiff is entitled to sue." Id. p. 208.

<sup>3</sup> Collins v. Carnegie, 1 A. & E. 695, 703; 3 N. & M. 703, S. C.; Pickford v. Gutch, 8 T. R. 305, n. a, per Buller, J.; Smith v. Taylor, 1 N. R. 196. In this case the court was equally divided on the question whether proof of acting as a physician was sufficient, but Sir J. Mansfield and Heath, J., who held the affirmative, also thought that the words of the slander—"Dr. S. has upset all that we have done, and die he (the patient) must"—implied an admission of the character in which the plaintiff sued. It must be remembered, that in actions of this kind, where the declaration states, as matter of inducement, that the plaintiff holds a certain office, or belongs to a particular profession or trade, no evidence is required to support this statement, unless it be distinctly denied by the defendant's plea; for the plea of not guilty admits the facts stated in the inducement. Reg. Plead. H. T., 16 V., r. 16; 1 E. & B. lxxxix.

being one, was not directly decided, because the plaintiff, not content with resting his case on such evidence, proceeded to prove that he had received the degree of doctor of medicine from the University of St. Andrew's; and as the court held that this did not entitle him to practise in England, he could not, of course, fall back upon proof of practice, on the legality of which he himself had, by his evidence, thrown doubt.

§ 143. In another action of slander, brought by a collector of tolls, the plaintiff was nonsuited on failing to prove his appointment to that office, but it does not appear that any evidence was offered that he ever acted in that capacity;<sup>1</sup> and the same observation applies to the cases of Savage v. —,<sup>2</sup> and of Cortis v. Kent Waterworks Co.,<sup>3</sup> in the former of which the plaintiff, who sued as a barrister, relied, not on his practice, but on the book of the Society of Lincoln's-inn, containing the order for his call; and in the latter, a party, suing in the character of treasurer to certain commissioners, proved his appointment to the office. Still, these cases, though not direct authorities, tend to show what the practice has been, and so far support the view that the rule which renders evidence of acting prima facie proof of due appointment, is confined to cases where the parties occupy a public situation, or, perhaps, where the question of appointment is not directly at issue. The case of R. v. Jones,<sup>4</sup> where, on an indictment against an apprentice for a fraudulent enlistment, it was held that the indenture must be proved, is an authority on neither side of this question, for that decision rested on the ground, that as the actual and legal binding was the fact which constituted the gist of the offence, this could only be proved by the best evidence.

§ 144. Other presumptions of this class are founded upon the experience of human conduct in the ordinary course of business. Thus, the receipt of rent after the expiration of an old lease raises a legal presumption of a new tenancy from year to year;<sup>5</sup>

though the payer or receiver of such rent may of course repel the presumption, by proving that the payment was made under circumstances inconsistent with it; as, for example, under the impression that the old lease was still subsisting.<sup>1</sup> So, if a tenancy from year to year be created, the law presumes that it was intended to be determinable by either party at the end of the first, as well as of any subsequent, year, unless the parties, when arranging the terms of the contract, have used expressions showing that they contemplated a tenancy for two years at least.<sup>2</sup> So, if a lessor, having mortgaged his reversion, is permitted by the mortgagee to continue in the receipt of the rent incident to that reversion, he, during such permission, is presumptione juris authorised, if it should become necessary, to realise the rent by distress, and to distrain for it in the mortgagee's name, and as his bailiff.<sup>3</sup> The same implied authority has also been recognised in favour of a party, to whom the mortgagor had assigned his equity of redemption.<sup>4</sup> Again, in actions of trover, the jury will be advised, if not directed, to presume a conversion from unexplained evidence of a demand and refusal.<sup>5</sup>

§ 145. If a servant be hired generally, without any stipulation as to time, the law presumes the hiring to have been for a year, unless there are circumstances tending to rebut this presumption;<sup>6</sup> as, for instance, the existence of an agreement to pay weekly or monthly wages, coupled with the absence of any other stipulation showing an intention that the service should continue for a longer period than a week or a month.<sup>1</sup> This rule applies to domestic as well as to farm servants ; but there is this difference between the two classes, that the service of the former, unlike that of the latter,<sup>2</sup> may be determined by a month's warning or on payment of a month's wages.<sup>3</sup> In the case of clerks, warehousemen, travellers, editors, reporters, actors, ushers, governesses, and the like, the law raises no inflexible presumption of an indefeasible yearly hiring from the mere fact of a hiring for an indefinite period ; but in all such cases, the jury must determine the question for themselves, after weighing all the circumstances proved, and ascertaining, if possible, what usage prevails in the particular business or employment to which the hiring relates.<sup>4</sup> Again, a general promise to marry is presumed or interpreted by the law to mean a promise to marry within a reasonable time ;<sup>5</sup> and a similar construction is put upon all general contracts to do certain acts, as to deliver goods and the like, where the time of completion has been left undefined by the parties.<sup>6</sup>

§ 146.<sup>7</sup> Again, as men are usually vigilant in guarding their property, prompt in asserting their rights, and diligent in claiming and collecting their dues, the law presumes, where a bill of exchange, or an order for the payment of money or the delivery of goods is found in the hands of the drawee, that he has paid the money due upon the instrument, and delivered the goods ordered.<sup>8</sup>

A similar presumption is raised from the fact of a promissory note being found in the possession of the maker.<sup>1</sup> So, a receipt for the last year's or quarter's rent is primâ facie evidence of the payment of all the rent previously accrued.<sup>2</sup> The mere delivery of money, or of a bank cheque, by one person to another, or the transfer of stock, unexplained, is presumptive evidence of the payment of an antecedent debt, and not of a loan.<sup>3</sup> So, when a defendant, having money of the plaintiff in his hands, drew a cheque upon his banker in favour of the plaintiff, who had the cheque cashed at the bank, this was held to be presumptive evidence of payment, though no proof was given that the plaintiff received the cheque directly from the defendant, and it was urged that it might have passed through many other hands.<sup>4</sup>

§ 147.<sup>5</sup> Under this head may be ranked several presumptions, which are frequently made from the regular course of business in a public office. Thus, postmarks on letters, when capable of being deciphered, are primâ facie evidence that the letters were in the post at the time and place therein specified;<sup>6</sup> and if a letter properly directed<sup>7</sup> is proved to have been either put into the post-office, or delivered to the postman,<sup>8</sup> it is presumed from the known course of business in that department of the public service, that it reached its destination at the regular time, and was received by the person to whom it was addressed.<sup>1</sup> This last presumption furnishes in most cases mere prima facie proof,<sup>2</sup> though in some instances it is rendered conclusive, either by rules of court, or by Act of Parliament. Thus, under the Bankruptcy rules of 1870, "all notices and other proceedings, for the delivery of which no special mode is prescribed, may be sent by prepaid post letter to the last known address of the person to be served therewith;"<sup>3</sup> and "an affidavit by a trustee, or an officer of the court, or by any clerk of either, that letters have been put into a post-office, shall be sufficient evidence of such notices having been duly sent to the persons, to whom the same purport to have been addressed."<sup>4</sup> So, under the Companies' Clauses, the Lands' Clauses, and the Railway Clauses Consolidation Acts, summonses, notices, writs, and other proceedings, may be served upon the respective companies or promoters subject to these Acts, by being transmitted through the post directed to their principal offices;<sup>5</sup> and a like service of notices by the company upon the shareholders will, under the first-named Act, be in general deemed sufficient.<sup>6</sup> Somewhat similar clauses are inserted in the Companies Act, 1862<sup>7</sup> and in a variety of other statutes.<sup>8</sup> Again, at common law, the time of clearance of a vessel, sailing under a licence, has been presumed to have been indorsed upon the licence, which was lost, upon its being shown, that without such indorsement the custom-house would not have permitted the goods to be entered.<sup>1</sup> So, on proof that goods, which cannot be exported without licence, were entered at the custom-house for exportation, a licence to export them will be presumed.<sup>2</sup>

§ 148. The like presumption is also sometimes drawn from the usual course of men's private offices and business, where the primary evidence of the fact is wanting.<sup>3</sup> Thus, the underwriters upon a foreign ship or a foreign voyage are presumed to know the usages and laws of foreign states which affect that ship or that voyage, because such knowledge is necessary for the due conduct of the business.<sup>4</sup> So, an underwriter is presumed to know the contents of Lloyd's Shipping List, because this is a document, to which, in the ordinary course of his business, he has access; but this last presumption is strictly confined to cases, where the assured has made no representation inconsistent with the list, which is calculated to mislead the underwriter.<sup>5</sup> It may also be laid down as clear law, that if a man deals in a particular market, he will be taken to act according to the custom of that market; and if he directs another to make a contract at a particular place, he will be presumed to intend that the contract should be made according to the usage of that place.<sup>6</sup> Thus,

if a person employs a broker on the Stock Exchange, he impliedly authorises him to act in accordance with the rules there established; and in such case it matters not whether the principal be himself acquainted with the rules by which such brokers are governed.<sup>1</sup> But this doctrine will not be carried too far; and therefore where goods were shipped at Liverpool, and the bill of lading was indorsed to parties residing in New South Wales, evidence of a local usage in Liverpool, which was tendered with the view of affecting the construction of the written contract, was held to be inadmissible as against the indorsees, in the absence of proof that they were acquainted with the usage.<sup>2</sup> So, it has on several occasions been ruled that "Lloyd's" is not a market within the rule, and that the usage there prevalent among insurance brokers, is not such a general usage as to bind merchants and shipowners who are unacquainted with its existence.<sup>3</sup> It may also admit of some doubt, whether the doctrine would be held to apply in its full force to cases of maritime insurance, as authorities<sup>4</sup> are not wanting, which, in the language of Lord Wensleydale, "look the other way."<sup>5</sup> Again, if letters or notices properly directed to a gentleman be left with his servant, it is only reasonable to presume, prima facie, that they reached his hands.<sup>6</sup> The fact, too, of sending a letter to the post-office will in general be regarded by a jury as presumptively proved, if it be shown to have been handed to, or left with, the clerk, whose duty it

§ 148 A. Akin to this presumption is that which is sometimes recognised with respect to the working accuracy of certain scientific instruments. For example, a jury would be advised, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, to rely on the general correctness of a watch or a clock, which had been consulted for the purpose of fixing the time when a certain event happened. So, a thermometer would be regarded as a sufficiently safe indication of the heat of any liquid in which it had been immersed, and a pedometer might be used as evidence of the distance between two places which had been traversed by the wearer. Blood stains are every day detected by means of known chemical tests. So, aneroids, anemometers, and a variety of other ingenious contrivances for detecting different matters, will occasionally play an important part as furnishing presumptive proof in Courts of Justice. In a few instances this mode of proof has been recognised by the Legislature. Thus, under "The Gas Works Clauses Act, 1871," the register of a gas meter "shall be prima facie evidence of the quantity of gas consumed."<sup>2</sup>

§ 149. The law of partnership recognises certain presumptions which deserve a passing notice. And first, in the absence of any contract between partners, or any dealing from which a contract may be implied, the common law, as best interpreted both in England<sup>3</sup>

and in America,<sup>1</sup> would seem to infer, like the civil law,<sup>2</sup> that the business has been conducted on terms of an equal partnership; and, consequently, that each partner has a right to insist on an equal participation in profit and loss. Lord Wensleydale has even held at Nisi Prius, that, in the absence of all evidence on the subject, partners must be presumed to be interested in equal proportions in the partnership stock.<sup>3</sup> Again, every member in an ordinary trading copartnership is presumed in law to be intrusted with a general authority to enter into contracts on behalf of the firm for the usual purposes of the business, and consequently to be empowered to borrow money, and contract or pay debts, on account of the partnership, and to make, draw, indorse, and accept negotiable securities in the firm's name.<sup>4</sup> Similar powers, however, are not presumed to exist in the case of mining copartnerships; and it is now determined that one of several co-adventurers in a mine has no authority, as such, to negotiate any bill on behalf of his fellows,<sup>5</sup> or to pledge the credit of the general body for money borrowed for the purposes of the concern.<sup>6</sup> Still less have the members of a firm, which is not established for trading purposes, as, for example, a firm of attorneys, any implied authority to bind each other by drawing or indorsing bills of exchange, or making promissory notes or even post-dated cheques.<sup>7</sup> Neither in an ordinary partnership has one member of the firm power to bind the others by contracts out of the apparent mode of the partnership dealings, merely because they are reasonable acts towards effecting the partnership purposes;<sup>1</sup> and therefore, where a partner signed a guarantee in the name of the firm for the purpose of giving effect to a transaction within the scope of the partnership dealings, the court, in the absence of proof of any usage, and of any recognition by the other parties, refused to infer that he was authorised to act in this manner, and held that the firm was not bound by the guarantee.<sup>2</sup> Had any evidence been given of the adoption of the act by the other partners, the result would, of course, have been different.<sup>3</sup>

§ 149 A. With respect to the law of agency, it may be noted, that when the seller deals with an agent resident in this country, and acting for a foreign principal, the ordinary presumption is that he does not contract with the foreigner, but that he simply trusts the party with whom he actually makes the bargain.<sup>4</sup> This rule, however, is by no means what Mr. Justice Story represents it to be—"a presumption so strong, as almost to amount to a conclusive presumption of law;"<sup>5</sup> but it is at best a mere presumption of fact, liable to be rebutted by any evidence, whether extrinsic or intrinsic, which tends to show that credit was really intended to be given to the foreign principal.<sup>6</sup>

§ 150. One or two presumptions may here be mentioned, which attach to particular trades, and which, though apparently harsh, are in reality founded on just principles of public policy.<sup>7</sup> For instance, if goods intrusted to a common carrier be lost or damaged, the law will conclusively presume that the carrier has been guilty of negligence, unless he can show that the loss or damage was occasioned by what is technically called "the act of

The Scotch law on this subject is now embodied in § 17 of 19 & 20 V., c. 60, which enacts, that "all carriers for hire of goods within Scotland shall be liable to make good to the owner of such goods all losses arising from accidental fire, while such goods were in the custody or possession of such carriers."

<sup>3</sup> The common law liability of innkeepers has been restricted by the Act of 26 & 27 V., c. 41, which enacts, in § 1, that no innkeeper shall be liable to make good to any guest any loss or injury to property brought to his inn, "not being a horse or other live animal, or any gear appertaining thereto, or any carriage," to a greater amount than thirty pounds, except, 1, where such property "shall have been stolen, lost, or injured through the wilful act, default, or neglect of such innkeeper, or any servant in his employ;" 2, where such property "shall have been deposited expressly for safe custody with such innkeeper." The Act then contains a proviso that the innkeeper may require, as a condition of his liability, that the property shall be deposited in a box, or other receptacle, fastened and sealed by the depositor. §§ 2 & 3 respectively enact, that no innkeeper shall be entitled to the benefit of this Act, who refuses to receive for safe custody any property of his guest, or who omits to exhibit "in a conspicuous part of the hall or entrance to his inn" a printed copy of the first section of the Act.

See Doe v. Laming, 4 Camp. 76. A boarding-house or lodging-house keeper has no duty imposed upon him by law to take care of his lodgers' goods, Holder v. Soulby, 29 L. J., C. P. 246; 8 Com. § 150 A. While discussing the subject of negligence, it deserves notice that the judges will occasionally permit, or even advise, juries to infer negligence from the mere happening of an accident. For example, this course has been pursued where the injury complained of was caused by a collision between two railway trains belonging to the same company.<sup>2</sup> So, where a man was hurt by a barrel of flour falling on him out of a warehouse window while he was walking in the street below, the court held that it was unnecessary for him, in suing the warehouseman for negligence, to prove what actually occasioned the fall of the barrel.<sup>3</sup> The accident was one which, in the ordinary course of things, did not happen to those who used proper care in the management of their business, and therefore it afforded, in itself, reasonable evidence of negligence, in the absence of any explanation by defendant.<sup>4</sup> On the other hand, in a case where it appeared that a ladder, inside a private house, had, from some unexplained cause, fallen against an upper window, and broken it, and the glass in falling had damaged the eye of a person who was passing by the house at the time, it was held that the proof of these facts alone was insufficient to fix negligence on the owner of the house.<sup>5</sup> infants are prima facie presumed to be unacquainted with guilt, and therefore cannot be convicted, unless the jury shall be satisfied from the evidence, that, at the time when the offence was committed, they had a guilty knowledge that they were doing wrong.<sup>1</sup> This rule, though perhaps originally adopted in favorem vitæ with respect to capital offences only,<sup>2</sup> has of late years been expressly held applicable to all felonies;<sup>3</sup> and there seems no reason why, on principle, it should not also be extended to misdemeanors, with the exception, perhaps, of those cases where an infant occupier of lands, charged with the repair of a bridge or road, might be held liable to an indictment for non-repair.<sup>4</sup> The test of juvenile exemption propounded by Lord Hale, is whether the accused was capable of discerning "between good and evil;"<sup>5</sup> words sufficiently indefinite, since they may apply either to legal responsibility or to moral guilt;<sup>6</sup> and many children of tender years, though perfectly well aware that it is wrong to take what does not belong to them, and who are consequently, according to this test, fit subjects for punishment, may yet be only partially acquainted with the sinful nature of theft, and be wholly ignorant that it is a crime against the law of the land. It seems, therefore, to be a law savouring of harshness which permits a child, under such circumstances, to suffer the same punishment as it inflicts upon a grown person. Indeed, the loose and unsatisfactory manner in which this merciful presumption of infantine innocence is practically rebutted, cannot be more clearly exposed than by referring to a statistical return of juvenile delinquents, which was published a few years back, and by which it appears that, out of 297 children under the age of fifteen, committed in the metropolis alone during a single year, 238 were actually convicted; and of these no fewer than 36 were sentenced to transportation.<sup>7</sup> If in all these cases malitia supplevit ætatem, no one will dispute but that malice has had much to supply.

§ 152. With respect to married women, also, the law recognises certain presumptions. Thus, if a wife commit a felony,<sup>1</sup> other than treason or homicide,<sup>2</sup> or, perhaps, highway robbery,<sup>3</sup> in company with her husband, the law presumes that she acted under his coercion, and consequently without any guilty intent, unless the fact of non-coercion be distinctly proved. This presumption appears, on some occasions, to have been considered conclusive, and is still practically regarded in no very different light, especially when the crime is of a flagrant character;<sup>4</sup> but the better opinion seems to be, that in every case, the presumption may now be rebutted by positive proof that the woman acted as a free agent;<sup>5</sup> and in one case that was much discussed,<sup>6</sup> the Irish judges appear to have considered that such positive proof was not required, but that the question was always one to be determined by the children, under the age of fifteen, were committed for trial in England and Wales. Porter's Progress of Nation, p. 656.

<sup>3</sup> In R. v. Stapleton, 1 Jebb, C. C. 93, the majority of the judges appeared to think that this presumption did not apply to cases of highway robbery. Neither does it apply to a case of felonious wounding with intent to disfigure, or to do grievous bodily harm, R. v. Smith, 1 Dear. & Bell, 553; 8 Cox, 27, S. C. But see *R. v. jury on the evidence submitted to them. It seems that a married woman cannot be convicted under any circumstances as a receiver of stolen goods, when the property has been taken by her husband, and given to her by him.<sup>1</sup> Whether the doctrine of coercion extends to any misdemeanors may admit of some doubt, but the better opinion seems to be, that, provided the misdemeanor be of a serious nature, as, for instance, the uttering of base coin,<sup>2</sup> the wife will be protected in like manner as in cases of felony, although it has been distinctly held that the protection does not extend to assaults and batteries,<sup>3</sup> or to the offence of keeping a brothel.<sup>4</sup> Indeed, it is probable that in all inferior misdemeanors, this presumption, if admitted at all, would be held liable to be defeated by far less stringent evidence of the wife's active co-operation than would suffice in cases of felony.<sup>5</sup>

§ 153. If an action be brought against a husband for goods supplied to his family or his wife, on the order of the latter, the jury will do well to infer, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, that the wife gave the order as the husband's agent, provided she were living with him at the time, and the articles were neither excessive in quantity, improvident in quality, nor extravagant in price.<sup>6</sup> If the debt has been incurred by the wife

while living separate from her husband, the doctrine of presumptive agency will depend on the cause of separation. If the wife has been turned out of doors or deserted by the husband, or if she has left him because his misconduct was such as to render it impossible for her to remain under his roof,<sup>1</sup> she has by law an implied authority to pledge his credit for necessities,<sup>2</sup> whether supplied to herself or to her infant child,<sup>3</sup> unless by an adequate<sup>4</sup> allowance from her husband, or by the terms of her settlement, or perhaps by her own exertions, she be in a position to provide for her maintenance.<sup>5</sup> On the other hand, a wife who leaves her husband without his consent, and without justifiable cause, has no authority whatever to bind him by her contracts;<sup>6</sup> and where the husband and wife have parted by mutual consent, and the wife has afterwards incurred a debt for articles suitable to her degree, the creditor, before he can recover from the husband, must affirmatively show either an express authority from him, or at least such circumstances as will justify the jury in implying an authority; for instance, that the wife has been left without adequate means of support, or that an allowance promised to her by the husband had not been paid.<sup>7</sup> It may here be noticed that the authority of a wife to pledge her husband's credit is no greater when he is a lunatic than when he is sane.<sup>8</sup>

§ 153 A. Though a wife may often have an implied authority from her husband to procure goods on credit, an English court of law will never presume that she is his agent for the purpose of borrowing money; and even though she be turned out of doors without any misconduct on her part, and without any means of livelihood, her husband will not be liable at law for money lent to her, notwithstanding she may have expended the whole of it in procuring the actual necessities of life.<sup>1</sup> As this doctrine savours rather of the common law than of common sense, it has found no countenance in courts of equity; and consequently a creditor who has been nonsuited on the above ground by a learned justice or baron, may still obtain his rights, though tardily, at the hands of a vice-chancellor.<sup>2</sup> In Ireland a more reputable state of the law prevails, and the judges,—rejecting the distinction between accrediting a wife to supply herself with necessities, and accrediting a “neighbour” to supply a wife with money for the same purpose,—have refused to follow the English common law precedents, and have adopted the English rules of equity as their guide in this matter.<sup>3</sup>

§ 153 B. In suits for nullity of marriage on the ground of incurable impotence, the Matrimonial Court has of old time adopted for its guidance a somewhat fantastic rule; for, where the marriage has not been consummated, and no visible defect is proved to exist in either party,<sup>4</sup> impotence is presumed after, but not before, the expiration of three years of ineffectual cohabitation.<sup>5</sup> This rule, however, only applies where the impotence is left to be presumed from continual non-consummation; for the court will never call in its aid, and still less rely on its twilight guidance, when other evidence on the subject can be obtained.<sup>6</sup>

§ 154. The presumptions with respect to parent and child are not very important. The law so far recognises the superiority of age over youth, that if a parent and a child both bear the same Christian and surname, and this name occur in an instrument without any addition of "senior" or "junior," it will be presumed, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, that the parent was intended.<sup>1</sup> Thus, if a legacy be left, or a note be made payable, to John Holland, and there be two of that name, father and son, the law will, prima facie, presume that the father is respectively the legatee or payee; but this presumption may readily be rebutted, as, for instance, in the case of the will, by proving that the testator did not know the father,<sup>2</sup> or in the case of the note, by showing that the son had had it in his possession, or had indorsed it, or had given instructions to bring an action upon it.<sup>3</sup> The mere moral obligation of a parent to maintain his child affords no legal inference of a promise to pay a debt contracted by him even for necessities.<sup>4</sup>

§ 155.<sup>5</sup> Other presumptions are founded on the experienced continuance, or immutability, for a longer or shorter period, of human affairs.<sup>6</sup> When, therefore, the existence of a person, or personal relation, or a state of things, is once established by proof, the law presumes that the person, relation, or state of things continues to exist as before, till the contrary is shown, or till a different presumption is raised, from the nature of the subject in question.<sup>7</sup> Thus, where a jury found that a certain custom existed up to the year 1689, the court held, that in the absence of all evidence of its abolition, this was in legal effect a verdict finding that the custom still subsisted at the time of the trial in 1840.<sup>8</sup> So, in settlement cases, the court will presume that a son, though long since arrived at manhood, has continued unemancipated, as in the days of his infancy, unless there be some evidence to rebut this presumption, as, for instance, if proof be given that he has separated from his family.<sup>1</sup> So, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, the settlement of a pauper,<sup>2</sup> or the appointment of a party to an official situation, will,<sup>3</sup> at least for a reasonable time, be presumed to continue in force. So, a partnership, agency, tenancy,<sup>4</sup> or other similar relation, once shown to exist, is presumed to continue, till it is proved to have been dissolved; and, therefore, where a partnership was admitted to have been in existence in 1816, it was, in the absence of all evidence to the contrary, presumed to be still continuing in 1838.<sup>5</sup> So, if a man were on several occasions to authorise his mistress to order goods from a tradesman on his credit, the jury would be amply justified in finding him liable for articles supplied after the termination of the connection, in the absence of any proof that the tradesman had received notice of such termination.<sup>6</sup> So, if a debt be shown to have once existed, its continuance will be presumed, in the absence of proof of payment, or some other discharge.<sup>7</sup> So, when the term of a partnership has expired, and the partners continue the business without entering into new articles, the law presumes that they intend to be bound by the provisions of the old articles, so far as they apply to the altered circumstances.<sup>8</sup> So, where a tenant holds over after the expiration of the term, he impliedly holds subject to all the covenants in the lease which are applicable to his new situation; <sup>9</sup> and this presumption still prevails, though the rent has been advanced,<sup>1</sup> and though the original lessor has assigned his interest to a third party, or, being a clergyman, has resigned his living, and a fresh incumbent has succeeded him.<sup>2</sup> The opinions,<sup>3</sup> also, of individuals, once entertained and expressed, and their state of mind, once proved to exist, are presumed to remain unchanged, till the contrary appears. Thus, all the members of a Christian community being presumed to entertain the common faith, no man is supposed to disbelieve the existence and moral government of God, till it is shown from his own declarations.<sup>4</sup> In like manner, every man is presumed to be of sane mind, till the contrary is shown;<sup>5</sup> but if any derangement or imbecility is proved or admitted at any particular period, it is presumed to continue, till disproved,<sup>6</sup> unless it be obviously of a partial or temporary character.<sup>7</sup> still alive:<sup>1</sup> unless after a lapse of time considerably exceeding the ordinary duration of human life. In the civil law the legal presumption of life ceases at the expiration of one hundred years from the date of the birth,<sup>2</sup> and the same rule appears to have been adopted in Scotland,<sup>3</sup> but in England, no definite period has been conclusively fixed, during which the presumption is allowed to prevail. In several old cases, where feoffments for terms varying from ninety-nine to eighty years had been made to particular tenants, the possibility of their surviving the expiration of the terms was neglected in determining the nature of the remainders;<sup>4</sup> and the book of a tithe-collector, written seventy-four years before, has been admitted in evidence, without proof that any inquiries had been made for the writer.<sup>5</sup> Nay, in one case a receiver's account was allowed to be read after the lapse of fifty-four years only, though no proof was tendered respecting the writer's death.<sup>6</sup> On the other hand, where a term was for sixty years, the court took into consideration the possibility of the termor living after its expiration;<sup>7</sup> and the deposition of a witness taken sixty years before the trial has been rejected, no search having been made for the party, and no account being given of him.<sup>8</sup> In an action of ejectment, where the lessor of the plaintiff, to prove his title, put in a settlement 130 years old, by which it appeared that the party through whom he claimed had four elder brothers, the jury were allowed to pre-

§ 157. Although the presumption of life will continue for a period exceeding half a century, if no proof be given either that the party, whose death is relied upon, has not been heard of by those persons who would naturally have heard of him had he been alive, or, at least, that search has been ineffectually made to find him,<sup>2</sup>—this presumption will be bounded within far shorter limits, if evidence be furnished of his continuous unexplained absence from home, and of the non-receipt of intelligence concerning him. In such case,<sup>3</sup> after the lapse of seven years, the presumption of life ceases, and the burthen of proof is devolved on the other party.<sup>4</sup> This period was inserted in the old statute of Charles II. concerning leases for lives,<sup>5</sup> and it has since been adopted, by

There Bayley, J., in stating that the jury had properly made this presumption, relied on the general rule, that things must be presumed to remain in the same state in which they were proved to have once been, unless there is some evidence of a subsequent alteration, 3 C. & P. 403; but it is submitted that the rule was in this case strained somewhat beyond its legitimate extent; for if presumptions are founded, as they should be, on the experienced course of events, it was surely more probable that one out of four brothers should marry and have children, than that they should all die unmarried. In Doe v. Griffin, 15 East, 293, where a similar question arose, evidence negating the marriage of the party, who was presumed to have died without issue, was given; and in Richards v. Richards, id. 294, n. a, where the lessor of the plaintiff claimed as heir by descent, and proved the death of his elder brothers, the court held that he must further show that they died without issue, since in ejectment no presumption could be admitted against the person in possession. analogy, in other cases.<sup>1</sup> It is also recognised in the various Acts relating to bigamy;<sup>2</sup> and if, on an indictment for that crime, it appear that the prisoner and his first wife had lived apart for seven years before he married again, mere proof that the first wife was alive at the time of the second marriage will not warrant a conviction, but some affirmative evidence must be given to show that the accused was aware of this fact.<sup>3</sup> But although a person, who has not been heard of for seven years, is presumed to be dead, the law raises no presumption as to the time of his death; and therefore, if any one has to establish the precise period during those seven years, at which such person died, he must do so by evidence, and can neither rely, on the one hand, upon the presumption of death, nor on the other, upon the presumption of the continuance of life.<sup>4</sup>

§ 158. Where it appeared that a brig had sailed from Demerara for England in December, 1828, had touched at Dominica on the 24th of that month, and had never afterwards been heard of, Vice-Chancellor Knight Bruce, after a lapse of seven years, presumed that the vessel and her crew were lost before the 29th of January, 1829, evidence being given that the average length of a voyage from Dominica to England was under two months, and that the West Indian latitudes were subject to hurricanes, which were so much more prevalent between the 1st of August and the 10th of January, that premiums for insurance during that time were double what they were at other periods of the year.<sup>1</sup> So, upon an issue of the life or death of a party, the jury may find the fact of death from the lapse of a shorter period than seven years, if other circumstances concur; as, if the party, when last heard of, was aged, or infirm, or ill,<sup>2</sup> or had since been exposed to extraordinary peril, such as a storm and probable shipwreck.<sup>3</sup> But the presumption of the common law, independent of the finding of a jury, does not attach to the mere lapse of time short of seven years.<sup>4</sup> breach of them, if the parties interested, instead of making inquiries respecting the person on whose life so much depended, chose to wait for the legal presumption. Such inconveniences may no doubt arise, but they do not warrant us in laying down a rule, that the party shall be presumed to have died on the last day of the seven years, which would manifestly be contrary to the fact in almost all instances.”—2 M. & W. 913, 914.

conflagration, it often becomes important, with a view of determining the right of succession to estates, to ascertain who was the survivor. Direct proof, however, can seldom be procured in these cases, and, consequently, in the Roman law, and in several other codes, recourse is had to artificial presumptions, wherever the particular circumstances connected with the deaths are wholly unknown. These presumptions are based on the probabilities of survivorship resulting from strength, age, and sex. In the case of a father and son perishing together in the same shipwreck or battle, the Roman law presumes that the son died first, if he was under the age of puberty; but if he was above that age, that he was the survivor; upon the principle, that in the former case, the elder is generally the more robust, and in the latter, the younger.<sup>1</sup> The French code has regard to the ages of fifteen and sixty; presuming that of those under the former age, the eldest survived; and that of those above the latter age, the youngest survived. If one of these parties were under the age of fifteen, and the other above the age of sixty, the former is presumed to have survived. If both parties were between those ages, but of different sexes, the male is presumed to have survived, unless he were more than a year younger than the female: but if they were of the same sex, the presumption is in favour of the survivorship of the younger, as opening the succession in the order of nature.<sup>2</sup> The same rules were in force in the territory of Orleans, at the time of its cession to the United States, and have since been incorporated into the Code of Louisiana.<sup>3</sup> They have also, with some modifications, been adopted into the State of New York.<sup>4</sup> experienced sailor, survived the younger.<sup>1</sup> This case, however, cannot be relied upon as an authority, since it is opposed to a long current of decisions. It remains only to observe, that if any circumstances connected with the death of either party can be proved, the whole question of survivorship may be dealt with as one of fact, and the comparative strength, or skill, or energy, of the two sufferers may then very fairly be taken into account.

§ 161. A rule has been adopted in insurance law, that if a vessel has sailed, and no tidings of her have been received within a reasonable time, she shall be presumed to have foundered at sea.<sup>2</sup> By "tidings" are meant, not mere rumours, but some actual intelligence received from persons capable of giving an authentic account;<sup>3</sup> and, it seems, that in an action on a policy from an English to a foreign port, the presumption of loss will sufficiently arise, from proof that the ship was not heard of in this country after she sailed, without calling witnesses from the port of destination to show that she never arrived there.<sup>4</sup> Neither the law of England, nor the usage of merchants, has fixed any definite period after which the assured may demand payment for his loss, in case no intelligence is received respecting the vessel insured; but a practice has prevailed among insurers of deeming a vessel lost, provided she shall not have been heard of within six months after her departure for any port in Europe, or within twelve months if bound for a greater distance.<sup>5</sup>

§ 162. Another presumption connected with the law of insurance is this, that if a ship, shortly after sailing, shall, without visible or adequate cause, become leaky, or otherwise incapable of performing the voyage insured, she shall be deemed to have been unseaworthy at the commencement of the risk.<sup>1</sup> This presumption, however, is not, it seems, of so binding a nature, as to induce the court to grant a third trial, when two special juries have already concurred in finding a verdict in opposition to it.<sup>2</sup>

§ 162 A. The Court of Admiralty recognises certain presumptions, which ought to be borne in mind, as they have the effect of technically shifting the burthen of proof. Thus, in cases of collision, if one of the vessels be shown to have been at anchor, that fact so far raises a presumption in her favour, as to impose on the other vessel the necessity of making out her defence.<sup>3</sup> So, if a ship be proved to have been in stays at the time of the collision, she is presumed to have been unable to avoid it; and the burthen of proof rests on the opposite side to establish, either that the vessel was improperly put in stays, or that the damage was occasioned by stress of weather, or by other unavoidable accident.<sup>4</sup> Again, in the case of a collision between two ships, the "person in charge," or, in other words, the master, of each ship is bound to render assistance to the other vessel; and if he losses may be demanded, is fixed by express regulation. By the ordinances of the former, if a ship insured on going to, or coming from, the Indies, is not heard of within a year and a half after her departure from the port of outfit, she is deemed lost, 2 Magens, 33; by those of the latter, if the assured receives no news of his ship, he may, at the expiration of a year for common voyages, reckoning from the day of the departure, and after two years for those of a greater distance, make his session to the underwriters, and demand payment, without being obliged to produce any certificate of the loss, Ordonnance de la Marine, liv. 3, t. 6, des Assur. fail to do so, the collision shall, in the absence of proof to the contrary, be deemed to have been caused by his wrongful act.<sup>1</sup> Again, if a salvor's vessel has been injured or lost while engaged in the salvage service, the Court of Admiralty presumes, prima facie, that such injury or loss was caused by the necessities of the service, and not by the salvor's default.<sup>2</sup>

§ 163. By the principles, too, of our maritime law, every reasonable presumption must be made in favour of the rights of property in the owners, whenever any question of derelict is mooted between them and the salvors. Thus, the 33rd article of the laws of Oleron enacts, that "if from any ship or other vessel have been cast overboard several goods or merchandises which are in chests well locked and made fast; or books so well secured and so well conditioned that they may not be dammified by salt water; in such cases it is to be presumed that they who did cast such goods overboard do still retain an intention, hope, and desire of recovering the same: for which reason, such as shall happen to find such things, are obliged to make restitution thereof to him who shall make a due inquiry after them." On the principle of this enactment, which has been the law for the last seven hundred and fifty years, and which is still in full force,<sup>3</sup> it has repeatedly been held, that where salvors make a claim, as in a case of dereliction, it will not suffice for them merely to prove that they found the vessel at sea apparently abandoned, but they must go further and prove that the master and crew, when they left the vessel, did so without any hope, expectation, or intention of being able to return, or in the technical language of the law, sine spe recuperandi.<sup>4</sup>

It here deserves notice that a ship-owner,—except so far as his liability is limited by the Merchant Shipping Act, 1854,<sup>1</sup>—is primâ facie presumed to be responsible for any damage occasioned by negligence in the navigation of his vessel. In order, therefore, to bring himself within the exemption from liability conferred upon him by that Act where pilotage is compulsory,<sup>2</sup> it is not sufficient merely to show that he had a pilot on board at the time of the accident, and that the presence of such pilot was compulsory,<sup>3</sup> but the burthen of proof lies upon him to establish the further fact, that the damage was occasioned exclusively by the pilot's fault.<sup>4</sup> The legal owner of a ship is also primâ facie liable to pay for all such repairs and stores ordered by the master, as are necessary for the equipment and navigation of the ship in the voyage or trade in which she is employed; for the master, in

§ 165. In cases respecting the national character of a man, who either has no fixed place of residence, or who has two homes, and the scale is almost evenly balanced between them, the legal presumption is in favour of what is called the forum originis, or domicile of origin; by which is meant, not the place where he may chance to have been born, but the home of his parents.<sup>3</sup> When a man's domicile of origin is not known, or when his intention to abandon it can be proved, the law presumes, primâ facie, that the place of his actual residence is the place of his acquired domicile:<sup>4</sup> but this presumption may be easily rebutted by showing that he has merely come to live in the country where he is staying, either for a limited period, or for a special purpose, or that in point of fact he has no animus manendi, no settled intention of making that country his place of permanent abode.<sup>5</sup> When a married man has two houses situate in different countries, in both of which he is in the habit of residing, his home or domicile will generally be presumed to be that house in which his wife and general establishment of servants always remain when he is at the other.<sup>1</sup> In consequence of the legal presumption in favour of the domicile of origin,<sup>2</sup> slighter evidence is required to warrant the conclusion that a man has intended to abandon an acquired domicile, and to resume his domicile of origin, than is necessary to justify the conclusion that he has determined to abandon his domicile of origin, and to acquire a new one.<sup>3</sup> The presumption, too, against the acquisition of a new domicile will be stronger in the case of a person, who is alleged to have gained such domicile in a foreign land, than it would be, were the domicile in a country where the party would not be a foreigner.<sup>4</sup> For instance, the court would more readily decide that a Scotchman had acquired an English, or an Anglo-Indian, domicile than a French one; for a man's acquisition of a domicile in a foreign country is obviously a most serious matter, since it not only renders the validity of his testamentary acts, and the disposition of his personal property, liable to be governed by foreign laws, but it is calculated to involve him in a conflict of national duties, and to subject him to the embarrassments of a divided allegiance.<sup>5</sup> The law presumes that the domicile of a wife is the domicile of her husband; and this presumption is, as a general rule, conclusive.<sup>6</sup> An exception, however, might possibly be recognised in the case of a judicial separation pronounced by competent authority,<sup>7</sup> or where the husband had abjured the realm, deserted his wife, and established himself permanently in a foreign country, or had committed felony, and been transported.<sup>8</sup>

§ 167. Where the limitation of a peerage cannot be discovered, the law presumes that it descends, not to the heirs general, but to the heirs male of the body of the original grantee.<sup>2</sup>

§ 168.<sup>3</sup> A spirit of comity is presumed to exist among nations; and, consequently, it has become a maxim of international law, that when the solution of any legal question depends upon the laws of a foreign State,—as, for example, when a contract made in one country is sought to be enforced in another,—courts of justice will, in the silence of any positive rule affirming or denying or restraining the operation of such foreign laws, presume the adoption of them by their own government, unless they are repugnant to its policy, or prejudicial to its interest.<sup>4</sup>

§ 169.<sup>5</sup> PRESUMPTIONS OF FACT, usually treated as composing the second general head of presumptive evidence, can hardly be said with propriety to belong to this branch of the law. They are in truth but mere arguments, of which the major premiss is not a rule of law; they belong equally to any and every subject-matter; and are to be judged by the common and received tests of the truth of propositions, and the validity of arguments. They depend upon their own natural efficacy in generating belief, as derived from those connections, which are shown by experience, irrespective of any legal relations. They differ from presumptions of law in this essential respect, that while those are reduced to fixed rules, and constitute a branch of the system of jurisprudence, these merely natural presumptions are derived wholly and directly from the circumstances of the particular case, by means of the common experience of mankind, without the aid or control of any rules of law. Such, for example, is the inference of guilt, drawn from the discovery of a broken knife in the pocket of the prisoner, the other part of the blade being found sticking in the window of a house, which, by means of such an instrument, had been burglariously entered.<sup>1</sup>

§ 170. These presumptions remain the same under whatever law the legal effect of the facts, when found, is to be decided.<sup>2</sup> They embrace all the relations between the fact requiring proof and the fact or facts actually proved, whether such relations be direct or indirect, and whether they be physical or moral. A single circumstance may raise the inference, as well as a long chain of circumstances. For instance, the decision of King Solomon as to which of the two harlots was the mother of the living child, rested on the general presumption<sup>3</sup> in favour of maternal affection, and on the sole fact that the "bowels" of the real mother "yearned upon her son," and she would in no wise consent to his being slain.<sup>4</sup> So—to pass from history to fiction—

But will suspect 'twas he that made the slaughter ? "

<sup>3</sup> It may deserve notice that, apart from this presumption, the sacred narrative contains not one word to show that, after all, the judgment was right, that is, that it was really in accordance with the fact. The proverbial wisdom of the decision has, all along, been assumed rather than proved.

<sup>4</sup> 1 King's, ch. 3, vv. 16—28. Suetonius, in his life of the Emperor Claudian, ch. 15, states, that that monarch discovered a woman to be the real mother of a young man, whom she refused to acknowledge, by commanding her to marry him; for rather than commit incest she confessed the truth. Diodorus Siculus also speaks of a King of Thrace, who discovered the famous judgment of Sancho Panza acquitting the herdsman charged with rape,<sup>1</sup> was founded on the ascertained fact that the prosecutrix successfully resisted the attempt to take her purse, which the accused made by order of the court. "Sister of mine," said honest Sancho, to the forceful but not forced damsel, "had you shown the same, or but half as much courage and resolution in defending your chastity, as you have shown in defending your money, the strength of Hercules could not have violated you."

§ 171.<sup>2</sup> Although it is the exclusive province of the jury to fix the due weight which ought to be given to presumptions of fact, juries are usually aided in their labours by the advice and instruction of the judge, more or less strongly urged, at his discretion. Indeed, some few general propositions in regard to matters of fact, and the weight of testimony, are now universally taken for granted in the administration of justice, and are sanctioned by the usage of the bench.<sup>3</sup> Such, for instance, is the caution given to juries, to regard with distrust the testimony of an accomplice, unless it be materially confirmed by other evidence. There is no rigid presumption of the common law against such testimony; yet experience has shown that it is little worthy of credit; and on this experience the usage is founded.<sup>4</sup> A similar caution should prevail in regard to mere verbal admissions of a party, this kind of evidence being subject to much imperfection and mistake.<sup>5</sup> So, if a witness be detected in telling a falsehood in one part of his testimony, the jury will be advised to place little reliance on the remainder of his narrative.

PART II.

RULES GOVERNING THE PRODUCTION OF TESTIMONY.

CHAPTER I.

CORRESPONDENCE OF EVIDENCE WITH ALLEGATIONS; SUBSTANCE OF ISSUE; VARIANCE; AND AMENDMENT.

§ 172.<sup>1</sup> The production of evidence to the jury is governed by certain principles, which may be treated under four general rules. First, the evidence must correspond with the allegations, but the substance only of the issues need be proved; secondly, the evidence must be confined to the points in issue; thirdly, the burthen of proving a proposition at issue lies on the party holding the substantial affirmative; and fourthly, the best evidence, of which the case in its nature is susceptible, must always be produced. These rules will now be considered in their order.

§ 173.<sup>2</sup> The pleadings, at common law, are composed of the written allegations of the parties, terminating in propositions distinctly affirmed on one side, and denied on the other, called the issues. If these are propositions of fact, they must, as a general rule,<sup>3</sup> be tried by the jury, and the first rule, which it is important to remember, is, that the evidence must correspond with the allegations, but that it is sufficient if the substance of the issues be proved. As one of the main objects of pleading is to apprise the parties of the specific nature of the question to be tried, and as this object would be defeated, if either party were at liberty to prove facts essentially different from those which he has stated on the record, as constituting his claim or charge on the one hand, or his defence on the other, the necessity of establishing such a general rule as the present becomes apparent, and the only remaining question concerns its limitation and extent.<sup>1</sup> Great strictness was formerly required in the application of this rule; almost every disagreement between the allegation and the proof, except in matters clearly impertinent, being held to constitute what was called a variance, the consequences of which were as fatal to the party on whom the proof lay, as a total failure of evidence. Thus, in an action of assumpsit for the breach of warranty of a horse, where the declaration stated a general warranty, and the proof was that the defendant had warranted the horse sound everywhere, except a kick on the leg, the plaintiff was nonsuited on account of this variance, although the unsoundness of which he complained, and which he established at the trial, was a dropsy.<sup>2</sup> So, where a declaration in ejectment described the premises as situate in the united parishes of St. Giles-in-the-Fields, and St. George, Bloomsbury, and it appeared that the parishes were united by Act of Parliament for the maintenance of the poor, but for no other purpose, and that the premises in question were in the parish of St. George, Bloomsbury, this was held to be a fatal variance, though it was idle to suppose that the defendant could have been misled by the misdescription.<sup>3</sup> To give but one more instance where hundreds might easily be

<sup>1</sup> In the case of Caton v. Caton, 7 Ec. & Mar. Cas. 28, Dr. Lushington very sensibly observed: "The maxim of the Eccles. Courts, and I may say of all other courts, is to decide secundum allegata et probata. There must be both charge and evidence; the party cited is entitled to know the specific charge for the purpose of defence. * * The difficulty I feel is to avoid the error of adhering to this rule with pedantic strictness, and, on the other hand, not to weaken a rule which is founded on one of the great principles of justice." See Malcomson v. Clayton, 13 Moo. P. C. R. 206, per Id. Chelmsford; and The Ann, 1 Lush. Adm. R. 55, in which last case little trouble seems to have been taken by the learned judges of the Privy Council to avoid the "pedantic strictness" alluded to by Dr. Lushington. See, also, *Tyrer v. § 174. The attention of the Legislature being at length drawn to the flagrant injustice which was thus constantly occasioned, a partial remedy was provided in 1828 by the Act of 9 G. 4, c. 15,<sup>2</sup> which enacts, that every court of record in civil actions, any judge at Nisi Prius, and any court of oyer and terminer and general gaol delivery, may cause the record on which any trial may be pending in a civil action,<sup>3</sup> or in an indictment or informa-

§ 175. As this statute, though a salutary measure so far as it went, was found to afford a very ineffectual remedy for an evil which all suitors felt to be highly oppressive, larger powers of amendment were granted in 1833 to the English judges, and in 1840 to the Irish judges, by the respective Acts of 3 & 4 W. 4, c. 42, and 3 & 4 V., c. 105.<sup>2</sup> Under the 23rd section of the former Act,<sup>3</sup>—which corresponds almost exactly with the 48th section of

<sup>2</sup> §§ 48 and 49 of this Act, as applicable to courts of common law, are now repealed by 16 & 17 V., c. 113, § 3, and Sch. A., Ir.

<sup>3</sup> The exact words are these: § 23,—after reciting that “great expense is often incurred, and delay or failure of justice takes place at trials, by reason of variances as to some particular or particulars between the proof and the record, or setting forth on the record or document on which the trial is had, of contracts, customs, prescriptions, names, and other matters and circumstances not material to the merits of the case, and by the misstatement of which the opposite party cannot have been prejudiced, and the same cannot in any case be amended at the trial, except where the variance is between any matter in writing or in print produced in evidence and the record; and that it is expedient to allow such amendments as hereinafter mentioned to be made on the trial of the cause;”—enacts, that, “it shall be lawful for any court of record holding plea in civil actions, and any judge sitting at Nisi Prius, if such court or judge shall see fit so to do, to cause the record, writ, or document, on which any trial may be pending before any such court or judge, in any civil action, or in any information in the nature of a quo warranto, or proceedings on a mandamus, when any variance shall appear between the proof and the recital or setting forth, on the record, writ, or document on which the trial is proceeding, of any contract, custom, prescription, name, or other matter, in any particular or particulars, in the judgment of such court or judge, not material to the merits of the case, and by which the opposite party cannot have been prejudiced in the conduct of his action, prosecution, or defence, to be forthwith amended by some officer of the court or otherwise, both in the part of the pleadings where such variance occurs, and in every other part of the pleadings which it may become necessary to the latter,—any court of record in civil actions, or any judge at Nisi Prius, may cause the record, writ, or document, on which any trial may be pending in a civil action, or in an information in the nature of a quo warranto, or proceeding on a mandamus—when any variance shall appear between the proof and the recital on the record, &c., of any contract, custom, prescription, name, or other matter, in any particular, in the judgment of such court or amend, on such terms as to payment of costs to the other party, or postponing the trial to be had before the same or another jury, or both payment of costs and postponement, as such court or judge shall think reasonable; and in case such variance shall be in some particular or particulars, in the judgment of such court or judge, not material to the merits of the case, but such as that the opposite party may have been prejudiced thereby in the conduct of his action, prosecution, or defence, then such court or judge shall have power to cause the same to be amended upon payment of costs to the other party, and withdrawing the record or postponing the trial as aforesaid, as such court or judge shall think reasonable; and after any such amendment the trial shall proceed, in case the same shall be proceeded with, in the same manner in all respects, both with respect to the liability of witnesses to be indicted for perjury, and otherwise, as if no such variance had appeared; and in case such trial shall be had at Nisi Prius, or by virtue of such writ as aforesaid, the order for the amendment shall be indorsed on the postea or the writ, as the case may be, and returned together with the record or writ, and thereupon such papers, rolls, and other records of the court from which such record or writ issued, as it may be necessary to amend, shall be amended accordingly: and in case the trial shall be had in any court of record, then the order for amendment shall be entered on the roll or other document upon which the trial shall be had: Provided that it shall be lawful for any party who is dissatisfied with the decision of such judge at Nisi Prius, sheriff or other officer, respecting his allowance of any such amendment, to apply to the court from which such record or writ issued for a new trial upon that ground, and in case any such court shall think such amendment improper, a new trial shall be granted accordingly, on such terms as the court shall think fit, or the court shall make such other order as to them may seem meet.” § 24 enacts, that “the said court or judge shall and may, if they or he think fit, in such cases of variance, instead of causing the record or document to be amended as aforesaid, direct the jury to find the fact or facts according to the evidence, and thereupon such finding shall be stated on such record or document, and, notwithstanding the finding on the issue joined, the said court or the court from which the record has issued shall, if they shall think the said variance immaterial to the merits of the case, and the mis-statement such as could not have prejudiced the opposite party in the conduct of the action or defence, give judgment according to the very right and justice of the case.” See Addington v. Magan, 10 Com. B. 576.

judge not material to the merits of the case (which words have been interpreted to mean the substantial merits, or the real question at issue between the parties,<sup>1</sup>) and by which variance the opposite party cannot have been prejudiced in the conduct of his action, prosecution, or defence,—to be forthwith amended, on such terms, as to payment of costs or postponing the trial, as the court or judge shall think reasonable ; and in case such variance shall be in some particular, in the judgment of such court or judge, not material to the merits of the case, but such as that the opposite party may have been prejudiced thereby in the conduct of his action, prosecution, or defence, then the same may be amended upon payment of costs to the other party, and withdrawing the record, or postponing the trial, as such court or judge shall think reasonable. The 24th section of the English Act, and the 49th of the Irish Act, respectively provide, that in doubtful cases, the judge, avoiding the responsibility of deciding, may direct the jury to find the facts according to the evidence, and leave the question of the materiality of the variance for the consideration of the court above.<sup>2</sup>

§ 176. After experience had proved that the powers vested in the judges by these Acts, though highly beneficial, were far from being sufficiently extensive to secure in all cases the administration of substantial justice, the Legislature again interposed, and by the Common Law Procedure Act of 1852,<sup>3</sup> conferred on the courts additional powers of granting amendments. In the first place, that statute, after enacting, in § 34, that the nonjoinder and misjoinder of plaintiffs may be amended upon terms by the court or a judge before trial, goes on to provide, in § 35, that “ in case it shall appear at the trial of any action <sup>4</sup> that there has been a misjoinder of plaintiffs, or that some person or persons not joined

as plaintiff or plaintiffs ought to have been so joined, and the defendant shall not, at or before the time of pleading, have given notice in writing that he objects to such nonjoinder, specifying therein the name or names of such person or persons, such misjoinder or nonjoinder may be amended, as a variance, at the trial by any court of record holding plea in civil actions, and by any judge sitting at Nisi Prius, or other presiding officer, in like manner as to the mode of amendment and proceedings consequent thereon, or as near thereto as the circumstances of the case will admit, as in the case of amendments of variances under the Act of 3 & 4 W. 4, c. 42, "if it shall appear to such court, or judge, or other presiding officer, that such misjoinder or nonjoinder was not for the purpose of obtaining an undue advantage, and that injustice will not be done by such amendment, and that the person or persons to be added as aforesaid, consent, either in person, or by writing under his, her, or their hands, to be so joined, or that the person or persons to be struck out as aforesaid, were originally introduced without his, her, or their consent, or that such person or persons consent, in manner aforesaid, to be so struck out; and such amendment shall be made upon such terms as the court, or judge, or other presiding officer, by whom such amendment is made, shall think proper; and when such amendment shall have been made, the liability of any person or persons, who shall have been added as co-plaintiff or co-plaintiffs, shall, subject to any terms imposed as aforesaid, be the same as if such person or persons had been originally joined in such action."

§ 177. Similar powers of amendment, "in the case of the joinder of too many defendants in an action on contract," are conferred by § 37 of the Act, which enacts, that it shall be lawful for the court or a judge in that case, "at any time before the trial of such cause, to order that the name or names of one or more of such defendants be struck out, if it shall appear to such court or judge that injustice will not be done by such amendment; and the amendment shall be made upon such terms as the court or judge, by whom such amendment is made, shall think proper; and in case it shall appear at the trial of any action on contract that there has been a misjoinder of defendants, such misjoinder may be amended, as a variance, at the trial,<sup>1</sup> in like manner as the misjoinder of plaintiffs has been hereinbefore directed to be amended, and upon such terms as the court, or judge, or other presiding officer, by whom such amendment is made, shall think proper." Under this enactment the record may be amended at the trial by striking out the name of a defendant improperly joined, even though judgment by default may have been signed against him.<sup>2</sup> But the application to amend must, as it seems, be made before verdict;<sup>3</sup> and it will not be granted at all, if it appears that the defendant, whose name is sought to be erased from the record, has been joined, not by mistake, but for the purpose of trying his liability,<sup>4</sup> or in order to obtain some unfair advantage.<sup>5</sup> Neither will the court in banc review the decision of a judge, who, in the exercise of his discretion, has refused to allow an amendment under this enactment to be made.<sup>6</sup>

§ 178. The most important section relative to amendments contained in the Act of 1852, is the 222nd, which, after reciting that "the power of amendment now vested in the courts and the judges thereof is insufficient to enable them to prevent the failure of justice by reason of mistakes and objections of form," proceeds to enact, that "it shall be lawful for the superior courts of Common Law, and every judge thereof, and any judge sitting at Nisi Prius, at all times to amend all defects and errors in any proceeding in civil causes, whether there is anything in writing to amend by or not, and whether the defect or error be that of the party applying to amend or not; and all such amendments may be made with or without costs, and upon such terms as to the court or judge may seem fit; and all such amendments as may be necessary for the purpose of determining in the existing suit the real question in controversy between the parties shall be so made."<sup>7</sup>

<sup>7</sup> This section is now extended, by 22 & 23 V., c. 21, § 9, "to all suits and proceedings on the Revenue side of the Court of Exchequer."

§ 179. The Common Law Procedure Acts of 1854 and 1860 contain similar clauses to that just cited, authorising the amendment of "all defects and errors in any proceedings under the provisions" of those Acts respectively, "if duly applied for";<sup>1</sup> and the Irish Common Law Procedure Act of 1853 also empowers the judges in that country to amend "all defects and errors in any writ, pleading, record, or other proceeding in civil causes."<sup>2</sup> This last Act further provides, that "when such amendment shall be made at Nisi Prius, or upon any inquiry, the order shall be indorsed on the abstract or writ, and all pleadings or other records of the court, which it may be necessary to amend in conformity therewith, shall be amended accordingly."<sup>3</sup>

§ 180. In thus empowering "the superior Courts of Common Law, and every judge thereof," to amend defects, the Legislature has employed ambiguous language. These words, as found in the English Act of 1852, no doubt include not only the courts of Queen's Bench, Common Pleas, and Exchequer at Westminster, but the Court of Common Pleas at Lancaster, the Court of Pleas at Durham,<sup>4</sup> and the judges of those courts respectively.<sup>5</sup> Still the question remains, do they also include the House of Lords when sitting as a Court of Error, or the Exchequer Chamber? It is feared that they do not; for as the interpretation clause<sup>6</sup> expressly enacts, that "the word 'court' shall be understood to mean any one of the superior Courts of Common Law in which any action is brought;" and that "the word 'action' shall be understood to mean any personal action brought by writ of summons in any of the said courts;" it is difficult to see how any Court of Error can be held to be included in such language. Should this construction ultimately prevail, it will become necessary at no distant period, to amend the clause in question; for it is obviously absurd that Courts of Error should not be authorised, like the tribunals whose decisions they supervise, to make such alterations in the record as may be required for the purposes of substantial justice. The above observations apply equally to the Irish Act of 1853,<sup>1</sup> but not to the English Act of 1854; for the language employed in this last statute is different, and the words used in the interpretation clause would seem to be sufficiently comprehensive to include all Courts of Error.<sup>2</sup>

§ 180 A. But whether the Exchequer Chamber be or be not empowered to amend, it is clear that even after judgment and after the commencement of proceedings in error, the court below may authorise amendments, provided that application be made to it for that purpose before the record be actually removed into the Court of Error. Thus, where the Barons of the Exchequer had refused to arrest judgment on a verdict found for the plaintiff, upon the ground that the declaration merely stated that "the plaintiff sued the defendant for freight," and omitted the words "for money payable," they subsequently amended the record by inserting the formal words, the defendant having lodged with the master a writ of error, with the view of questioning the soundness of their decision.<sup>3</sup> It may here be added,—though the point seems scarcely to deserve a formal notice,—that the court in banc has power to amend the record, where leave to move to enter a verdict is reserved; although the judge at the trial may have expressly refused either to allow an amendment, or to reserve leave to amend.<sup>4</sup>

§ 181. The additional powers of amendment conferred on the judges by the Common Law Procedure Acts will unquestionably be productive of signal benefit to suitors, if, in furtherance of their salutary design, they are exercised, as they ought to be, in a liberal spirit.<sup>5</sup> As yet, however, few decisions have been pronounced upon the subject, and these few do not very materially illustrate the operation of the statutes. Perhaps the most important case which has been determined is that of Wilkin v. Reed.<sup>1</sup> There the declaration alleged, that the defendant had fraudulently represented to the plaintiff that the reason why he had dismissed a clerk, whom the plaintiff was about to take into his service, was the decrease in his business, and that the defendant had recommended the plaintiff to try the clerk, and had knowingly suppressed the fact that he had been dismissed on account of dishonesty. At the trial it appeared in evidence, that the plaintiff had asked the defendant the cause of the clerk's dismissal, and had been told in reply that it was in consequence of the defendant's business having fallen off; that this answer was true; but that the clerk had been guilty of embezzlement while in the defendant's employ, and that the defendant, having been asked no questions respecting the clerk's honesty, had not communicated that fact to the plaintiff. On this evidence the plaintiff's counsel applied to amend the declaration, by striking out the allegation, that the defendant had fraudulently misrepresented the reason of dismissal, and by substituting for it an averment, that the defendant had fraudulently suppressed the fact that the clerk had been guilty of dishonesty. Mr. Justice Maule, however, who tried the cause, refused to allow the amendment, on the ground that the real question in controversy was not whether the clerk had been dishonest, or whether his former master had suppressed the fact of his dishonesty, but whether the real cause of his dismissal had been truly stated. The Court of Common Pleas afterwards supported this ruling, and held, first, that it is a matter, not of law, but of fact, what "the real question in controversy between the parties" is; next, that this matter of fact must be determined, not by the jury, but by the judge on a careful consideration of the pleadings and the evidence; and, lastly, that "the question in controversy" is, in other words, the question which both parties really intended to have tried, and not any question which during the course of the trial may for the first time be brought into controversy by one of the litigants.<sup>1</sup>

But now a totally different principle prevails. Every amendment is to be made, which is necessary for determining the real question in controversy between the parties."

§ 182. Whether the judge would be warranted by the 222nd section in allowing a plea to be added at the trial, is a question which is not yet decided; but the better opinion seems to be, that such a course may be adopted whenever it is necessary for the purpose of placing on the record the real question in dispute.<sup>2</sup> It often happens, as observed by Mr. Justice Maule, that in consequence either of imperfect instructions given to the pleader, or of ignorance, or of oversight, the substantial point intended by the parties to be tried is not raised by the pleadings;<sup>3</sup> and when this occurs, it seems far more reasonable to hold that the statute will justify the making of any amendment which will promote the trial of the substantial question, than to contend that the power is limited to the amendment of such defects and errors as may be apparent on the face of the existing record.<sup>4</sup> It has, however, been held by the Barons of the Exchequer, that the Act does not render it imperative on the court to allow a plea to be substituted after issue joined, even though the application be made prior to the trial, and though it be supported by an affidavit that the real question in controversy between the parties can only be raised on the record by the introduction of the proposed plea.<sup>5</sup> The case in which this point was ruled was an action for money lent, to which the defendant had pleaded that he was "never indebted."

After issue joined he applied to the court for leave to substitute a plea, which set up as a defence that the loan was contracted for an illegal purpose, and he swore that the real point in dispute was whether the plaintiff was debarred from recovering on the ground of the illegality. In support of the motion the defendant contended that he was entitled as of right to the rule as prayed, for the Act expressly states that all amendments necessary for determining the real question in controversy "shall be so made." Notwithstanding this argument the rule was refused.

§ 182 A. In the case of May v. Footner,<sup>1</sup> the declaration stated that the defendant entered certain land of the plaintiff, and dug up a portion of it. The real questions in dispute were, first, whether the land was the plaintiff's property; and next, whether there was a public footway across it. At the trial, it turned out that the close in question was, at the time of the trespass, in the actual possession of a tenant of the plaintiff, whereupon the defendant applied for a nonsuit. The plaintiff, however, was allowed by the judge to amend the declaration, so as to adapt it to an injury to his reversionary interest, and he obtained a verdict with nominal damages. The court subsequently held that the amendment had been properly made. In another case, where issue had been taken on an allegation that a certain cargo of goods was not delivered in March, it appeared at the trial that this was strictly true, but that it did not raise the real question, which was whether the cargo had been delivered in such time that the defendant was bound to accept it. Thereupon the judge, at the instance of the plaintiff, amended the declaration by inserting an averment that the plaintiff, at the defendant's request, had delayed the shipment, and that the defendant had promised to accept a delivery of that shipment within a reasonable time, and had exonerated the plaintiff from delivering in March. This amendment was also upheld by the court above.<sup>2</sup> In a third case, an amendment was held to have been properly made on the trial of an action for libel, when, on objection being taken that the declaration contained merely the substance of the libel, a verbatim copy of the defendant's letter was set out on the record.<sup>1</sup> Again, in the case of Hailes v. Marks,<sup>2</sup> the court decided that a plea of justification, which had been pleaded to an action for false imprisonment, might be amended, by striking out such of the allegations as could not be proved, and by amending the other averments in accordance with the evidence.

§ 183. Upon the trial of an issue of nul tiel record, the court, under § 222, has amended the declaration by inserting therein the true date of the judgment recovered;<sup>3</sup> and this decision deserves the greater notice, because it had formerly been held that, under § 23 of the Act of 3 & 4 W. 4, c. 42, such an amendment could not be made.<sup>4</sup> In Cornish v. Hockin,<sup>5</sup> the court in banc allowed the indorsement of an erroneous date on a writ to be amended; in Leigh v. Baker,<sup>6</sup> a writ improperly sued out under the Bills of Exchange Act, was amended on such terms as the circumstances required, so as to make it a good writ under the Common Law Procedure Act; in Edwards v. Hodges,<sup>7</sup> a plea of "Not Guilty by Statute" was amended by inserting in the margin an Act which had been omitted; and in Buckland v. Johnson,<sup>8</sup> where the plea, owing to a technical variance, was not proved by the evidence, it was amended at Nisi Prius so as to raise the substantial question, and the judge declined to impose upon the defendant the costs of the day: Where, in an action of contract, one of several defendants appears at the trial not to be liable, the plaintiff ought to apply to the judge to strike out such defendant's name, under § 37 of the Act; and if he declines to take this course, he cannot afterwards move the court in banc to grant an amendment under § 222, for that section has no application to a case of misjoinder.<sup>1</sup> Neither does § 222 extend to cases of nonjoinder of defendants; and, consequently, a judge at Nisi Prius cannot under it add the defendant's wife as a party, in an action brought against the husband alone for a debt incurred by his wife before marriage.<sup>2</sup> But the nonjoinder of a nominal plaintiff in an action of ejectment has been amended under this section, by adding his name in the writ, he being present in court, and consenting to become a party.<sup>3</sup>

§ 183 A. No amendment ought to be allowed at Nisi Prius, if its effect will be to afford reasonable grounds for a demurrer; for it would be obviously unjust to deprive a party of his right to demur, and thus possibly force him, at a large increase of costs, to move in arrest of judgment, or for judgment non obstante veredicto.<sup>4</sup>

§ 184. As the decisions under the more recent Acts are neither numerous nor important, it will still be advisable to refer to the cases decided under the Act of William the Fourth, and the reference will be made at some length, since these authorities will be found not only to illustrate the operation of that statute, but to explain the general nature of variance, and to mark the distinction between material and immaterial allegations.<sup>5</sup> And, first, as to those cases in which an amendment has been allowed. have been really spoken were, "I have heard that S. is to be tried, &c.," the court held that the variance might be amended on payment of costs, though it was urged, that as the expression "I have heard" reduced the charge from a direct assertion to mere idle gossip, the defendant was prejudiced by the amendment, because, had these words been originally declared upon, he might have suffered judgment by default, or otherwise have pleaded a justification.<sup>1</sup> Mr. Justice Bosanquet observed, that the introduction of the words "I have heard" left the slander as actionable as before, although the amount of damages might be lessened;—that a variance, which is not material to the issue raised, but which may affect the quantum of damages, was not within the contemplation of the legislature when speaking of the "merits of the case;"—and that, as the damages were given for the words as proved, and as the defendant did not apply to amend his pleadings or to put off the trial, it did not appear how he could have been prejudiced in his defence.<sup>2</sup> This case, therefore, is important, as showing that an amendment should not be refused, simply because it may lessen the amount of damages, provided that it cannot affect the substantial line of defence. In another action of slander, where the words alleged to have been spoken of and concerning the plaintiff, as a surgeon, were, "There have been many inquests held upon persons who have died, because he attended them;" but those proved were, "Several have died that he (the plaintiff) has attended, and inquests have been held on them," the judge amended the record, and the court held that he was justified in so doing.<sup>3</sup> So, where the only variance was, that the words stated in the declaration were in the English language, while the expressions proved were Welsh, an amendment was allowed; but the judge thinking that the defendant might, by the mistake, have been prejudiced in the conduct of his defence, postponed the trial till the morrow, and made the plaintiff pay the costs of the day, and deposit for them 15*l.* instant, subject to taxation.<sup>4</sup> This appears to have been rather severe upon the plaintiff, as it is difficult, if not impossible, to discover in what manner the defendant could have been prejudiced by the error in the declaration.

§ 185. In another action of defamation, where the declaration alleged that the defendant published a libel, "contained in and being an article in a certain weekly paper, called the 'Paul Pry,'" and it was proved that he gave a slip of printed paper, containing the libellous matter, to several persons to read; but it did not clearly appear that it had been cut from that newspaper, the record was amended without any terms being imposed on the plaintiff, by striking out the allegation marked in italics.<sup>1</sup> So, where, in setting out slanderous expressions, the word "purchasers" had, apparently by some mistake, been inserted in the declaration for the word "houses," the court allowed an amendment, as the opposite party could not have been misled.<sup>2</sup> Again, when a plea of justification, in an action for a malicious prosecution on a charge of receiving stolen goods, alleged that the goods had been stolen by "some person unknown," the judge at the trial was held to have rightly allowed these three words to be struck out, and the name of the party who was proved to have taken the goods to be substituted in their place.<sup>3</sup>

§ 186. The case of Whitwill v. Scheer<sup>4</sup> is important as showing that, where a declaration in assumpsit states a special contract, and then contains an erroneous allegation in conformity with its supposed legal effect, such allegation may either be struck out, or so altered as to express correctly the real meaning of the contract. In that case, the declaration set out the charter-party on which the action was brought, with certain memoranda indorsed; it then alleged mutual promises, and added a promise by the defendant to have an agent at a certain place, in order to exercise an option given to him by the charter-party and memoranda. disprove the plea of non-assumpsit, the charter-party and memoranda were alone given in evidence, and it was then objected for the defendant, that the plaintiff must be nonsuited on the ground of variance, since the promise as to having an agent was not proved to have been expressly made, and could not be implied from the charter-party, and the promise to perform its terms. The court admitted that the objection must have prevailed, had the added promise been meant to apply to some contract not contained in the charter-party, but they held that as it, in fact, was intended merely as a formal, though erroneous, statement of the legal effect of that which was contained therein, the variance might well be cured, either by striking out the added promise altogether, or by stating the legal effect properly; and the amendment was allowed without any terms as to costs, though an affidavit was made, that the defendant went to trial with the intention and expectation of contesting the original allegation.

§ 187. In several cases an amendment has been made, where the contract, or tort, or custom declared upon, has turned out to be either more or less comprehensive than the one proved.<sup>1</sup> Thus, the statement of a general warranty of a horse has been amended by substituting an allegation of a qualified warranty, where the defence did not depend upon the qualification introduced.<sup>2</sup> So, where the declaration alleged that the defendant promised to lay out certain money in the purchase of a government annuity, and then averred as a breach, that he had not done so, but had placed it in the hands of some private company, an amendment was allowed by substituting the word "security" for "annuity," the evidence showing that the money had in fact been received for the purpose of investing it in some government security.<sup>3</sup> So, in an action on a wager,<sup>4</sup> which appeared in the pleadings to be, that a certain railway should be completed for the general conveyance of passengers within six years, the plaintiff alleged such completion, which was traversed by the defendant. At the trial it appearing in evidence that the bet simply was that the railroad should be completed, the judge amended the record by striking out of the declaration and plea the words "for the general conveyance of passengers:" and the court held that he was right in so doing, as the alteration, so far from prejudicing the defendant, imposed an additional burthen of proof on the plaintiff, who was bound to show that the railroad was complete for all purposes: for the carriage of goods as well as of passengers.<sup>1</sup>

§ 188. Again, where a journeyman carpenter sued his master for the expenses he had incurred in returning with his tools from the country to town, and the declaration was founded on a contract, in which a custom of the trade for the master to pay such costs was engrafted, but it appeared in evidence that the custom was a qualified one, and did not apply to cases where the man, while in the country, was discharged for misconduct, or left his master's service of his own accord, the record was amended, on payment of such costs as the alteration caused, by inserting these exceptions, and adding averments that the plaintiff's claim was not affected by them.<sup>2</sup> So, where an action was brought for the use and occupation of "standings, market places, and sheds," and the plaintiffs relied upon an agreement, which turned out to be a demise by them to the defendant of certain "tolls," which he might collect from the tradesmen who occupied the stalls of a market, the word "tolls" was inserted in the declaration, the plaintiffs paying the costs of the amendment.<sup>3</sup>

§ 189. In other actions a like amendment has been allowed, where a contract, a duty, an instrument, or other matter has been misdescribed on the record. Thus, in Hanbury v. Ella,<sup>4</sup> the declaration stated that the defendants, in consideration of the plaintiffs supplying beer to a third party, promised to pay them

the amount of the beer so supplied, and in support of this statement a written guarantee was put in. This was a variance, since the declaration showed an original liability created, while the evidence merely proved a collateral one, but the court allowed an amendment to be made, by substituting the word "guarantee" for "pay," as the mistake could not under the circumstances have misled the defendants. So, the record has been amended, where the declaration alleged an undertaking by the defendants to carry and deliver certain goods, and the proof was that the undertaking was to forward them ;<sup>1</sup>—where in an action by the indorsee against the drawer of a bill of exchange, the plaintiff alleged a presentment to the acceptor, but proved that the acceptor was dead, and that the bill had been presented to his executor ;<sup>2</sup>—where the holder of a cheque, in suing the maker, alleged in his declaration that he had given due notice of dishonour, but merely proved at the trial that he had a valid excuse for giving no notice ;<sup>3</sup>—where, to an action on a bill of exchange, the plea averred that the bill was accepted on an agreement that it should be in satisfaction of a large sum lost, in part at hazard, and in part at vingt-un, and no proof was given of money lost at vingt-un ;<sup>4</sup>—where a guarantee was alleged in the declaration to have been given in consideration of advances to be made by A., and it appeared by the guarantee that the advances might be made by A., or by any member of his firm ;<sup>5</sup>—where an agreement to grant a lease was stated in the pleadings to have been made between the defendant and the plaintiff, and it appeared at the trial that the real agreement was between the defendant and two other persons, devisees in trust under the will defendant had pleaded that he did not make the note, and the instrument produced differed from that declared upon, in its date, in the parties to it, and in its duration; but there being no proof of the existence of any other note between the parties, Mr. Baron Alderson expressed his opinion that "this was just the case in which the Legislature intended that the discretionary power of amendment should be exercised."<sup>1</sup>

§ 190. In like manner, any slight misnomer of the plaintiff's close in an action of trespass,<sup>2</sup> or the misstatement of a parish,<sup>3</sup> or the insertion of a wrong<sup>4</sup> or impossible<sup>5</sup> date in a writ of ejectment, may be amended. So, the record may be amended by adding a count for goods sold and delivered to a declaration, or the words "by statute" to a plea of not guilty, provided it clearly appear that the matter sought to be inserted was in the issue as originally delivered.<sup>6</sup> In one case, where the declaration alleged a debt of 100*l.* in each of the money counts, and the plaintiff claimed in his particulars of demand 168*l.* for goods sold, Lord Denman, before the cause was called on, allowed the counts to be amended by inserting 200*l.* instead of 100*l.*;<sup>7</sup> but this amendment was made without reference to the Act of William, which clearly in such a case gave no power to the learned judge. Whether, in order to avoid a fatal variance, the debt stated in the declaration may be increased at the trial, as we have seen<sup>8</sup> it may be diminished, is a question which admits of some doubt, though on principle such an amendment would seem to be allowable. Probably, however, a judge at Nisi Prius would not, except under very special circumstances, feel himself justified, either by the

§ 191. The cases in which amendments have been refused under the Act of W. 4, will not detain us long, and the more so as they furnish no safe guide in interpreting the more liberal language of the Common Law Procedure Acts. Indeed, it is clear that very many of the cases are no longer law. For instance, the Act of W. 4 gave no power, either by § 23 or § 24, to amend a feigned issue framed under the Tithe Commutation Act,<sup>2</sup> whether such issue were agreed upon by the parties, or were settled for them by a judge at chambers;<sup>3</sup> but it is apprehended that such an issue might now clearly be amended, as the Act of 1852 applies to "any proceedings in civil causes." Again, the Act of William did not authorise any amendment for the purpose of supplying a mere omission in the pleadings; and therefore in an action of trespass for taking certain mirrors and handkerchiefs, where the defendant, in addition to the plea of not guilty, had pleaded a justification as to the taking of the former articles, but, by mistake, had omitted all mention of the latter, he was not allowed to introduce them into the plea;<sup>4</sup> and a similar application was refused, where, in replevin upon a seizure of goods in a public-house and brewery, the avowry was accidentally confined to the seizure in the public-house.<sup>5</sup> In both these cases, however, it is presumed that an amendment would now be made, if in the opinion of the judge it should be necessary for the purpose of determining the real question in controversy. So, the case of Doe v. Beck<sup>6</sup> would seem to be no longer a safe authority. There the declaration stated a joint demise by husband and wife, and it turned out at the trial that the husband was devisee in trust for the wife's sole use. On this fact being proved, the judge was asked to amend the record by striking out the name of the wife, but he refused to do so on the ground that he had no power, and the Court of Common Pleas upheld his ruling.

§ 192. Though the mere impropriety or harshness of an action ought to have no effect in influencing the decision of the judge,<sup>1</sup> an amendment has been refused, where the matter sought to be expunged had been purposely and improperly introduced into the declaration, with the view of creating a prejudice against the defendant; as, for instance, where a count in libel contained several averments and innuendoes unfairly connecting the plaintiff with parts of the alleged libel, which, in fact, related to other persons.<sup>2</sup> Moreover, as the enactments for allowing amendments at Nisi Prius were intended to meet variances arising from mere slips or accidents, the judge will be very reluctant to allow an amendment, where the party has intentionally framed his pleading in such a manner as to give rise to the objection; as, for example, if a plaintiff declaring on a deed, were to recite it according to what he contended was its legal meaning, and the court were to hold that its effect in law was something different.<sup>3</sup>

§ 193. The court has also refused to amend under the Act of William, where it appeared likely that the variance had prevented the defendant from pleading a good bar to the action,<sup>4</sup> or where the amendment proposed would in all probability have caused the defendant either to demur,<sup>5</sup> or to plead different pleas from those on the record,<sup>6</sup> or would have introduced an entirely new contract and new breach,<sup>7</sup> or, perhaps even, any entirely new matter.<sup>8</sup> Thus, in an action of covenant by the assignee of the reversion against the lessee, the declaration, in deducing title to the plaintiff, set out a deed, whereby the premises were appointed to him. The defendant traversed the appointment, and the deed, on its production, was found to be nugatory as an appointment, not being executed in pursuance of the power. The plaintiff thereupon sought to amend his declaration by setting out the deed at length, and by averring that a relationship existed between the parties, so as to raise a covenant to stand seized to uses; but the court considered that the case was much too complicated for an amendment to be made at Nisi Prius. If the declaration had thereby been rendered good, the defendant might have put on the record different pleas from those before pleaded; but if not, then she might have demurred.<sup>1</sup> So, in an action on the case for diverting a stream of water, to which the plaintiff claimed a right as the possessor of a mill, when, in fact, he was entitled to it as the owner of the adjoining lands, the court considered that the declaration ought not to be amended, as the defendant had traversed the plaintiff's right in respect of the mill, and might have pleaded differently had the declaration claimed the right in respect of the land.<sup>2</sup>

§ 194. In like manner, when, to a declaration in assumpsit, which treated an agreement as an actual demise, and made the breach consist in the plaintiff being evicted from the premises by a stranger, the defendant had pleaded, first, non assumpsit; secondly, that the plaintiff did not become tenant modo et formâ; thirdly, a traverse of the plaintiff's readiness to accept the lease; fourthly, a denial of the stranger's right to evict; and, lastly, a denial of the actual eviction; the court refused to amend the declaration, by substituting, in conformity with the proof, an agreement for a future lease, and laying the breach as a denial of the defendant's title to grant such lease; inasmuch as such an alteration, by introducing an entirely new contract and new breach, would render necessary a remodelling of all the pleas

on the record.<sup>1</sup> Again, where, to an action on a promissory note, the defendant pleaded that the holder accepted, in satisfaction thereof, another note made by the defendant and a third person; and it appeared in evidence that this other note had been accepted in satisfaction, not of the note declared on, but of an intermediate note, to which the third person was no party, and which was given in satisfaction of the note declared on, the Court of Queen's Bench held, contrary to the opinion of the judge at Nisi Prius, that the pleas could not be amended; for although the ultimate practical effect of the whole transaction might be the same, yet the amendment proposed would not only alter the description of the note in the plea, but would introduce essentially new matter.<sup>2</sup>

§ 195. Perhaps, also, the judge would decline to act under the statute of William, if it should appear that, on the amendment being made, the defendant could not prove his case by the same witnesses,<sup>3</sup> though this last circumstance would seem rather to furnish a criterion,<sup>4</sup> as to whether the variance may have prejudiced the conduct of the defence, than as to its material effect on the merits of the case; and, if this be so, it would afford good ground, not for refusing the amendment altogether, but merely for imposing such terms on the plaintiff, with respect to the payment of costs, the withdrawing of the record, or the postponement of the trial, as substantial justice should require.

<sup>3</sup> Gurford v. Bayley, 3 M. & Gr. 782. In that case, Tindal, C. J., observed, "The defendant must have known whether he received the money for any purpose; and, on the amendment being made, he could prove his case by the same witnesses. How is this defence altered?" Erskine, J., added, "What other pleas would he have to put on the record? and what other witnesses to produce?"

<sup>4</sup> In Cooke v. Stratford, 13 M. & W. 387, Rolfe, B., observed, "It is always a matter of some difficulty to ascertain whether the opposite party will have been prejudiced or not. One can only, therefore, say in a vague way, that one must look at all the circumstances of the particular case. * * * The fairest test is this:—Supposing the party comes with evidence that would enable him to meet the case as it stands on the record unamended, would the same enable him to meet it as amended?"

§ 196. Whether the judge at Nisi Prius can permit an amendment to be made, which will have the effect of depriving the defendant of a ground of motion in arrest of judgment, is a point not yet finally determined. The Court of Queen's Bench seem to think that he cannot, inasmuch as the object of the statutes is to prevent nonsuits on variances, and not to make pleadings good which are vicious in themselves,<sup>1</sup>—but the judges of the Common Pleas consider that he can, and urge with much force, first, that it would be highly inconvenient if the discretionary power of amendment at the trial were to be made to depend upon the decision of a Court of Error, and next, that the defendant cannot be really prejudiced by the judge exercising such a power, as he may always reserve the right of moving in arrest of judgment, if he will only abstain from asking for a nonsuit on the ground of variance.<sup>2</sup> However, where, to two special counts in assumpsit, the defendant pleaded a foreign adjudication of both of the causes of action contained therein, which plea was traversed by the plaintiff, and the judgment, when produced, appeared to apply, if at all, to the first count only, the court refused to amend the issue so as to make it correspond with the judgment as proved.<sup>3</sup>

to be thrown upon the opposite party by reason of any amendment.<sup>1</sup> Thus, if the defendant has put pleas on the record, the proof of which will be rendered unnecessary by the alteration proposed, or has summoned witnesses, whom it will become needless to call, or has otherwise been at any bonâ fide expense in preparing to disprove the original allegations, the plaintiff will only be permitted to amend on payment of the costs occasioned by his error; and if it appear probable that the defendant, [in consequence of the amendment, will require to alter his pleas, or to summon other witnesses, the trial will at least be postponed, and the plaintiff be obliged to pay the costs of the postponement. In cases where the variance cannot have misled the opposite party, the amendment will be allowed without the payment of any costs.<sup>2</sup>

199. Although the judge at Nisi Prius has a discretionary power of awarding or refusing costs in the event of an amendment, the court will take care that no injustice is done by his accidentally omitting to give directions on the subject; and, therefore, when an order had been obtained by the plaintiff, enabling him to withdraw the record and amend the declaration, but no mention was made respecting the costs; the court held that, as the variance had been corrected for the benefit of the plaintiff, he was bound to liquidate the defendant's costs of the day.<sup>3</sup>

§ 200. Large powers of amendment are granted to the County Courts, when errors have been committed with respect to the names, descriptions, numbers, or representative characters of the plaintiffs and defendants;<sup>1</sup> and, in addition to these powers, it is provided by § 57 of the Act of 19 & 20 V., c. 108, that “the judge of a County Court may at all times amend all defects and errors in any proceeding in such court, whether there is anything in writing to amend by or not, and whether the defect or error be that of the party applying to amend or not; and all such amendments may be made with or without costs, and upon such terms as to the judge may seem fit; and all such amendments as may be necessary for the purpose of determining in the existing suit the real question in controversy between the parties shall be so made, if duly applied for.” Still, if the particulars of a plaintiff’s claim do not disclose a case within the jurisdiction of a County Court, the judge has no power to amend them, so as to turn the complaint into one over which he has cognisance.<sup>2</sup> County Courts in Equity have all the powers of amendment which the Legislature has granted to the ordinary County Courts, and they possess, in addition, all the powers in that respect which belong to any judge of the Court of Chancery.<sup>3</sup>

§ 201. The Civil Bill Courts in Ireland are intrusted with similar powers of making amendments by the Act of 14 & 15 V., c. 57, which in § 106 enacts, that “it shall and may be lawful for the several assistant barristers, and judges on appeal, and they are hereby respectively empowered, in all cases, to amend all variances between the statement of the cause of action in any civil bill, or other process or proceeding in their respective civil bill courts, and the evidence in support of such cause of action, and also to amend all variances, omissions, and misdescriptions in the descriptions, additions, and residence of the parties, or any of them, or otherwise howsoever, of or in any such process, or between the original and any copy or copies thereof, provided

§ 202. The only statute which, prior to the year 1848, authorised the amendment of any variances in criminal cases was that of 9 G. 4, c. 15; and it has been already shown that this Act merely applied to misdemeanors, and then only to cases where the indictment or information was preferred before a court of oyer and terminer and general gaol delivery.<sup>2</sup> In 1848, however, more liberal views being entertained by the Legislature, the provisions of this Act were extended to all offences whatever;<sup>3</sup> and, in the following year, similar powers of amendment were conferred on all courts of general or quarter sessions in England.<sup>4</sup> These alterations in the law were no doubt steps in the right direction, but still they were found to afford a very ineffectual remedy for the evil complained of; and consequently, in 1851, the interposition of Parliament was again invoked by Lord Campbell, and an Act was at length passed,<sup>5</sup> which has placed criminal proceedings<sup>1</sup> on nearly the same footing with civil actions in respect to the amendment of variances between the record and the proof.

§ 203. After reciting that "a failure of justice often takes place on the trial of persons charged with felony and misdemeanor, by reason of variances between the statement in the indictment on which the trial is had, and the proof of names, dates, matters, and circumstances therein mentioned, not material to the merits of the case, and by the misstatement whereof the person on trial cannot have been prejudiced in his defence;"—the statute proceeds to enact, in § 1, that "whenever, on the trial of any indictment for any felony or misdemeanor, there shall appear to be any variance between the statement in such indictment and the evidence offered in proof thereof, in the name of any county, riding, division, city, borough, town corporate, parish, township, or place mentioned or described in any such indictment,—or in the name or description of any person or persons, or body politic or corporate, therein stated or alleged to be the owner or owners of any property, real or personal, which shall form the subject of any offence charged therein,—or in the name or description of any person or persons, body politic or corporate, therein stated or alleged to be injured or damaged or intended to be injured or damaged by the commission of such offence,—or in the Christian name or surname, or both Christian name and surname, or other description whatsoever, of any person or persons whomsoever therein named or described,—or in the name or description of any matter or thing whatsoever therein named or described,—or in the ownership of any property named or described therein, it shall and may be lawful for the court before which the trial shall be had, if it shall consider such variance not material to the merits of the case, and that the defendant cannot be prejudiced thereby in his defence on such merits, to order such indictment to be amended, according to the proof, by some officer of the court or other person, both in that part of the indictment where such variance occurs, and in every other part of the indictment which it may become necessary to amend, on such terms as to postponing the trial to be had before the same or another jury, as such court shall think reasonable; and after any such amendment the trial shall proceed, whenever the same shall be proceeded with, in the same manner in all respects, and with the same consequences, both with respect to the liability of witnesses to be indicted for perjury and otherwise, as if no such variance had occurred; and in case such trial shall be had at Nisi Prius, the order for the amendment shall be indorsed on the postea, and returned together with the record, and thereupon such papers, rolls, or other records of the court from which such record issued, as it may be necessary to amend, shall be amended accordingly by the proper officer; and in all other cases the order for the amendment shall either be indorsed on the indictment, or shall be engrossed on parchment, and filed, together with the indictment, among the records of the court."

§ 204. The Act then contains a proviso, "that in all such cases where the trial shall be so postponed as aforesaid, it shall be lawful for such court to respite the recognisances of the prosecutor and witnesses, and of the defendant, and his surety or sureties, if any, accordingly; in which case the prosecutor and witnesses shall be bound to attend to prosecute and give evidence respectively, and the defendant shall be bound to attend to be tried, at the time and place to which such trial shall be postponed, without entering into any fresh recognisances for that purpose, in such and the same manner as if they were originally bound by their recognisances to appear and prosecute or give evidence at the time and place to which such trial shall have been so postponed;" and a further proviso directs, "that where any such trial shall be to be had before another jury, the Crown and the defendant shall respectively be entitled to the same challenges, as they were respectively entitled to before the first jury was sworn."

§ 205. The second section enacts, ex majori cautela, that "every verdict and judgment, which shall be given after the making of any amendment under the provisions of this Act, shall be of the same force and effect in all respects, as if the indictment had originally been in the same form in which it was after such amendment was made;" while § 3 provides, that "if it shall become necessary at any time for any purpose whatsoever to draw up a formal record, in any case where any amendment shall have been made under the provisions of this Act, such record shall be drawn up in the form in which the indictment was after such amendment was made, without taking any notice of the fact of such amendment having been made."<sup>1</sup>

§ 206. Under these salutary provisions it has been held, that an indictment charging the defendant with having obstructed a footway may be amended, when one of the termini of the way has been misdescribed, provided the variance be not calculated to prejudice the defence;<sup>2</sup>—that an amendment may be made when the ownership of stolen property is wrongly described;<sup>3</sup>—that the misnomer of a party injured may be rectified;<sup>4</sup>—that the misdescription of any persons described in the indictment may be set right;<sup>5</sup>—that an erroneous date ascribed to the passing of a statute may be struck out;<sup>6</sup>—that where an indictment for perjury alleged that the crime was committed on a trial for burning a barn, and it was proved that the actual charge was one of firing a stack, the court had power to amend the variance;<sup>7</sup>—and that it is not too late to apply for an amendment, even though the counsel for the prisoner may have addressed the jury.<sup>8</sup> This last case is important, as it overrules a mischievous decision by Williams, J., to the effect that an application to amend must at latest be made before the case for the prosecution is closed.<sup>9</sup> It seems that, in general, the court will not amend an indictment

after plea, if, in its amended form, it would be open to a demurrer.<sup>1</sup> Neither can an amendment be made after verdict.<sup>2</sup> Nor will the court amend an amendment, or restore an indictment, once amended, to its original form.<sup>3</sup> Where a prisoner was indicted for a statutable forgery, but the evidence only sustained a forgery at common law, Mr. Justice Hill declined to amend the indictment by striking out the word "feloniously," and thus converting a charge of felony into one of misdemeanor.<sup>4</sup>

§ 207. Although Lord Campbell's Act has now been in operation for twenty years, the decisions under it scarcely justify the expression of any confident opinion as to the amount of liberality with which its language will eventually be construed by the courts. The narrow rules of interpretation, which have been promulgated by one or two of the judges with reference to the prior statute, 9 G. 4, c. 15,<sup>5</sup> are calculated to excite a reasonable fear lest an equally strict construction should be applied to the amendment clauses of this Act; but, on the other hand, it cannot be denied that the subject is now far better understood than it formerly was, and that even judges are beginning to discover that substantial justice is of more real importance than mere technical precision. Wise men should ever bear in mind, that the object of the Acts which authorise amendments in criminal proceedings, is to render punishment more certain, by neutralising the effect of trivial variances, which have constantly protected the wrong-doer. So long as the least rational doubt exists respecting the guilt of a prisoner, it is only fair that the ample shield of justice should screen him from injury; that juries should weigh with jealousy the evidence against him; and that judges should see most clearly that the act, with which he is charged, is an offence against the law. But when courts of justice go further than this, and permit the law to be defeated by technical errors, which cannot by possibility mislead a defendant, and which have nothing to do with the substantial merits of the case, they take the most effectual means of rendering the administration of the criminal law a fitting subject for contempt and ridicule. In civil causes, the Acts authorising amendments receive a liberal construction, and properly so.<sup>1</sup> Why, then, should an absurdly strict construction be applied in criminal courts? The statutes themselves warrant no such distinction, and to introduce into the interpretation of them the old doctrine "strictissimi juris," is to misunderstand and misapply the meaning of that doctrine, and to make the commandments of the Legislature of none effect through your traditions.

§ 208. Having now drawn attention to the Acts which authorise amendments to be made, whether in civil or criminal proceedings, and having also examined most of the cases that have been decided under them, it will be expedient briefly to notice some general rules which regulate the law of variance; because, although a discrepancy between the allegation and the proof is not, as formerly, fatal, provided that it be not material to the substantial merits, yet it may still entail considerable expense on the party, who is driven to apply for an amendment. It is therefore important to ascertain, upon what occasions the opposite party is entitled to object, that the substance of the issue has not been proved.

§ 209.<sup>2</sup> The first rule in connection with this subject is, that surplusage need not be proved, and the proof, if offered, should be rejected. The term surplusage comprehends whatever may be stricken from the record without destroying the right of action, or the charge, on the one hand, or the defence on the other. This, it is true, is a loose, and therefore an unsatisfactory, definition; but it is difficult, not to say impossible, to find one more distinct and practical. Each case must, in a great measure, depend on its own particular circumstances, and the best means of ascertaining what will, or will not, amount to surplusage, is by examining the decisions on this subject. The case of Williamson v. Allison,<sup>1</sup> is a leading authority. That was a declaration in tort, for breach of a warranty that some claret was in a fit state to be exported to India, whereas it was at the time, and the defendant well knew that it was, in a very unfit state. At the trial no evidence was given of the defendant's knowledge, and the verdict being for the plaintiff, a motion was made for a new trial, on the ground that the scienter, having been alleged, ought to have been proved; but the court were unanimously of opinion that the allegation of the scienter was wholly unnecessary and immaterial, and therefore need not be proved. The grounds for this decision are explained with great clearness by Lord Ellenborough in pronouncing his judgment. "If," said his Lordship, "the whole averment respecting the defendant's knowledge of the unfitness of the wine for exportation were struck out, the declaration would still be sufficient to entitle the plaintiff to recover upon the breach of the warranty proved. For, if one man lull another into security as to the goodness of a commodity, by giving him a warranty of it, it is the same thing whether or not the seller knew it at the time to be unfit for sale; the warranty is the thing which deceives the buyer, who relies on it, and is thereby put off his guard. Then, if the warranty be the material averment, it is sufficient to prove that broken to establish the deceit." Mr. Justice Lawrence added, "I take the rule to be, that if the whole of an averment may be struck out without destroying the plaintiff's right of action, it is not necessary to prove it; but otherwise, if the whole cannot be struck out without getting rid of a part essential to the cause of action; for then, although the averment be more particular than it need have been, the whole must be proved, or the plaintiff cannot recover."<sup>1</sup>

§ 210.<sup>2</sup> So, in tort for removing earth from the defendant's land, whereby the foundation of the plaintiff's house was injured, the allegation of bad intent in the defendant need not be proved, for the cause of action is perfect, independent of the intention.<sup>3</sup> So, in an action for impounding cattle in an unfit pound, an averment that the pound was "at all times unfit, as the defendant well knew," may be rejected as immaterial, and consequently it requires no proof.<sup>4</sup> Again, if a declaration discloses a state of facts upon which an action may be maintained, although the defendant has not been guilty of malice or fraud, the plaintiff is not bound to prove either, notwithstanding both be alleged, and he may recover upon the liability which the facts disclose, though both fraud and malice be actually disproved.<sup>5</sup> In case, too, against a common carrier for the loss of property intrusted to him, negligence, though averred, need not be proved.<sup>6</sup> So, also, in trespass, for driving against the plaintiff's cart, an averment that he was in the cart is immaterial.<sup>7</sup> In like manner, where a declaration, after alleging that the plaintiff was possessed of a pond, and the defendant was possessed of an adjoining close, used as a private road, averred that the defendant wrongfully cut in his close, used as a private road, a certain large sewer, and thereby diverted the water from the pond, the court held that the words marked in italics were clearly immaterial, and that the plaintiff might recover damages, though it appeared that the sewer was cut previously to the construction of the road. "What," said Chief Justice Tindal, "has it to do with the wrongful act of the defendant, or the measure of damages which the plaintiff is entitled to claim, whether the defendant used his close as a road, an orchard, or a garden?"<sup>1</sup> So, in an action against the Marshal for an escape,<sup>2</sup> the declaration stated that a judgment was recovered in Easter Term, that in Trinity Term in the same year there was an award of execution, and that thereupon the defendant was committed. The original judgment and the commitment were proved, but no evidence was given of any judgment in scire facias. The court held that this last allegation being immaterial, because a year had not elapsed from the date of the original judgment,<sup>3</sup> no proof was necessary to support it; and they considered that the word "thereupon" was introduced, not for the purpose of connecting the commitment with the judgment in scire facias, but simply with the view of marking the progress of the cause. In a similar action against the Marshal, the plea stated that the debtor returned into custody before action brought, and that thereupon the defendant, before and at the time of the commencement of the suit, kept and detained, and still doth keep and detain, him in his custody; to this plea, the plaintiff replied de injuriâ, and at the trial tendered evidence of a second escape after the commencement of the action, and before plea pleaded. This evidence was rejected by the learned judge, on the ground that the allegation of a detainer after action brought was immaterial to the defence, and was consequently not put in issue by the replication; and the court above supported this ruling.<sup>4</sup>

they did not wrongfully and without reasonable or probable cause, dismiss him, the court held that the fact of the dismissal was alone put in issue.<sup>1</sup> So, where a defendant, while traversing in terms the plaintiff's declaration, had averred in his plea that he did not wrongfully maintain a weir at an improper height, he was not allowed to prove that such maintenance was rightful, for that would have been tantamount to giving matter of confession and avoidance in evidence under a simple traverse.<sup>2</sup> So, where a girl ten years old, by her prochein ami, sued a surgeon in case, and the declaration stated that she had employed him to cure her, and then claimed damages for a misfeasance, the court held that there was no material variance between the allegation and the proof, though the defendant had traversed the statement that the plaintiff had employed him, and it appeared that he had, in reality, been sent for by the mother, and paid by the father, of the child; for either the fact of the girl having allowed him to operate was evidence that she had employed him, and that he had accepted the employment, or, the substance of the issue being, that he was employed to cure his patient, it was immaterial by whom he was employed, and the statement that he was employed by the plaintiff might be struck out of the pleadings.<sup>3</sup>

§ 212. Again, if a bill be accepted payable at a particular place, without stating it to be payable there only, it is no variance, in an action against the acceptor, to declare upon it as payable at that place, though such an acceptance is declared by the Legislature to be, for all intents and purposes, a general acceptance;<sup>4</sup> for a general acceptance, being an engagement to pay anywhere, must include, amongst others, the particular place

mentioned in the declaration; and it does not lie in the defendant's mouth to say that the bill was not payable at that place, when he has himself referred the parties there for payment.<sup>1</sup> So, in an action on a promissory note, where the declaration stated that the defendant made it, "his own proper hand being thereunto subscribed," but it appeared that the note was, in fact, drawn by his son, with his authority; Lord Tenterden held that this was no variance, as the allegation respecting the defendant's handwriting might be rejected as surplusage.<sup>2</sup> So, also in an action by indorsee against the drawer or indorser of a bill for default of payment, an allegation of acceptance need not be proved,<sup>3</sup> except in the case of a bill payable after sight. So, where the holder of a bill averred, as an excuse for not giving notice of dishonour to the drawer, that the latter had no funds in the acceptor's hands, and had sustained no damage from want of notice, this last negative averment was held to be immaterial, though the defendant had pleaded that he had sustained damage, because the acceptor had promised him to provide for the bill.<sup>4</sup> In an action on a promissory note brought by the indorsee against the maker, the defendant pleaded that he delivered the note to the indorser to enable him to take up a former accommodation note, and that after the note declared on became due, he paid the amount to the plaintiff. On a replication de injuriâ to this plea, the court held that the averment introductory to the payment of the last-

This case is probably correct law, though, on one occasion, where the declaration contained similar words, with respect to an indorsement which turned out to have been made by procuration, Ld. Ellenborough directed a nonsuit, Levy v. Wilson, 5 Esp. 179. In Helmsley v. Loader, 2 Camp. 450, the same learned judge, however, under precisely similar circumstances, would not allow the defendant to raise the objection, he having promised to pay, with a knowledge of all the facts; and his lordship was inclined to think that, even independently of the promise, it was enough to show that the defendant's name was written by an authorised agent. Levy v. Wilson may therefore be considered as overruled.

mentioned note might be rejected as surplusage, and need not be proved. It amounted, in fact, to a mere unnecessary statement of the motive which induced the defendant to give the note. Mr. Justice Coleridge observed: "The distinction is between an averment, the whole of which can be got rid of without injury to the plea, and an averment of circumstances essential to the defence, which are stated with needless particularity. In the latter case the whole averment must be proved as pleaded. In the former case, in civil or criminal proceedings, the whole may be considered as struck out, and therefore need not be proved."<sup>1</sup>

§ 213. The distinction here pointed out may be well illustrated by the case of Bristow v. Wright.<sup>2</sup> That was an action on the case against a sheriff, for taking the tenant's goods in execution without satisfying the landlord for a year's rent; and the plaintiff averred that the rent was reserved quarterly, whereas it turned out to be reserved yearly. There, had the whole averment as to the reservation of the rent been struck out, the plaintiff could not have maintained his action, because some rent must necessarily have been averred to be due; and therefore, though the plaintiff need not have stated in what manner the rent was reserved, yet, as he had chosen to do so, the defendant was held entitled to avail himself of the defect of proof in that particular. So, if in justifying the taking of cattle damage feasant, in which case it is sufficient to allege that they were doing damage in the defendant's freehold, he should needlessly state a seisin in fee, which is traversed, the precise estate which he has set forth becomes an essentially descriptive allegation, and must be proved as alleged.<sup>3</sup> Upon the same ground it was held, prior to the Act of 14 & 15-V., c. 100, that if a person were indicted for stealing a live fowl, he could not be convicted upon evidence showing that he had stolen a dead one;<sup>1</sup> and an allegation of the colour of an animal, though wholly unnecessary, was, as a matter of description, obliged to be proved as laid.<sup>2</sup> So, where an indictment for bigamy described the second wife as a widow, when in fact she had never been married, the misdescription was held fatal, though it was unnecessary to have stated more than her name;<sup>3</sup> and where a crime, alleged to have taken place "at A., in the county of B., within five hundred yards of the boundary of D., to wit at C., in the county of D.," was proved to have been committed in D., the prisoner was acquitted, Mr. Justice Crampton observing, "If you choose to go out of your way to make a special averment, and to allege a particular place in the indictment, the question is, whether you are bound to prove it. I think you are."<sup>4</sup> In these cases, the essential and non-essential parts of the statement were so connected and dovetailed, as to be incapable of separation, and therefore both were considered as alike material.

§ 214. The language of Mr. Justice Coleridge, cited above,<sup>5</sup> is also important, as showing that the law, which rejects surplusage, applies equally in criminal as in civil proceedings. Thus, if a party be indicted for robbery *in the dwelling house of A. proved.<sup>1</sup> The case of R. v. Jones will illustrate this subject.<sup>2</sup> The repealed Act of 9 G. 4, c. 41, provided,<sup>3</sup> in § 29, that no person, not a parish patient, should be taken into a lunatic asylum without a certificate of two medical men, containing certain particulars. § 30 enacted, that any person who should knowingly, and with intention to deceive, sign such certificate, untruly setting forth such particulars, should be guilty of a misdemeanor; while a second clause made it a substantive offence for any physician, surgeon, or apothecary to sign such certificate, without having visited the patient. The indictment stated that the defendant, being a surgeon, knowingly, and with intention to deceive, signed the certificate without having visited the patient, thus blending in one charge two distinct offences. The jury negatived any intent to deceive, but found the defendant guilty; and the court held that the conviction was right, since the averment of intention was mere surplusage. So, where an indictment charged the defendants with conspiring to indict the prosecutor falsely, with intent to extort money, they were held to be rightly convicted, though the jury, in finding them guilty of conspiring to indict with the intent alleged, expressly negatived any conspiracy to make a false charge; for the court observed that a conspiracy to prefer an indictment for purposes of extortion was doubtless a misdemeanor, whether the charge were true or false.<sup>4</sup> So, where a parish was indicted for non-repair of a highway, an allegation that the road in question was an immemorial highway has been rejected as surplusage.<sup>5</sup> Upon an indictment, too, for jointly receiving stolen property, persons guilty of separately receiving any part of such property may be convicted.<sup>6</sup> If a common law offence be laid as committed

§ 215. A second rule respecting variances is, that cumulative allegations, or such as merely operate in aggravation, are immaterial, provided that sufficient is proved to establish some right, offence, or justification, included in the claim, charge, or defence, specified on the record.<sup>2</sup> This rule, as applicable to criminal proceedings, was adopted and defined by Lord Ellenborough in the case of R. v. Hunt.<sup>3</sup> There the defendant was charged in an information with composing, printing, and publishing a libel, but no evidence was given to show that he was the author. His counsel thereupon claimed an acquittal on his behalf, but the learned judge observed, "It is enough to prove publication.<sup>4</sup> If an indictment charges that the defendant did and caused to be done<sup>5</sup> a particular act, it is enough to prove either. The distinction runs through the whole criminal law; and it is invariably enough to prove so much of the indictment as shows that the defendant has committed a substantive crime therein specified."

§ 216. Thus, on an indictment for murder the prisoner may be convicted of manslaughter, for the averment of malice aforethought is merely matter of aggravation.<sup>6</sup> So, on an indictment for burglary and stealing, if the prosecutor establish his case with the exception of proving that the breaking was by night, the prisoner may be convicted of housebreaking;<sup>7</sup> if no breaking be proved, but the property stolen be laid in the indictment, and be proved by the evidence, to be of the value of five pounds, the verdict may be guilty of stealing in a dwelling-house to that amount;<sup>1</sup> if no satisfactory evidence be offered to show, either that the house was a dwelling-house, or some building communicating therewith; or that it was the dwelling-house of the party named in the indictment; or that it was locally situated as therein alleged; or that the stolen property was of the value of five pounds; still, the prisoner may be convicted of simple larceny, provided it appear that any goods were stolen by him.<sup>2</sup> So, on a charge of stealing in a dwelling-house with menaces,<sup>3</sup> or of stealing from the person, with or without violence,<sup>4</sup> or of stealing as a servant,<sup>5</sup> the prisoner may be found guilty of larceny, if the evidence be not sufficient to prove the commission of the more aggravated crime;<sup>6</sup> and an indictment under the statute for horse-stealing, though bad for not describing the animal by any term used in the Act, will support a conviction for larceny.<sup>7</sup> Again, on the same principle, if an indictment for treason or conspiracy charge several overt acts, it is sufficient to prove one;<sup>8</sup> and, on an indictment for obtaining property by several false pretences, it is not necessary to prove them all, unless they are so connected as to be incapable of separation,<sup>9</sup> but it will suffice to prove the one or more, by which the property was in fact obtained.<sup>10</sup>

§ 217. In like manner, if a compound intent, or several intents, be laid in the indictment, and if one part of the compound intent, or each of the several intents, when coupled with the act done, constitute an offence, it will not be necessary to prove the whole as laid. Thus, an indictment for killing a sheep, with intent to steal the whole carcase, will be supported by proof of an intent to steal part of the carcase.<sup>1</sup> So if a prisoner be charged with obtaining an order for a certain sum from the prosecutor with intent to defraud him of the same, he may be legally convicted, though it appears that his real intention was to cheat the prosecutor out of a small portion only of the proceeds of the order.<sup>2</sup> So, a man accused under the old law of assaulting a girl with intent to abuse her and carnally know her, has been found guilty of an assault with intent to abuse simply;<sup>3</sup> and a party indicted for publishing a libel with intent to defame certain magistrates, and also to bring the administration of justice into contempt, may be found guilty, if the libel was published with either of those intents.<sup>4</sup> But the intent proved must either correspond with, or be included in, the intent alleged. Thus it will be a fatal variance, if an indictment for burglary charge an intent to steal, and it be shown that the real intent was to commit rape or murder;<sup>5</sup> and a prisoner charged with burglary and stealing will be acquitted, if no property was taken, though it appear that the house was entered with an intent to steal; and though, had larceny actually been committed, he would have been convicted without any allegation in the indictment of a felonious intent.<sup>6</sup>

That case was decided on the Act of 14 G. 2, c. 6 (now repealed), which speaks, in the alternative, of an intent to steal the whole carcase or any part of the carcase. The same point seems, however, to have been ruled by Cresswell, J., in R. v. Marley, cited 2 Russ. C. & M. 137, which case must have turned on the language of 7 & 8 G. 4, c. 29, § 25. This last Act uses the words "with intent to steal the carcase or skin, or any part of the cattle so killed," &c. The principle in both cases was the same, namely, "that the offence of intending to steal a part was part of the offence of intending to steal the whole, and that the statute meant to make it immaterial whether the intent applied to the whole, or only to part." vouring to conceal its birth; <sup>1</sup> if a person be indicted for felony in administering poison so as to endanger life, or to inflict grievous bodily harm, he may be convicted of the misdemeanor of administering poison with intent to injure, aggrieve, or annoy some one; <sup>2</sup> and on the trial of an indictment for simple or aggravated robbery, the jury may convict of a simple or aggravated assault with intent to rob, if the evidence shall prove such an offence to have been committed. <sup>3</sup> So, upon a count for maliciously wounding, or for maliciously inflicting grievous bodily harm, against the statute, a prisoner may be convicted of a common assault, even though the term "assault" be not found in the indictment. <sup>4</sup> Formerly, the Act of 7 W. 4 & 1 V., c. 85, § 11, provided, that if a party were indicted for any of the offences thereinbefore mentioned, or for any felony, where the crime charged included an assault against the person, the jury, though they acquitted him of the felony, might have found him guilty of the assault, if the evidence warranted such finding. Great difficulties, however, having arisen in the construction of this enactment, <sup>5</sup> it was repealed in 1851, <sup>6</sup> and a clause was substituted in its place, <sup>7</sup> which provides that, "if, on the trial of any person charged with any felony or misdemeanor, <sup>8</sup> it shall appear to the jury upon the evidence that the defendant did not complete the offence charged, but that he was guilty only of an attempt to commit the same, such person shall not by reason thereof be entitled to be acquitted, but the jury shall be at liberty to return as their verdict, that the defendant is not guilty of the felony or misdemeanor charged, but is guilty of an attempt to commit the

§ 218 A. In the Articles of War established for the government of the Navy, the rule, as illustrated in the three preceding sections, is fully recognised. For instance, "the Naval Discipline Act, 1866,"<sup>1</sup> expressly enacts, in § 48, that "where any prisoner shall be charged with murder, a court-martial may find him guilty of manslaughter or of a common assault; where he shall be charged with sodomy, a court-martial may find him guilty of an indecent assault; where he shall be charged with theft, a court-martial may find him guilty of an attempt to steal, or of embezzlement, or of wrongful appropriation of property belonging to another; and generally, where any prisoner shall be charged with any offence under this Act, he may, upon failure of proof of the commission of the greater offence, be found guilty of another offence of the same class involving a less degree of punishment, but not of any offence involving a greater degree of punishment."

§ 219. In civil actions the same rule prevails. Thus, in an action for defamation, if the plaintiff allege special damage, he need not prove it, provided the words be actionable per se.<sup>2</sup> So, in an action on a policy of insurance, the material allegation is the loss; but whether total or partial, is a mere question of degree; and if the former be alleged, proof of the latter is sufficient.<sup>3</sup> It seems scarcely necessary to add, that a party may claim in his declaration a less right than he is able to prove,

§ 220. The power of finding issues distributively is highly valuable, as it not only diminishes the danger of variance, but it is instrumental in effecting a fair distribution of the costs of the cause. It has, therefore, of late years been much extended by the Legislature, which has enacted, in § 75 of "The Common Law Procedure Act, 1852,"<sup>2</sup> that "pleas of payment and set-off, and all other pleadings capable of being construed distributively, shall be taken distributively; and if issue is taken thereon, and so much thereof as shall be sufficient answer to part of the causes of action proved shall be found true by the jury, a verdict shall pass for the defendant in respect of so much of the causes of action as shall be answered, and for the plaintiff in respect of so much of the causes of action as shall not be so answered."

§ 221. This direction to distribute "all pleadings capable of being construed distributively" is extremely vague, and the mode in which it has hitherto been interpreted by the judges is not remarkable for precision. Thus much, however, would seem to have been decided:—first, that the enactment is inapplicable to pleadings terminating in demurrers, and has exclusive reference to the findings of the jury upon issues joined;<sup>3</sup>—next, that it does not justify defendants in taking declarations distributively, but it only relates to pleas and subsequent pleadings;<sup>4</sup>—and thirdly, that it merely contemplates affirmative pleadings in answer to an action, and does not extend to pleadings in denial of the cause of action.<sup>5</sup> The object of the statute was to remedy the injustice which was frequently caused by a too strict observance of the technical rules of pleading, and it was principally intended to meet those cases,<sup>6</sup> where a defendant, who had pleaded payment or set-off, and had actually proved his plea, was nevertheless subjected to the entire costs of an adverse verdict, because the plea had failed to cover the whole claim in the declaration.<sup>1</sup> Still, little doubt can be entertained that the enactment in question will be held applicable to all cases in which, prior to the passing of the Act, distributive findings on affirmative pleadings were allowed, either by virtue of special rules, or by the general practice of the courts. Whenever, therefore, to an action of trespass the defendant pleads, either a right of way with carriages and cattle and on foot, or a right of common of pasture for different kinds of cattle, or any other similar right, the plea may be construed distributively, because by the general rules promulgated in 1834,<sup>2</sup> and now repealed, that course might have been pursued. In all these cases, however, it formerly was, and probably it still would be, considered material, that the right proved, though less extensive than that alleged, should be of the same nature with it, and included in it; for otherwise the opposite party might justly complain that he was taken by surprise. Proof, therefore, of a limited right of carting timber from a close would probably not be deemed to support a plea claiming a general right of way on foot, and with horses, cattle, carts, and carriages, for the convenient occupation of the close;<sup>3</sup> neither would a plea prescribing for an easement be sustained either wholly or in part by evidence of title to a profit à prendre.<sup>4</sup>

§ 222. Although the Legislature has not thought fit to make any special provision with respect to the divisibility of issues denying the declaration, a wholesome practice has grown up in the courts at Westminster, which permits defendants in many cases to claim the right of having such issues entered distributively. Thus,—to borrow the language of a judgment in the Queen's Bench,—“issues taken on pleas in denial of the whole count have been held distributable,—in actions of trespass and of trover<sup>1</sup> for distinct specified chattels,—in trespass to realty,—in ejectment,—in case for libel, where the libellous matter has been capable of separation,—and in debt for work and labour.”<sup>2</sup> To illustrate this matter more in detail it may be observed that, where an action on the case was brought for disturbance of a ferry, which was alleged in the declaration to be one to and from A. from and to B., and the defendant pleaded not possessed, and a traverse of the right of ferry as claimed, the court held, on the jury finding a ferry from A. to B. only, that the verdict might be entered distributively for the plaintiff, for so much as was proved at the trial.<sup>3</sup> So, when a plaintiff declared in trespass quare clausum fregit, and, by her replication, on which the parties went to issue, made title to the three closes mentioned in her declaration, but at the trial gave evidence as to two only; the court held that the issue was divisible, and that the plaintiff was entitled to a verdict as to the two closes, and the defendants as to the other.<sup>4</sup> In an action of trespass for breaking and entering the plaintiff's house, and taking and converting his goods, which were described by distinct parcels, issue was joined on a plea, which denied that the house or goods were the plaintiff's; at the trial it appeared that the plaintiff was entitled to the house and one parcel of the goods only, and the court held that the issue was divisible, and that the verdict must be entered distributively.<sup>5</sup> So, in ejectment, where the lessor of the plaintiff sought to recover, under one count and one demise, several messuages—some freehold, some copyhold—and succeeded as to the latter, but failed as to the former, the court held that, since the plea of not guilty raised a distinct issue as to each messuage, the defendant was entitled to his verdict and costs with respect to those on which the plaintiff had failed.<sup>1</sup> The same rule applies to actions of ejectment under the new practice ;<sup>2</sup> and it would also seem to prevail in all cases where the plaintiff declares in a general form, and proceeds for distinct causes of action ;<sup>3</sup> because the plea of not guilty, or non assumpsit, not only raises an issue on each count, but on each allegation of a single count, provided such allegation contains a separate cause of action.

§ 222 A. The law respecting the divisibility of issues was much discussed in the case of Reynolds v. Harris.<sup>4</sup> That was an action of slander, the declaration containing four counts. On two of these the plaintiff succeeded, which entitled him to the general costs of the cause. To one count, however, the defendant had pleaded a plea of justification, comprising three distinct defences. One of these defences he sustained, but he failed in making out the other two. The question was, how to apportion the costs of this plea ; and the Court of Common Pleas, after grave consideration, decided, first, that, with respect to the evidence solely applicable to those portions of the plea which were found to be untrue, each party should pay his own costs, and next, that the defendant was entitled to the costs of so much of the plea as was found in his favour, including the costs of witnesses called to establish that defence, although they might also have testified in support of the residue of the plea.

§ 223. On a review of the more recent authorities relating to the subject of distributive issues, it seems questionable whether such decisions as were pronounced in Anderson v. Chapman,<sup>5</sup> and Delisser v. Towne,<sup>6</sup> could be now sustained. In the first of these cases an action was brought for negligence in stowing, and otherwise taking care of and conveying, one hundred casks of tallow; the defendants denied negligence "in and about the stowage, or otherwise taking care of and conveying" the goods. The plaintiff having obtained a verdict for injury by negligence in the care taken of a single cask, but not for any injury to the cargo by stowage, it was held that the defendants were not entitled to the costs of any part of the issue. The court considered that, as proof of any portion of the complaint would sustain the action, the failure as to the rest affected only the amount of damages. So, in Delisser v. Towne,<sup>1</sup> the declaration in case stated, that the defendant, without probable cause, had preferred an indictment against the plaintiff for perjury, alleged to have been committed by him as a witness in a cause at Nisi Prius. The indictment, which was set out in the declaration, contained ten assignments of perjury. The defendant pleaded not guilty. Evidence was given of want of probable cause on the last assignment, but on no other, and the plaintiff had a verdict. Upon these facts the court held that the defendant was not entitled to his costs with

<sup>1</sup> 1 Q. B. 333. In pronouncing judgment, Ld. Denman observed: "Though the indictments contained assignments of perjury upon several parts of the plaintiff's examination upon the trial, yet it was but one charge: and the preferring that charge without probable cause constitutes but one cause of action. The plea of 'not guilty' denies that one cause of action, and amounts to an assertion that the defendant had probable cause for the whole of the indictment. That is one entire issue: and, if there was no probable cause for any part of the charge, the plaintiff was entitled to a verdict. Whether there was or was not probable cause for other parts of the charge, would affect the damages, but could not affect the verdict, or show that the defendant had properly preferred the indictment, that is, with probable cause for every part of it." p. 343. respect to the nine assignments, as to which the plaintiff had failed to establish a want of probable cause.

§ 224. The law recognises a third rule in regard to variances, to the effect that mere formal allegations need not be proved. The term "formal allegations" comprises, among other matters, all those averments of place, time, number, value, quality, and the like, which are inserted in the pleadings, without being either essentially descriptive of the subject of the claim or charge, or otherwise rendered material by special circumstances. It includes also a multitude of other idle statements, which, until recently, English lawyers, with tautological pedantry, loved to introduce into every record of legal proceedings. While judges were content to bestow more attention on technical precision than on substantial justice, the rule in question was highly important; but since the late amendments in the law, it has fortunately become a matter more of historical curiosity than of present practical interest.

§ 225. So far, indeed, as civil actions are concerned, the rule has virtually passed into a dead letter; for the Common Law Procedure Act of 1852<sup>1</sup> has expressly enacted "with respect to the language and form of pleadings," that "all statements which need not be proved, such as the statement of time, quantity, quality, and value, where these are immaterial,<sup>2</sup>—the statement of losing and finding, and bailment, in actions for goods or their value,—the statement of acts of trespass having been committed with force and arms, and against the peace of our Lady the Queen,—the statement of promises which need not be proved, as promises in indebitatus counts, and mutual promises to perform agreements,—and all statements of a like kind, shall be omitted." As the rule, therefore, can only take effect in those few cases in which the above directions have not been obeyed, it is deemed unnecessary to discuss the matter further in the present work.

nistration of criminal justice, contains also some valuable provisions,—not indeed directing the omission of “averments of any matter unnecessary to be proved,” but dispensing with their insertion in any indictment or information.<sup>1</sup> The rule, therefore, under discussion is now, in comparison with what it formerly was, of little importance even in criminal proceedings, and a few examples will suffice to illustrate its operation. And first, as to averments of place. It is now sufficient in all cases, excepting where local description is required, to state in the margin of the

<sup>1</sup> 14 & 15 V., c. 100, § 23, enacts, that “it shall not be necessary to state any venue in the body of any indictment, but the county, city or other jurisdiction named in the margin thereof shall be taken to be the venue for all the facts stated in the body of such indictment; provided that in cases where local description is or hereafter shall be required, such local description shall be given in the body of the indictment; and provided also, that where an indictment for an offence committed in the county of any city or town corporate shall be preferred at the assizes of the adjoining county, such county of the city or town shall be deemed the venue, and may either be stated in the margin of the indictment, with or without the name of the county in which the offender is to be tried, or be stated in the body of the indictment by way of venue.” § 24 enacts, that “no indictment for any offence shall be held insufficient for want of the averment of any matter unnecessary to be proved, nor for the omission of the words ‘as appears by the record,’ or of the words ‘with force and arms,’ or of the words ‘against the peace,’ nor for the insertion of the words ‘against the form of the statute,’ instead of ‘against the form of the statutes,’ or vice versa, nor for that any person mentioned in the indictment is designated by a name of office, or other descriptive appellation instead of his proper name, nor for omitting to state the time at which the offence was committed in any case where time is not of the essence of the offence, nor for stating the time imperfectly, nor for stating the offence to have been committed on a day subsequent to the finding of the indictment, or on an impossible day, or on a day that never happened, nor for want of a proper or perfect venue, nor for want of a proper or formal conclusion, nor for want of or imperfection in the addition of any defendant, nor for want of the statement of the value or price of any matter or thing, or the amount of damage, injury, or spoil, in any case where the value or price, or the amount of damage, injury, or spoil, is not of the essence of the offence.” § 25 enacts, that “every objection to any indictment for any formal defect apparent on the face thereof shall be taken, by demurrer or motion to quash such indictment, before the jury shall be sworn, and not afterwards; and every court, before which any such objection shall be taken for the formal defect, may, if it be thought necessary, cause the indictment to be forthwith amended in such particular by some officer of the court or other person, and thereupon the trial shall proceed as if no such defect had appeared.”

indictment the county, city or other jurisdiction, as the venue for all the facts averred in the body of the indictment.<sup>1</sup> Even before this salutary alteration was introduced into the law, it was held to be no objection in the case of a transitory felony, that there was no such parish in the county, as that in which the offence was stated to have been committed.<sup>2</sup>

§ 227. In indictments, however, for those offences which the law regards as bearing a local character, the proof respecting the place must still correspond with the allegation; though probably in most cases of variance on this point the courts would sanction an amendment of the record.<sup>3</sup> The distinction between local and transitory offences is not very clearly drawn, but in the former category may be safely included, among others, burglary,<sup>4</sup> but not highway-robbery;<sup>5</sup> house-breaking;<sup>6</sup> stealing in a dwelling-house;<sup>7</sup> sacrilege;<sup>8</sup> riotously demolishing churches, houses, machinery, &c.;<sup>9</sup> maliciously firing a dwelling-house, perhaps an out-house, but not a stack;<sup>10</sup> forcible entry;<sup>11</sup> poaching;<sup>12</sup> nuisances to highways;<sup>13</sup> malicious injuries to sea-banks, mill-dams, or other local property. In most of these cases it is sufficient to allege and prove the parish, township, or other local district, less than a county, in which the offence was committed;<sup>14</sup> but in some, a more accurate description is necessary. Thus, an indictment for not repairing a highway must specify the situation of the road within the parish, and any substantial variance between the description and the evidence will be material.<sup>1</sup> So, on an indictment for night poaching, it has been held, by a majority of the judges, that the locus in quo must be described either by name, ownership, occupation, or abuttals, and that it is not sufficient to allege that the prisoner was found "in a certain close in the parish of A."<sup>2</sup> If the defendant be charged with taking or destroying fish in water adjoining a dwelling-house, and if the boundary of any parish, township, or vill, happen to be in or by the side of such water, it is sufficient to prove that the offence was committed either in the parish, township, or vill named in the indictment, or in any such local district adjoining the water;<sup>3</sup> and if the charge be that of stealing oysters, or oyster brood, the bed, laying, or fishery may be described by name or otherwise, without stating it to be in any particular parish, township, or vill.<sup>4</sup>

§ 228. It would be extremely difficult to advance any sensible argument in favour of this distinction, which the law recognises between local and transitory offences. On an indictment, indeed, against a parish for not repairing a highway, it may be convenient to allege, as it will be necessary to prove, that the spot out of repair is within the parish charged; and in those very few cases, where the statute upon which an indictment is framed, gives the penalty to the poor of the parish in which the offence is committed, a similar allegation may be properly inserted; but why a burglar should be entitled to more accurate information respecting the house he is charged with having entered, than the highway robber can claim as to the spot where his offence is stated to have been committed, it is impossible to say; either full information should be given in all cases or in none.

§ 230. Allegations of number and value are also in general immaterial in indictments. Thus, if a party be charged with stealing five horses, he may be convicted of stealing one; or if he be indicted for larceny or robbery, and the property be laid as of the value of twenty shillings, the offence will be complete, though it appear that the article stolen was of less value than any coin of the realm, provided that it was of some value to the owner.<sup>1</sup> In certain cases, however, value is essential to constitute the offence; as where a bankrupt is indicted for fraudulently concealing or removing property to the value of ten pounds,<sup>2</sup> or for absconding from England with property to the amount of twenty pounds,<sup>3</sup> or a bankrupt or insolvent in Ireland is indicted for excepting out of his schedule property of greater value than twenty pounds,<sup>4</sup> or a person is indicted for maliciously injuring property to an amount exceeding five pounds,<sup>5</sup> or a tenant is indicted for stealing a chattel or fixture let to him with his house or lodging, and exceeding the value of five pounds,<sup>6</sup> or a party is charged with stealing in a dwelling-house chattels, &c., to that amount,<sup>7</sup> or with stealing, or with destroying or damaging, either maliciously or with intent to steal, any trees in a park, pleasure-ground, garden, or orchard, above the value of one pound, or any trees elsewhere above the value of five pounds.<sup>8</sup> In such cases as these, the evidence must so far correspond with the allegation as to show that the statutable offence has been committed: that is, the property fraudulently or maliciously dealt with, stolen, or destroyed; must be proved, as well as alleged, to be of the requisite value; but if this be done, the exact amount specified in the indictment need not be proved. after enumerating many articles, without stating their separate value, added, "one hundred other articles of furniture and a certain debt due from J. § 232. It is often allowable to omit from the indictment, and it is seldom necessary to prove with precision, allegations of quality; or, in other words, those allegations which describe the mode in which certain acts have been done. Thus, it is unnecessary in any indictment<sup>2</sup> for murder or manslaughter to set forth the manner in which, or the means by which, the death of the deceased was caused; but it is sufficient to charge in every indictment for murder that the defendant did feloniously, wilfully, and of his malice aforethought kill and murder the deceased, and in every indictment for manslaughter, that he did feloniously kill and slay him.<sup>3</sup> Should, too, an indictment for homicide unnecessarily allege the means of death, it would be quite sufficient for the proof to agree with the allegation in its general character, without precise conformity in every particular. So, if the charge be of a felonious assault with a staff, and the proof be of such an assault with a stone; or if a wound, alleged to have been given with a sword, be proved to have been inflicted by an axe; or if a pistol be stated to have been loaded with a bullet, and it turns out to have been loaded with some other destructive material,<sup>4</sup> the charge is substantially proved, and no variance occurs.<sup>5</sup>

§ 233. The fourth general rule which regulates the law of variance, is that allegations of matter of essential description should be proved as laid. It is impossible to explain with precision the meaning of these words; and the only practical mode of understanding the extent of the rule is to examine some of the leading decisions on the subject, and then to apply the reasoning or ruling contained therein to other analogous cases, always bearing in mind that the judges have large powers of granting amendments both in civil and in criminal proceedings.<sup>1</sup> And first, with respect to criminal law, it is now clearly established, that the name or nature of the property stolen or damaged is matter of essential description. Thus, for example, if the charge be one of firing a stack of hay, and it turns out to have been a stack of wheat; or if a man be accused of stealing a drake, and it is proved to have been a goose, or even a duck, the variance is fatal, unless an amendment be permitted.<sup>2</sup> A diverting instance of the application of this rule, and one which forcibly illustrates the advantage of allowing amendments, occurred some years back at the assizes for Hertford. A man was charged with stealing "a slop." The theft was clearly proved; but, when called upon for his defence, the prisoner exclaimed, "Why, my lord, it ain't no slop." "You hear what he says," observed the judge, addressing the jury. "Is it a slop, gentlemen?" "No, my lord, it's a smock," said one of the jurymen. "Then you must acquit the prisoner." He was acquitted; but the grand jury not being discharged, a second indictment was preferred and found, charging him with stealing "a smock." Nothing daunted, the prisoner now pleaded autrefois acquit, and called several witnesses to prove that the article he had stolen was in fact a slop, and this question was submitted to a second jury with much gravity by the learned judge.<sup>3</sup>

§ 234. With respect to the description of animals, the stealing of which is made a statutable offence, it would seem to be sufficient to use the generic term which includes the whole species, even though the Act should employ more specific language. This

doctrine has been recognised by the judges in a case of sheep stealing. The words of the Act<sup>1</sup> on which the indictment was founded, were, any "ram, ewe, sheep, or lamb;" the charge was of killing a sheep, with intent to steal the carcase; the proof was, that a sheep was killed, but the sex could not be discovered. Upon this, the prisoner's counsel contended, that the jury could not presume that the animal was a wether, and that, if it was an ewe, the indictment was bad; but a great majority of the judges, while they admitted that the first proposition was sound law, held that the word "sheep" was a generic term, which included equally rams, ewes, and wethers, and the conviction was accordingly confirmed.<sup>2</sup> So, an indictment for stealing a sheep will now be supported by evidence of killing a lamb.<sup>3</sup> Whether a charge of stealing a horse would be sustained by proof of stealing a gelding, a mare, a colt, or a filly,<sup>4</sup> is by no means clear; though, if the principle be carried out to its legitimate extent, it would seem that no variance would in such case arise.

§ 234 A. On prosecutions for forgery under the old law, great nicety used to be required in describing the instrument forged; and while that offence continued to be a capital crime, many a forger had reason to rejoice that an excessive minuteness of description afforded an opportunity of escape from the gallows by causing a variance between the allegations and the proofs. The law, however, is now happily amended, and the punishment for forgery has become less severe but more certain. The forger is no longer sentenced to death on conviction, but he seldom can claim an acquittal on the ground of some senseless technicality. The Act of 1861, which consolidates the law on this subject,<sup>1</sup> expressly enacts, in § 42, that, "in any indictment for forging, altering, offering, uttering, disposing of, or putting off, any instrument, it shall be sufficient to describe such instrument by any name or designation by which the same may be usually known, or by the purport thereof, without setting out any copy or fac-simile thereof, or otherwise describing the same or the value thereof." A similar laxity of description is permitted, whenever any person is indicted for engraving or making "any instrument, matter, or thing," or for using or unlawfully possessing any plate, material, or paper, on which any instrument, matter, or thing shall have been engraved, made, or printed.<sup>2</sup>

<sup>3</sup> R. v. Spicer, 1 C. & Kir. 699; 1 Den. C. C. 82, S. C., overruling R. v. Loom, 1 Moo. C. C. 160. The decision in R. v. Loom was under the repealed Act of 15 G. 2, c. 34, which, like the Act of 7 & 8 G. 4, c. 29, § 25, specified lambs as well as sheep. In an old Act of 25 H. 8, c. 13, §§ 2, 13, which is now repealed by 19 & 20 V., c. 64, and which prohibited persons from having above 2000 sheep, it was expressly enacted, that "lambs under the age of one whole year shall not be adjudged for sheep prohibited by the statute." The special insertion of such a clause leads rather to an inference, that, without it, the mention of the grown animal would have included the young. See next note.

<sup>4</sup> These are the words used in 24 & 25 V., c. 96, § 10. Under an old Act against horse-stealing, which only mentioned "horses, geldings, and mares," it was held that proof of stealing a filly supported an indictment for stealing a mare, R. v. Welland, R. & R. 494.

§ 234 B. In all indictments, too, for offences under the Debtors' Act, 1869, it is sufficient to "set forth the substance of the offence charged, in the words of the Act specifying the offence, or as near thereto as circumstances admit, without alleging or setting forth any debt, act of bankruptcy, trading, adjudication, or any proceeding in, or order, warrant or document of, any court acting under the Bankruptcy Act, 1869."<sup>3</sup> matter of essential description, and must formerly have been proved with a precision which was but little calculated to engender any ardent feelings of respect for the criminal law. In the present day, however, there can be little room for doubt, that the court would in every case of mere misnomer<sup>1</sup> direct an amendment to be made almost as a matter of course ;<sup>2</sup> but still a question may occasionally arise as to what the nature of the amendment ought to be. The following rules, therefore, may furnish some guide on this subject:—1st. If the name of the injured party cannot be proved, it will suffice to describe him as a person “whose name is to the jurors unknown.”<sup>3</sup> 2nd. It is not necessary to describe a party by what is, in strictness, his right name ; but it will be sufficient to state any name he has assumed,<sup>4</sup> or by which he is generally known, and the omission of a second christian name has been frequently held to be immaterial.<sup>5</sup> 3rd. An illegitimate child is not entitled to the surname either of the mother or of the putative father, but can only acquire a surname by reputation.<sup>6</sup> 4th. The proper mode of describing a peer is by his christian name and rank in the peerage ; but the christian name may be omitted ;<sup>7</sup> and it seems that under the degree of a duke, a nobleman may be designated by the simple title of “lord.”<sup>8</sup> 5th. In some few instances the Legislature has still further interposed for the purpose of avoiding the danger of variance, and has expressly enacted, that, to justify a conviction for certain offences, the name of the injured party need neither be alleged nor proved. For instance, if a person be indicted for any offence against the Act of 1861 relating to malicious injuries to property, it will suffice to allege and prove that he did the act charged with intent to injure or defraud, and no allegation or proof is necessary that the prisoner intended to injure or defraud any particular person.<sup>1</sup> The same law prevails in all prosecutions "for forging, altering, uttering, offering, disposing of, or putting off, any instrument,"<sup>2</sup> or for obtaining, or attempting to obtain, any chattel, money, or valuable security by false pretences;<sup>1</sup> and, in this last case, the indictment will be good, "without alleging any ownership of the chattel, money, or valuable security."<sup>2</sup> So, also, in all indictments for stealing, or fraudulently destroying, or concealing wills,<sup>3</sup> or for stealing, or fraudulently taking, or maliciously destroying, records or legal documents,<sup>4</sup> or for stealing fixtures attached to any square, street, or place dedicated to public use or ornament,<sup>5</sup> it is not necessary to allege that "the article in respect of which the offence is committed is the property of any person."

§ 236. The name of the prisoner is not a matter of essential description, because on this subject the prosecutor may have no means of obtaining correct information. § 237. The rule which renders it necessary to prove essentially descriptive allegations need not, in this place, be illustrated at any length with respect to civil actions, because the question has already been discussed, while examining the cases that have been decided on the statutes authorising amendments.<sup>7</sup> It may, however, be observed, that in actions on special contract no variance will arise from omitting part of the consideration for the defendant's promise, unless such consideration be in the nature of a condition precedent.<sup>1</sup> In the case of Clark v. Morrell,<sup>2</sup> the declaration stated that the plaintiff agreed, amongst other things, to manage some chemical works for the defendants, who, in consideration of such agreement, promised to pay him a certain salary; it then contained an averment of mutual promises to perform the said agreement,<sup>3</sup> and closed with alleging a breach on the part of the defendants. The agreement, on production, being found to contain stipulations that the plaintiff should not communicate his discoveries to strangers, and should give the defendants the exclusive benefit of his knowledge, as far as their works were concerned, it was objected that there was a variance between the declaration and the agreement, as the former was silent as to these stipulations, which constituted material parts of the consideration for the defendants' promise. Lord Abinger thereupon amended the record, but the Court of Common Pleas was unanimously of opinion that, although the learned judge had the power of authorising an amendment, yet the exercise of such power was, in fact, unnecessary. Chief-Justice Tindal observed, "The consideration for the defendants' promise is the agreement to which reference is made. The plaintiff does not profess to set out the whole of the agreement. There is no variance unless there is an omission of something of a conditional nature, which, if stated, would require an allegation of performance." And Mr. Justice Coltman added, "if the matters omitted had raised a condition precedent, the omission would have constituted a variance; but the matters, the omission of which is complained of, did not raise any condition precedent. They were not matters which the plaintiff was bound to aver, and, if traversed, to prove, in order to support his action; but would have formed the subject of a cross action, if not performed on the part of the plaintiff."<sup>4</sup>

§ 238. It may further be remarked, that in actions of assumpsit, if any part of the contract proved should vary materially from what is alleged in the pleadings, the variance will be fatal. Thus, where a declaration stated a specific contract for the sale of a dwelling-house and fixtures, for the residue of a term of years, to commence from a given day, and to satisfy this allegation, a contract was produced which, on the face of it, showed that it was a sale of a fee-simple, or at least, left it uncertain what was the interest intended to be conveyed, it was held that the plaintiff must be nonsuited.<sup>1</sup> So, in an action against a tenant for not repairing premises demised, where the contract as declared upon was, that the plaintiff should let, and the defendant should take, a farm at a certain rent, the plaintiff undertaking to put the premises in repair within twelve months, and the defendant undertaking to keep them in repair after that time, the court directed a nonsuit, it appearing on the trial that the agreement contained an additional stipulation, that the plaintiff should keep the buildings insured in 600*l.*, and should rebuild in case of fire.<sup>2</sup>

CHAPTER II.

CONFINING EVIDENCE TO POINTS IN ISSUE.

§ 239. The second general rule, which governs the production of testimony, is, that the evidence must be confined to the points in issue. This rule is founded upon the consideration that, since these points have been alone selected by the parties in their pleading, as those on which they are mutually willing to rest the fate of the cause,<sup>1</sup> any evidence in support of other facts which, not being expressly alleged, must be assumed to have no existence, or not being expressly denied, must be admitted to be true, would be obviously improper. Thus, where to an action of assumpsit the defendant pleaded the statute of limitations, to which there was a replication that he did promise within six years, and issue thereon, the plaintiff was not allowed to prove that the action was grounded on a fraudulent receipt of money by the defendant, and that the fraud was first discovered within six years from the commencement of the suit.<sup>2</sup> So, in an action by the indorsee against the drawer of a bill of exchange, where the plea stated that the defendant had indorsed the bill for a special purpose to one Levy, who, in fraud of that purpose, had handed it to one Hunter, and that Hunter had passed it to the plaintiff without any good or valuable consideration, and that the plaintiff was not the bonâ fide holder, the court held that, on a replication de injuriâ, the defendant was not at liberty to show that the plaintiff knew of the fraud; that the pleadings put in issue nothing but the fact of a consideration having been given; that the only proper mode of implicating the plaintiff in the alleged fraud by pleading was to aver notice in distinct terms; and that the allegation that the plaintiff was not a bonâ fide holder, was not equivalent to such an averment.<sup>3</sup> So, a particular allegation of voluntary waste will not let in evidence of permissive waste;<sup>4</sup>

and where, in covenant, the breach assigned was that the defendant had not used the plaintiff's farm in a husbandlike manner, but had committed waste, evidence of bad husbandry not amounting to waste was rejected.<sup>1</sup> Again, in an action of defamation, where the issues raised by the pleas of justification were whether the plaintiff's scholars were ill fed, badly lodged, and covered with vermin, the defendant's counsel was not permitted to put any questions to the witnesses, with the view of showing that the boys were also badly educated;<sup>2</sup> and in another action of the same kind, where the defendant had only pleaded the general issue, Lord Ellenborough would not allow the plaintiff to prove that the assertions contained in the libel were false. "There is no plea of justification on the record," said his Lordship, "and, therefore, I can no more hear a falsification on the one side, than a justification on the other."

§ 240. The cases just cited in illustration of this rule have been selected at hazard; but in order to obtain practical information on this important subject, it may be advisable to examine at some length the rules of pleading, together with the leading decisions explanatory of their operation.<sup>4</sup> These rules, which came into force in Trinity Term, 1853, and which are founded in great measure on the prior rules of Easter Term, 1834, and Michaelmas Term, 1838, are intended, like the rules which they supersede, to effect three material objects; first, to make the plaintiff acquainted with the intended defence, and thus to prevent his being taken by surprise at the trial; secondly, to save the expense of collecting unnecessary evidence; and thirdly, to bring legal defences more prominently forward on the face of the record.<sup>5</sup>

§ 241. Such being the general objects of the pleading rules, the

<sup>4</sup> Many of the cases referred to in the following observations were decided with respect to the rules of 1834; but this fact being borne in mind, they will serve to illustrate the present rules.

<sup>5</sup> See Isaac v. Farrer, 1 M. & W. 70, per Ld. Abinger; 4 Dowl. 755, S. C.; Barnett v. Glossop, 1 Bing. N. C. 636, 637, per Park and Bosanquet, Js.; 3 Dowl. 625, S. C.; Gutsole v. Mathers, 1 M. & W. 502, 503, per Ld. Abinger.

first rule which requires notice in a work on evidence is, that "in all actions by and against [the trustee] of a bankrupt, or executors or administrators, or persons authorised by Act of Parliament to sue or be sued as nominal parties, the character, in which the plaintiff or defendant is stated on the record to sue or be sued, shall not in any case be considered as in issue, unless specially denied."<sup>1</sup> This rule takes no special notice of an action brought by husband and wife, but by the old law, the plea of the general issue admits the marriage.<sup>2</sup>

§ 242. Passing now to pleadings in particular actions, the most practically important question relates to the effect of the plea of the general issue in actions on contract.<sup>3</sup> This plea, according to the nature of the action, may assume one or other of two forms, being either a plea of "non-assumpsit," or a plea of "never was indebted." With respect to the first form, which is now almost exclusively confined to special declarations, the rules have determined, that, "in all actions on simple contract, except as hereinafter excepted,<sup>4</sup> the plea of non-assumpsit, or a plea traversing the contract or agreement alleged in the declaration, shall operate only as a denial in fact of the express contract, promise, or agreement alleged, or of matters of fact from which the contract, promise, or agreement alleged may be implied by law."<sup>5</sup>

§ 243. By virtue of this rule, which is rendered somewhat obscure by its brevity, the plea of non-assumpsit, when pleaded to an action on special contract, operates on the one hand as a denial, both of the defendant's promise as alleged in the declaration, and of the consideration on which that promise is founded; but on the other hand, it does not put in issue, either the performance of a condition precedent, when the consideration of the promise is executory, or any matter of inducement which forms no part of the consideration; neither does it deny the defendant's breach of promise, or the plaintiff's consequent damage. It will presently be seen that these several propositions are fully supported, both by the direct illustrations afforded by the judges, and by legal decisions.

<sup>3</sup> In Ireland the general issue would seem to be abolished; for the Act of 16 & 17 V., c. 113, enacts, in § 70, that "in actions upon contract, every defence by way of denial must traverse some one, or more than one, material matter of fact; as, for instance, the drawing, or making, or indorsing, or accepting, or presenting, or notice of dishonour of a bill or note." § 71 enacts, that "in actions for wrongs, defences by way of denial shall take issue on some one, or more than one, material matter of fact alleged in the summons and plaint." But see 24 & 25 V., c. 95, Sched.

§ 244. The first two illustrations are as follows:—"In an action on a warranty, such pleas will operate as a denial of the fact of the sale and warranty having been given, but not of the breach; and in an action on a policy of insurance, of the subscription to the alleged policy by the defendant, but not of the interest, of the commencement of the risk, of the loss, or of the alleged compliance with warranties."<sup>1</sup> In accordance with the first example here given, it has been held, that, when to an action on the warranty of a horse, the defendant had pleaded non-assumpsit, he could not give evidence to show that the horse was sound at the time of the sale.<sup>2</sup> The second illustration has been explained to mean, that the plea of non-assumpsit puts in issue, not merely the subscription to a policy containing the particular terms alleged, but to a policy caused to be made by or on behalf of the plaintiff, and containing those terms; as also the consideration for the defendant's promise, as, for instance, the fact that the plaintiff had paid the premium, or had promised to observe on his part the terms and conditions of the policy.<sup>3</sup> The examples given by the judges thus proceed:—"In actions against carriers and other bailees, for not delivering or not keeping goods safe, or not returning them on request, and in actions against agents for not accounting, such pleas will operate as a denial of any express or implied contract to the effect alleged in the declaration, but not of the breach.”<sup>1</sup> So, if an action on contract be brought against an attorney for negligence, the fact of his having been retained by the plaintiff as an attorney would seem to be put in issue by the plea of non-assumpsit.<sup>2</sup>

§ 245. In stating that the contract alleged in the declaration shall be formally denied by the plea of non-assumpsit, the judges have laid down a rule, which, in ordinary cases, is of no difficult application. Thus, if a purchaser were to bring an action against a vendor for breach of an alleged contract, whereby the defendant agreed to deliver an abstract of title to the plaintiff, it appears tolerably obvious that, as under such an agreement the vendor would be bound to show a good title to the interest sold, the defendant might prove, under the general issue, that his real promise amounted simply to this, that he should produce an abstract showing a limited title.<sup>3</sup> So, in an action on contract against a carrier for negligence in conveying goods, the defendant may prove, under the general issue, that the goods were received by him on an express condition that the plaintiff should accompany them for the purpose of protection, and that he neglected to do so, in consequence of which the goods were lost; because such evidence, showing that the promise was conditional, goes to negative the unqualified promise alleged in the declaration.<sup>4</sup> On the other hand, cases are not wanting, which cannot be reconciled with the rule under discussion, without an exercise of subtle care. Thus, in Smart v. Hyde,<sup>5</sup> the plaintiff declared on a breach of warranty of a horse, and the plea—after stating that the horse

was sold at a repository under certain regulations, by which the warranty was to remain in force for a limited time only, unless notice of unsoundness were given—went on to aver that the sale took place subject to the regulations, and that such notice was not given. The plaintiff thereupon demurred, but the court held that the plea did not amount to the general issue, apparently considering that the regulations constituted something extrinsic or collateral to the contract in the declaration alleged.<sup>1</sup> So, where the plaintiff declared on an agreement, whereby the defendant contracted to receive certain bales of wool, and alleged as a breach his refusal to receive them, the court held that the defendant was justified in pleading that the wool contracted for was to be according to sample, and that the bales tendered were of an inferior description.<sup>2</sup> The plea, in this last case, did not vary the substance of the contract, but merely specified that the wool was to be sold by sample, which, in fact, amounted to a warranty; and since it was consistent with the contract, as alleged in the declaration, that the plaintiff should have given a warranty, the plea, while it admitted the contract, sought to avoid the effect of it.<sup>3</sup>

potash of equal value; and then alleged that he did deliver twenty tons of best lead; the defendant was not allowed, under the general issue, to prove that the lead delivered was of an extremely inferior quality.<sup>1</sup>

§ 247. The doctrine that the plea of non-assumpsit puts in issue the consideration as well as the promise, is one which cannot now be disputed;<sup>2</sup> and, consequently, a defendant will be allowed, under such plea, to avail himself of any material variance between the consideration for his promise alleged in the declaration, and that proved by the production of the written agreement.<sup>3</sup> Nay, he may show the absence of any consideration sufficient to sustain his promise, because, by disproving the consideration, he will of course disprove the contract.<sup>4</sup> Again, if a declaration describes the terms of a contract in language denoting that certain acts, which the plaintiff has engaged to do, are independent of, or concurrent with, the act to be done on the part of the defendant; and then goes on to allege that, although he, the plaintiff, was ready and willing to perform his part of the agreement, yet the defendant had not done the act he had engaged to do: this latter, under the plea of non-assumpsit, may, it seems, show that the acts to be done by the plaintiff were in the nature of conditions precedent, and had not been performed; for, by giving such evidence, the agreement will appear to be a conditional agreement, and not the absolute agreement declared upon.<sup>5</sup>

houses, lands, or fisheries, copyhold fines, hire of goods, freight, demurrage, and the like,<sup>1</sup> the plea of non-assumpsit is inadmissible, and the plea of "never was indebted" operates, by virtue of the rules, "as a denial of those matters of fact, from which the liability of the defendant arises."<sup>2</sup> The judges have thus illustrated this rule:—"In actions for goods bargained and sold, or sold and delivered, the plea will operate as a denial of the bargain and sale, or sale and delivery, in point of fact; in the like action for money had and received, it will operate as a denial both of the receipt of money and the existence of those facts which make such receipt by the defendant a receipt to the use of the plaintiff."<sup>3</sup>

§ 249. In addition to these examples, which are certainly somewhat meagre, it may be observed that, whenever the defendant can show that in fact no debt ever existed before action brought, he may do so under the plea of never indebted. For instance, if the action be for goods sold and delivered, he may defend himself under this plea, by proving that they were paid for by ready money;<sup>4</sup> that they were sold on credit, which was unexpired when the action was commenced;<sup>5</sup> that they were bought through an agent, and that before the expiration of the credit, the defendant had remitted the price of the goods to the agent;<sup>6</sup> that they were sold under a condition, that if they did not answer their purpose, nothing should be paid for them, and that in fact they did not answer their purpose;<sup>7</sup> that they were sold under any special agreement, which had not been performed;<sup>8</sup> that they were delivered under a contract of barter;<sup>1</sup> that the goods delivered did not answer the description of the articles which the vendor professed to sell;<sup>2</sup> or that they turned out to be utterly useless.<sup>3</sup> Under the general issue, the defendant may also prove in reduction of damages, that the goods supplied were of less value than was prescribed by the contract.<sup>4</sup> Moreover, he will succeed under the same plea, if the action be brought for goods sold and delivered, and the contract prove to be one for the supply of materials, to be used by the plaintiff in the construction of a building or other fixture for the defendant; for, in such case, the proper mode of declaring will be on a count, either for work, labour, and materials, or for erecting and constructing the building or fixture.<sup>5</sup> But the defendant cannot, under the plea of never indebted, show either generally, that at the time of the sale the goods did not belong to the vendor, or specially, that he was not entitled to them at that time, and that afterwards they were reclaimed by the real owner.<sup>6</sup> Where certain goods liable to forfeiture had been actually seized by the revenue officers, and condemned after their delivery to the purchaser, the court held, in an action for their price, that the defendant was right in pleading a special plea, which admitted an actual sale and

§ 250. In an action for goods bargained and sold, the defendant may show, under never indebted, that they were sold on condition that, if not paid for at a time specified, the vendor might resell them, and come upon the vendee for any loss on the resale, and that in fact the vendor had exercised this right and resold the goods.<sup>2</sup> So, a defence to a similar action that the goods were sold under a special contract, that they should be shipped within the current month, and landed in London within a given time, which conditions were not performed, is admissible under the general issue.<sup>3</sup> A fraudulent defendant may also nonsuit his opponent, if, on being sued for goods bargained and sold, he pleads the general issue, and can then prove that the property in question was not only sold, but was actually delivered to him.<sup>4</sup>

§ 251. In an action for work and labour, it may be shown, under never indebted, that the work was done so negligently and unskillfully as to be valueless;<sup>5</sup> or that it was done under an agreement that the plaintiff should claim no remuneration, except for disbursements;<sup>6</sup> or under a contract, which has been broken by the plaintiff;<sup>7</sup> or under some special agreement, which did not entitle the plaintiff to maintain an action on simple contract;<sup>8</sup> or that part of the work was done, or part of the materials was supplied, by the defendant, and that the value of such part amounted to so much of the plaintiff's claim as was not covered by the other pleas.<sup>1</sup> In the cases which established this last proposition, it was contended that the defendant should have pleaded a set-off, but the Courts of Common Pleas and Exchequer respectively held, that the amount of the work done, and materials supplied by him, was not a matter of set-off, but of deduction.

§ 252. If the plaintiff declare on a count for money had and received, the plea of never indebted will operate as a denial both of the receipt of the money, and of the existence of those circumstances which make such receipt by the defendant a receipt for the use of the plaintiff.<sup>2</sup> Thus, the defendant under this plea may prove any facts, which show that the money was not received to the plaintiff's sole use; as, for example, that it was the proceeds of goods pledged to the defendant, with a power of sale, by persons who, being joint-owners with the plaintiff, were allowed by him to hold the goods as their own, and to whom the defendant had made advances equal to the value of the goods.<sup>3</sup>

§ 253. In actions for money lent or paid, the defendant, under the general issue, may prove that the loan or payment was made under such circumstances as to raise no implied promise of repayment,<sup>4</sup> or that the parties entered into a contract inconsistent with the indebitatus contract declared on; as, for instance, a contract that the plaintiff should lend money to the defendant, or pay money for him, in consideration of the defendant indorsing a bill to him, or depositing with him bonds and other securities,

§ 254. If the action be upon an account stated, the plaintiff must prove, before he can recover even nominal damages, not only that the defendant had acknowledged something to be due, but that a precise sum has been admitted.<sup>2</sup> The defendant too may show, under the plea of never indebted, either that the account was in fact incorrect, even though he has previously admitted its correctness,<sup>3</sup> or that it related to a transaction,—as, for instance, a debt due from a third party,—for which he was not liable;<sup>4</sup> because the issue is not simply whether an account was stated or not, but whether the defendant was or was not indebted on such an account stated. It seems, however, that he cannot rely on a subsequent account stated, in which the balance was found to be in his favour, because, in law, the second account will be regarded either as a payment or as a set-off, and in either event it must be specially pleaded.<sup>5</sup>

to him;<sup>1</sup> but if the mortgagee's claim be not made until after the rent has accrued, and the plaintiff's right of action has consequently vested, the demand will furnish no defence, even though it be pleaded in confession and avoidance.<sup>2</sup> Nay, it is extremely doubtful whether, in such a case, a plea stating that the tenant has actually paid the mortgagee under compulsion of his claim, could be supported.<sup>3</sup> In a similar action it seems that the defendant may show, under the plea of never indebted, that the premises were uninhabitable,<sup>4</sup> when such a defence is a bar to the action;<sup>5</sup> or that there has been no actual entry by him;<sup>6</sup> or that his occupation was not by the sufferance of the plaintiff;<sup>7</sup> or that he originally occupied the premises by the permission of a prior owner, to whom he had paid all arrears of rent without having received any notice of an assignment to the plaintiff;<sup>8</sup> or that he was let into possession by the plaintiff, under a contract to purchase, which contained no stipulation as to the terms of occupancy, and which afterwards went off in consequence of the plaintiff's inability to make out a good title;<sup>9</sup> or, in short, the defendant may give in evidence any other fact, which proves that he never so occupied the premises as to render him liable, in point of law, to the payment of rent.<sup>10</sup> action arose out of a contract by specialty; <sup>1</sup> though, where, on a loan, any mortgage or other deed has been taken by way of collateral security, and such deed contains no covenant to repay the sum advanced, a simple action for money lent may well be supported.<sup>2</sup> If there has been an original independent simple contract, which is merged in a deed, it would probably be deemed necessary to plead the deed.<sup>3</sup> Again, under the general issue, the defendant may always show, that the actual agreement between the parties was materially different from that declared upon.<sup>4</sup>

§ 257. "In every species of actions on contract, all matters in confession and avoidance, including not only those by way of discharge, but those which show the transaction to be either void or voidable in point of law, on the ground of fraud or otherwise, shall be specially pleaded: Ex. gr., Infancy, coverture, release, payment, performance, illegality of consideration, either by statute or common law, drawing, indorsing, accepting, &c., bills or notes by way of accommodation, set-off,<sup>5</sup> mutual credit, unseaworthiness, misrepresentation, concealment, deviation, and various other defences must be pleaded."<sup>6</sup>

<sup>6</sup> Reg. Plead., H. T., 16 V., r. 8; 1 E. & B. lxxx. The Irish Act, 16 & 17 V., c. 113, § 70, enacts, that "every defence, which admits a contract in fact, but relies upon matter of avoidance or discharge, or illegality on the ground of fraud or otherwise,—as, for instance, infancy, coverture, release, payment or performance, illegality of consideration, either by statute or common law, drawing, indorsing, accepting bills or notes by way of accommodation, set-off, mutual credit, misrepresentation, concealment, deviation,—all be so expressly pleaded."

common law;<sup>1</sup> nor whether the express contract on which the plaintiff sues is illegal, or the facts which constitute the consideration are so, and therefore no contract to pay for them can be implied;<sup>2</sup> but, in all cases alike, the defendant, if he wishes to rely on the illegality of the transaction, must plead it specially as a defence; and unless he does so, he can raise no objection, even though the illegality appear completely by the plaintiff's own evidence.<sup>3</sup> Thus, where the plaintiff brought an action for goods sold and delivered, and, in making out his case, proved that the goods were fireworks, which by the old repealed Act of 9 & 10 W. 3, c. 7, § 1,<sup>4</sup> could not be legally sold, the court held that he was entitled to a verdict, the defendant having merely pleaded the general issue.<sup>5</sup> So, if an action for money had and received be brought against a stakeholder, it seems that he cannot, without a special plea, rely on the Act, which prohibits wagers.<sup>6</sup>

§ 259. The word "coverture" in the rule is somewhat ambiguous, since a question may arise, first, as to whether it applies to the coverture of the plaintiff as well as to that of the defendant; and next, supposing that it does, whether it points only to a marriage after the contract, or extends also to a marriage existing at the time of the contract, when, in point of law, there would be either no contract at all, or a contract between the husband and the defendant.<sup>7</sup> If a married woman sues alone under circumstances which would have justified her joinder as a party, had her husband brought the action, the defendant can only take advantage of the coverture by a plea in abatement.<sup>8</sup>

§ 260. Although, under the above rule, payment, when relied on as a bar to the action, must be specially pleaded, doubts might still have been entertained whether that fact would not have been admissible under the general issue, with a view of reducing the damages,<sup>1</sup> had it not been for a further rule, which orders, that “payment shall not in any case be allowed to be given in evidence in reduction of damages or debt, but shall be pleaded in bar.”<sup>2</sup> These words seem sufficiently plain and comprehensive; but an attempt was made on one occasion to avoid their authority. The action was on a bill of exchange for 40*l.*, and the defendant paid into court 41*l.* 18*s.*, denying damages ultra. At the trial it appeared that the amount paid into court was too little by one year’s interest; whereupon the defendant tendered evidence of the payment of the bill some years before, for the purpose of showing that the jury ought not to give damages in respect of the interest, as no principal sum bearing interest was in fact due during the year for which interest was claimed. The court, however, notwithstanding an argument that the interest, being merely damages, could not be pleaded to, held that the evidence was inadmissible.<sup>3</sup>

§ 261. If “the plaintiff, in order to avoid the expense of the plea of payment or set-off, shall have given credit in the particulars of his demand for any sum or sums of money therein admitted to have been paid to the plaintiff, or which the plaintiff admits the defendant is entitled to set off, it shall not be necessary for the defendant to plead the payment or set-off of such sum or sums of money. But this rule is not to apply to cases where the plaintiff, after stating the amount of his demand, states that he seeks to recover a certain balance, without giving credit for any particular sum or sums, or to cases of set-off where the plaintiff does not state the particulars of such set-off.”<sup>1</sup>

§ 262. This last rule, which set at rest one question that had divided the courts in Westminster Hall,<sup>2</sup> has raised others, that have not been unproductive of litigation; but at length the following points seem pretty clearly established:—First, the rule—unlike that which formerly prevailed upon the subject<sup>3</sup>—extends to cases of set-off as well as to payments. Secondly, if the plaintiff, either by his declaration, or by his bill of particulars, admits a specific payment on account of his whole original demand, and goes only for a balance, he cannot recover under the general issue, without proving damages or a debt exceeding the amount admitted; because the matter put in issue is the existence of a balance, after deducting the sum for which credit is given. The sole effect of the rule is to render it unnecessary for the defendant to plead and prove payment of the sums so admitted to have been received.<sup>4</sup> Thirdly, where the bill of particulars gives credit for the payment of particular sums, the court will not scrutinise very nicely the form of the bill; for while, on the one hand, it will assume, as against the plaintiff, that the sums admitted to have been paid generally were paid by the defendant,<sup>5</sup> it will also, on the other hand, allow the plaintiff to explain the items, and to show that certain counter-claims, as, for instance, the value of an article returned by the defendant, were treated in the particulars as money paid.<sup>6</sup> Fourthly, where the particulars admit a specific sum to have been paid, a plea of payment will be considered as being pleaded to the balance only, although some of the items for which credit is given in the particulars were paid after action brought; <sup>1</sup> and, consequently, such plea will, in general, not be allowed, unless the defendant will undertake to prove some payment not covered by the admission.<sup>2</sup> If, however, the particulars claim a balance generally, after giving credit for all payments on account, the plaintiff will recover on proving a claim to any amount, unless the defendant pleads payment, and under that plea shows that the claim so proved has been liquidated.<sup>3</sup> In Green v. Smithies,<sup>4</sup> which was an action for goods sold and delivered, the bill of particulars, while it credited the defendant for a bill of exchange indorsed by him to the plaintiff, debited him to the amount of the bill for its dishonour, and the court held that the defendant could not show, under the general issue, that the plaintiff, after taking and presenting the bill, failed to give notice of dishonour; for the case was the same as if the bill had not been mentioned at all in the particulars, the two items destroying each other. Fifthly, if the plaintiff demands a balance, without stating how it arises, and the defendant pleads either payment or set-off, the jury must determine whether or not, in the account exhibiting such balance, credit has already been given for the sums covered by the pleas.<sup>5</sup> had paid the sum mentioned in the declaration, which fact was traversed by the replication; the court held that, after proof by defendant that A. B. had paid 78*l.*, the plaintiff, without having new assigned, might give evidence of a balance unpaid beyond that sum.<sup>1</sup> So, where to an action for 100*l.* for work and labour, and on an account stated, the defendant pleaded payment of 100*l.* in satisfaction of the causes of action, the plaintiff was allowed to prove that 96*l.* was due to him for the balance of his account, after giving credit for the 100*l.* he had received; and it was held that the plea was not proved, and that no new assignment was necessary.<sup>2</sup> Under a general plea of payment the defendant is bound to prove that he has paid whatever demand the plaintiff can establish, in the same manner as a plea of leave and licence in trespass will bind him to show a licence co-extensive with all the trespasses which the plaintiff may prove.<sup>3</sup> If, however, while the declaration points at one particular transaction, the plea distinctly applies itself to another, or if the plea narrows the declaration contrary to the intention of the plaintiff, a new assignment will be necessary, according to the rule laid down in Rodgers v. Cus- tance.<sup>4</sup> There the declaration was general, for work and labour; the plea set out that the work was done under a special contract, as to which differences had arisen, and that ultimately it was agreed that a certain sum should be paid by the defendant, which had been paid. The replication took issue on the payment. The plaintiff sought to give evidence of extra work dehors the contract; but the court held that he was not at liberty to do so without new assigning, inasmuch as the plea had narrowed the cause of action, and the plaintiff by his replication had adopted the narrow view of it.

§ 263. Before leaving the subject of payment, it may be expedient to observe, that if a plaintiff, seeking to recover a sum of money, declares in a general form, the defendant, by proving, under a general plea of payment, that a sum equal to the amount specified in the declaration has been liquidated, will not be entitled to a verdict, if the plaintiff can show that, on the entire account, a balance is still due to him; and this, too, whether or not it appears by the particulars that the plaintiff is going for a balance. For instance, where a declaration on a guarantee by defendant for goods to be supplied to A. B. claimed 78*l.* as the value of goods so supplied; and the defendant pleaded that A. B.

§ 264. It seems that the lunacy of a defendant at the time of entering into the contract declared on, may, when this defence is available,<sup>1</sup> be given in evidence under the general issue;<sup>2</sup> though it has been held more than once, in actions on negotiable paper, that the defendant cannot prove his insanity or intoxication, under a plea denying that he made the note, or indorsed the bill declared on, but that these defences must be embodied in special pleas.<sup>3</sup> A defendant cannot set up, under the plea of non-assumpsit, that the written agreement, which forms the subject matter of the action, has, subsequently to its execution by him, been altered in a material manner; at least, if the plaintiff has declared on the agreement in its original form; because the defendant, in raising such a defence, confesses that he made the contract, but avoids it by showing that it was afterwards rendered nugatory by the alteration.<sup>4</sup> In an action brought by a Parliamentary agent,<sup>5</sup> an attorney, or a solicitor for his costs, or by the executor, administrator, or assignee of such person, the plaintiff need not prove that the bill has been delivered more than a calendar<sup>6</sup> month before the commencement of the suit, unless that fact be denied by a special plea.<sup>7</sup>

Act, and to § 2 of the corresponding Irish Act of 12 & 13 V., c. 53, which respectively enact, that "no attorney or solicitor, nor any executor, administrator, or assignee of any attorney or solicitor, shall commence or maintain any action or suit for the recovery of any fees, charges, or disbursements for any business done by such attorney or solicitor, until the expiration of one month after such attorney or solicitor, or executor, administrator, or assignee of such attorney or solicitor, shall have delivered unto the party to be charged therewith, or sent by the post to, or left for, him at his counting-house, office of business, dwelling-house, or last known place of abode, a bill of such fees, charges, and disbursements, and which bill shall either be subscribed with the proper hand of such attorney or solicitor (or in the case of a partnership, by any of the partners, either with his own name, or with the name or style of such partnership), or of the executor, administrator, or assignee of such attorney or solicitor, or be enclosed in, or accompanied by, a letter subscribed in like manner referring to such bill. * * * Provided also, that it shall not in any case be necessary in the first instance for such attorney or solicitor, or the executor, administrator, or assignee of such attorney or solicitor, in proving a compliance with this Act, to prove the contents of the bill he may have delivered, sent, or left, but it shall be sufficient to prove that a bill of fees, charges, or disbursements, subscribed in the manner aforesaid, or enclosed in, or accompanied by, such letter as aforesaid, was delivered, sent, or left in manner aforesaid; but nevertheless, it shall be competent for the other party to show that the bill so delivered, sent, or left, was not such a bill as constituted a bonâ fide compliance with this Act; provided also, that it shall be lawful for any judge of the superior courts of law or of equity to authorise an attorney or solicitor to commence an action or suit for the recovery of his fees, charges or disbursements, against the party chargeable therewith, although one month shall not have expired from the delivery of a bill as aforesaid, on proof to the satisfaction of the said judge that there is probable cause for believing that such party is about to quit England." In construing this enactment it has been held, that the delivery of an unsigned bill of costs which does not on its face charge any one, if accompanied by a letter duly signed by the attorney referring to the bill, and charging the defendant with the amount, is sufficient. *Taylor v. <sup>1</sup> Wright v. Greenroyd, 31 L. J., Q. B. 4.

<sup>3</sup> The precise language of the section is as follows:—"No person shall be entitled to recover any charge in any court of law for any medical or surgical advice, attendance, or for the performance of any operation, or for any medicine which he shall have both prescribed and supplied, unless he shall prove upon the trial that he is registered under this Act." In accordance with these words it has been held, that proof of actual registration at the time of the trial is necessary on the one hand, and sufficient on the other; Haffield v. Mackenzie, 10 Ir. Law R., N. S. 289; Turner v. Reynall, 32 L. J., C. P. 164; but this ruling, though probably correct, would seem to involve two absurdities:—First, a medical man who has retired from practice will be debarred from recovering his outstanding debts; and next, any man who has only just joined the profession, may recover his charges for medicines supplied by him while he was an ignorant student. Where two medical men are in partnership, it seems they may maintain an action for medicines, though only one be registered, Turner v. Reynall, 32 L. J., C. B. 164, per Erle, C. J., and Byles, J.; 14 Com. B., N. S. 328, S. C.

<sup>4</sup> See Morgan v. Ruddock, 4 Dowl. 311, per Patteson, J.; Shearwood v. Hay, and Wills v. Langridge, 5 A. & E. 383; 6 N. & M. 831, S. C.; Wagstaffe v. Sharpe, 3 M. & W. 521, 525. In this last case, Parke, B., thus pronounced the judgment of the court:—"This case has been the subject of much consideration, but we have at length come to the conclusion, that as this is only a court of co-ordinate jurisdiction, we are bound by the decision in the Court of King's Bench, in Shearwood v. Hay and Wills v. Langridge, however great the doubt which some of the members of this court may feel as to the propriety of that decision. The rule will therefore be discharged." In Steavenson v. Oliver, 8 M. & W. 234, there was a special plea.

be raised under the general issue; or in the case of a bill of exchange, a promissory note, or a post-dated cheque payable to bearer on demand,<sup>1</sup> under a plea denying that the defendant either accepted, or drew, or indorsed the bill, or made the note or cheque, as alleged in the declaration.<sup>2</sup>

§ 266. On the other hand, if a statute were simply to enact that a plaintiff should not recover, unless twenty-one days' notice of action were given, or unless the venue were laid in a certain county, the defendant could not object that no sufficient notice had been given, or that the venue was wrongly laid, without pleading such defect as a defence to the action.<sup>3</sup>

§ 266 A. Although a defendant cannot rely on any statute of limitations, without pleading a special plea in the superior courts of common law, or without giving special notice in the county courts,<sup>4</sup> he may, in courts of equity, avail himself of this defence by demurrer, whenever the facts are sufficiently stated in the bill to enable him to raise the objection.<sup>5</sup>

§ 267. The question how far a defendant can avail himself of want of jurisdiction in the court without setting up that defence by means of a special plea, was much discussed in Spooner v. Juddow.<sup>6</sup> In that case the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council decided, that when the facts ousting the jurisdiction are brought by the plaintiff himself to the notice of the court, the mere omission of the defendant to plead

specially will not give the court jurisdiction over the suit, but it will be bound, whatever be the nature of the issues raised, either to nonsuit the plaintiff, or to direct a verdict for the defendant. The court, however, declined to state what would be the law, if the plaintiff were to close his case without betraying the want of jurisdiction, and the defendant were then, under the general issue, to offer evidence of facts with the view of showing that the cause of action was ultra vires.

§ 268. "In all actions upon bills of exchange and promissory notes, the plea of 'non assumpsit' and 'never indebted' shall be inadmissible. In such actions, therefore, a plea in denial must traverse some matter of fact; e. g., the drawing, or making, or indorsing, or accepting, or presenting, or notice of dishonour of the bill or note."<sup>1</sup> This rule is confined to cases where the action is only on the bill or note; and, consequently, if an executor or administrator declares on a bill or note payable to the testator or intestate, and in order to avoid by anticipation the Statute of Limitations, lays an express promise to pay himself, such promise may be denied by a plea of non assumpsit;<sup>2</sup> and the same plea will be admissible if the action be brought against an executor, and the declaration alleges an express promise by him.<sup>3</sup>

§ 269. Under the plea of non accepit or non fecit, the defence does not arise that the bill or note has been lost; and the plaintiff therefore, in the absence of any special plea relying on the loss, may give secondary evidence of the contents of the instrument, after furnishing proof which satisfactorily accounts for its non-production.<sup>4</sup> So, in conformity with the rule of law established by the cases of Hemming v. Trenery, and Davidson v. Cooper,<sup>5</sup> a defendant, under a plea that he did not make the note or accept the bill, cannot set up a defence that the instrument has been subsequently altered,<sup>1</sup> unless the alteration be such as to render the stamp insufficient.<sup>2</sup> Some doubts may be entertained whether this rule would prevail in cases where the plaintiff declares on the instrument as altered; for although this appears to have been the form of the declaration in Parry v. Nicholson,<sup>3</sup> the attention of the court was not drawn to that fact, the alteration being in truth an immaterial one; and Cox v. Coxwell,<sup>4</sup> if still law, decides that, where a bill has been materially altered, and is declared on in its altered form, no special plea is necessary, as the plea of non acceptit amounts to a statement that the defendant did not accept the bill set out in the declaration, which, under the circumstances supposed, would be perfectly true.

§ 270. Where a railway company was sued on a bill of exchange, which had been accepted under its seal by order of the directors, the defendants were allowed, under a traverse of the acceptance, to rely on the law which rendered them incompetent to accept negotiable instruments.<sup>5</sup> So, where a party had authorised the drawer of a bill to accept it generally in his name, and the drawer had affixed an acceptance payable at a particular place, such party was permitted, on being sued by the indorsee, to rest his defence on a traverse of the acceptance, because in this case the court considered that the bill had never existed as an accepted bill, otherwise than as a bill payable at a particular place, and the defendant never did accept such a bill.<sup>6</sup> So, if a defendant gives his acceptance in blank, and consents that the plaintiff shall draw thereon a bill at two months, but the plaintiff, in violation of the purpose contemplated, draws a bill at one month, the defendant may repudiate the bill under a plea of non accepit;<sup>1</sup> and where partners are sued as the acceptors of a bill, one of them, under a plea denying his acceptance, will be entitled to show, either that his co-partner did not accept the bill in the firm name,<sup>2</sup> or at least in the name which, though not strictly accurate, substantially described the firm,<sup>3</sup> or that, within the knowledge of the plaintiff,<sup>4</sup> and perhaps without such knowledge,<sup>5</sup> the name of the firm was fraudulently used by his co-partner, who had no authority to accept the bill for partnership purposes.<sup>6</sup> Under a plea traversing the indorsement of a bill, its delivery with intent to transfer an immediate interest will be put in issue.<sup>7</sup>

of any plea of non est factum, while it admits so much of the deed as is expanded on the record, has no larger effect; and, consequently, if the plaintiff would avail himself of any part of the instrument not specified in the declaration, he must prove the deed in the usual way.<sup>1</sup> Thus if, in debt on bond, conditioned for the performance of an award, or of covenants in an indenture, or of articles of agreement, or the like, the defendant lets judgment go by default, and the plaintiff, having omitted to set out the condition of the bond in the declaration, suggests breaches on the roll, he must prove, not only the condition of the bond, the award, indenture, or articles, and the breaches suggested, but also that the bond mentioned in the suggestion, and produced to the jury, is that on which the action is brought.<sup>2</sup>

§ 271 A. Much subtle reasoning has of late years been expended in Westminster Hall, with a view of determining the effect of such pleas as non concessit, non feoffavit, non dedit, non demisit, ne granta pas, and the like; but hitherto the learned efforts of the judges to elucidate this matter have met only with partial success. The following propositions are, therefore, hazarded with some misgivings as to their entire accuracy. First, when a pleading states a title to demise or grant in the form of a positive averment, so as to afford an opportunity to the opposite party to traverse this allegation, a mere traverse of the demise or grant admits the title, and only puts in issue the due execution of the deed.<sup>3</sup> Secondly, the same result follows when a derivative title is averred, though an actual seisin in fee at the time of the grant be not alleged; for in such case, in the absence of any traverse of the previous steps of the title, they are admitted, and the law presumes that the interest of the grantor, once alleged to have existed, was continuing in full force at the time of the grant.<sup>4</sup>

Thirdly, when the title of the grantor is not alleged in the pleading at all, or is not so alleged as to be traversable, the plea of non concessit puts in issue the title, as well as the fact of the grant.<sup>1</sup> Fourthly, when the grant relied upon is one from the Crown under the great seal, the plea of non concessit generally operates—not as a denial of the letters patent, for these being matters of record are confessed,<sup>2</sup>—but as a traverse of the legal effect of them as stated by the plaintiff. In an action, therefore, for the infringement of a patent, such a plea will probably raise the question whether that which the plaintiff claims is contained in the grant,<sup>3</sup> or, in other words, whether the title of the grant correctly describes the invention.<sup>4</sup> Under this plea, too, the validity of the grant may possibly be impeached, on the ground that the invention was not the proper subject-matter of a patent, or even that it was not new,<sup>5</sup> and some of the judges have gone so far as to assert, that “non concessit” will put in issue all the surrounding circumstances of a grant, which are not stated in the declaration with sufficient precision to be separately traversed.<sup>6</sup> But such a plea will not, as it seems, impose upon the plaintiff the burthen of showing that the Crown had power to grant, until evidence has been given on the other side to impeach the patent.<sup>7</sup> In an action for the breach of a contract to pay the stamp duties on a patent, which had been assigned by the plaintiff to the defendant, the plea of “non concessit,” in the absence of fraud, or of any warranty that the invention was new, or was a manufacture within the statute of James, was held to put in issue, not the validity of the letters patent, but merely the fact of her Majesty having made the grant.<sup>1</sup> In another action for the infringement of a patent, where the plaintiff sued as assignee of the inventor, a plea denying that the letters patent had been duly assigned, as alleged, was held to put in issue, not merely the execution of the indenture of assignment, but the plaintiff's title under the deed; and as the assignment had not been registered in pursuance of the Act of 15 & 16 V., c. 83, § 35, a verdict was entered for the defendant upon the plea.<sup>2</sup> It was further urged in this case on behalf of the plaintiff, that as the want of registration had not been specifically mentioned in the notice of objections delivered with the pleas, the defendant was precluded from making that point at the trial; but the court rejected this argument<sup>3</sup> on the two-fold ground, that the statutory provisions with regard to notices<sup>4</sup> are confined to objections affecting the validity of the letters patent, and that, at any rate, the plaintiff ought to have gone before a judge to require the notice to be amended, and could not, when the cause was being heard, except to the generality of the objections.<sup>5</sup>

§ 272. It is not very easy to determine what is really put in issue by the plea of "no award;" but the somewhat conflicting decisions on this subject seem to indicate,—first, that if such a plea be pleaded to an action upon a bond with a condition to abide by an award, it means that there was no valid award; next, that if it be pleaded to an ordinary action on an award, it raises no issue as to any irregularity which may render the award voidable, but it simply denies the fact that the award was made, and it enables the defendant to show that it was void ab initio; and lastly, that if it be pleaded to a declaration which avers that an award was made of and concerning the premises, it puts in issue the fact of an award being made respecting all the matters referred, but it does not question in other respects the validity of the instrument.<sup>6</sup>

§ 273. The rules of 1853 further provide, that, "the plea of 'nil debet' shall not be allowed in any action;"<sup>1</sup> but as these rules, like the former ones, do not apply to replications, a plaintiff may still, in answering a plea of set-off, reply that he was not nor is indebted to the defendant, and under such replication may prove payment, though this proof would be inadmissible on a replication that the plaintiff never was indebted in manner and form as in the plea alleged.<sup>2</sup> The plaintiff may also object, under a replication of nil debet to a plea of set-off, that the debt sought to be set off is due not from himself alone, but from himself and a third party.<sup>3</sup>

right specially on the record.<sup>1</sup> Neither can he avail himself of any such defences under a plea of not possessed,<sup>2</sup> because this plea merely raises the question, whether the plaintiff has such a property in the goods as will enable him to maintain his action, and this he may have, though he is only entitled to a share of the goods,<sup>3</sup> or has no right to the immediate possession.<sup>4</sup> So, under a plea denying that the goods are the property of the plaintiff, the defendant cannot object that other persons are co-tenants with the plaintiff, and are not joined in the action.<sup>5</sup>

§ 275. "In actions for torts, the plea of not guilty shall operate as a denial only of the breach of duty, or wrongful act alleged to have been committed by the defendant, and not of the facts stated in the inducement; and no other defence than such denial shall be admissible under that plea; all other pleas in denial shall take issue on some particular matter of fact alleged in the declaration. Ex. gr. In an action for a nuisance to the occupation of a house, by carrying on an offensive trade, the plea of not guilty will operate as a denial only that the defendant carried on the alleged trade in such a way as to be a nuisance to the occupation of the house, and will not operate as a denial of the plaintiff's occupation of the house. In actions against a carrier, the plea of not guilty will operate as a denial of the loss or damage, but not of the receipt of the goods by the defendant as a carrier for hire, or of the purpose for which they were received."<sup>1</sup>

§ 276. In considering the effect of the plea of not guilty as an admission of the facts stated by way of inducement, it matters not in what part of the declaration these facts are introduced, provided only that they be material to the maintenance of the action.<sup>2</sup> By the term inducement is meant that part of a declaration which contains a statement of the facts out of which the charge arises, or which are necessary or useful to make that charge intelligible.<sup>3</sup> In short, it includes all the allegations, which do not involve the special charge alleged against the defendant;<sup>4</sup> and although it is usual with good pleaders to introduce these facts as a preliminary statement, since by so doing the whole charge is rendered more perspicuous, yet, the pleading will be equally good in law, and the plea of not guilty will have precisely the same operation, though the inducement be inserted at the very end of the declaration, or be interwoven, by way of parenthesis, with the charge itself;<sup>5</sup> for it will then, as Mr. Baron Parke has expressed it, "be simply inducement put in the wrong place."<sup>6</sup>

§ 277. In accordance with the examples given by the judges in the rule as above stated, it has been held, that, in an action for

diverting water, the plea of not guilty puts in issue only the fact of diversion, and admits the plaintiff's right to the use of the stream as described in the declaration.<sup>1</sup> So, in an action for the infringement of a patent, the general issue denies only the fact of the infringement, which must be determined by the acts, irrespective of the intentions, of the defendant.<sup>2</sup> So, in an action for tort against a carrier for not safely conveying goods, the defendant, under the plea of not guilty, cannot set up that the damage was occasioned by the plaintiff himself, either by misrepresenting the weight of the goods, or by unskilfully packing them in the defendant's van; but if he relies on these facts as a defence, he must plead that he was induced by the plaintiff's misrepresentation to take a greater load than the van could safely carry, and must deny the acceptance of the goods for the purpose alleged.<sup>3</sup> So, in case against a sheriff, either for not seizing goods and returning nulla bona, or for not arresting a party and returning non est inventus, the plea of not guilty will simply put in issue the not having taken in execution the goods or the body, and the fact of having made the return; and if the sheriff's defence be that he was directed by the plaintiff not to execute the writ at a time when he might have done so, this being affirmative matter in excuse must be specially pleaded, and cannot be proved either under the general issue, or under a plea denying that he could have executed the writ; and this, too, though the declaration should allege that he was often requested to discharge his duty.<sup>4</sup> So, where a declaration stated that the defendant, being possessed of a horse and cart, negligently drove against the plaintiff's horse, the plea of not guilty was held to admit that the defendant was the person driving, and that the cart and horse were his;<sup>5</sup> and, in like manner, it has several times been determined, that, in an action against a defendant, either for negligent driving by his servant, or for the carelessness of his servants in the management of his ship, the plea of the general issue admits the defendant's possession, and that the persons causing the damage were his servants, and merely puts in issue the fact of negligence or mismanagement.<sup>1</sup> So, in an action for seducing the daughter of the plaintiff, she being his servant at the time of the seduction, the defendant, by limiting his pleading to the general issue, will, as it seems, be held to admit that the relationship of master and servant subsisted as alleged in the declaration;<sup>2</sup> but still the plaintiff will be bound under that plea to establish, not only the fact of seduction, but the consequent loss of service, without proof of which the action cannot be maintained.<sup>3</sup>

§ 278. Again, in an action against a witness for disobeying a subpoena, where the declaration stated that the plaintiff had a good cause of action in the original suit, and the pleas were not guilty, leave and licence, and that the plaintiff could have proceeded to trial without the testimony of the defendant, it was held, that on these pleadings, the record of the previous action, which had been put in evidence by the plaintiff, could not be referred to by the defendant for the purpose of showing that it contained no ground of action; still less could he produce evidence himself in order to establish that negative fact. Had he wished to deny that the plaintiff had a good cause of action in the original suit, he should have traversed the allegation to that effect.<sup>4</sup>

§ 279. Though the plea of not guilty admits the truth of the facts stated by way of inducement, its effect is not confined to a denial of the mere act charged to have been committed, but it also puts in issue all those circumstances stated in the declaration, which give it a tortious character and constitute the injury, and which do not amount to a recital of the plaintiff's title or right, or of any preliminary proceeding.<sup>1</sup> Thus, in an action for maliciously, and without probable cause, either indicting the plaintiff,<sup>2</sup> or refusing to accept a tender of debt and costs, for which the plaintiff was in execution at the defendant's suit,<sup>3</sup> or the like, the plea of not guilty puts in issue the fact of prosecution, refusal, &c.,<sup>4</sup> as also the malice,<sup>5</sup> and the want of probable cause. So, in an action for keeping a mischievous dog, which has bitten the plaintiff, or destroyed his fowls, the plea of not guilty puts in issue the scienter, as well as the dog's propensity;<sup>6</sup> for in such case the defendant's knowledge of the mischievous habits of the dog is no inducement, but a substantial part of the cause of action.<sup>7</sup> So, in an action for a nuisance, the plaintiff must prove, under not guilty, that a nuisance exists, and that the defendant has caused it.<sup>8</sup> So, also, in an action for slander or libel, the defence of privileged communication,<sup>1</sup> or, in other words, of publication on some lawful occasion, as it goes to the very root of the matter of complaint, need not be specially pleaded, but will be available under the general issue;<sup>2</sup> and in an action of tort for deceit in the warranty of a horse, not guilty puts in issue both the warranty and the unsoundness; and, in short, the whole declaration, excepting, perhaps, the bargain and sale, which have been held to be matters of inducement.<sup>3</sup> Whether this exception can be sustained may well admit of a doubt, since, unless there was a sale, the deceit would be of no consequence;<sup>4</sup> and on this ground it has been decided, that, in an action for a fraudulent representation on the sale of a commission business, the plaintiff, under the plea of not guilty, was bound to prove, not only that the representation was made, and that the defendant knew it to be false, but also the fact of the sale.<sup>5</sup>

the part of the plaintiff cannot be very easily defined, as it must necessarily vary according to the circumstances of each case; but thus much is clear, that the term is a relative one, to be construed in connection with the plaintiff's situation; and, therefore, if he be a child or a person of weak intellect, conduct, which in a grown man of sense would be regarded as careless, or even blameable, may in his case be deemed insufficient to warrant a verdict for the defendant.<sup>1</sup> There is also no doubt in the present day, though the law has sometimes been less strictly laid down,<sup>2</sup> that, unless the defendant can prove the absence of that degree of care which might reasonably be expected from a person in the plaintiff's position, and the exercise of which would have wholly avoided the accident, he cannot succeed in his defence, if he has himself acted with any degree of negligence;<sup>3</sup> though if he can furnish such proof he will succeed, notwithstanding he may have been guilty of careless, or, perhaps, even of illegal conduct.<sup>4</sup>

guilty of negligence, and thereby causes injury to another, has no right to say, "Part of that mischief would not have arisen if you yourself had not been guilty of some negligence ;" for where the negligence of the party injured has not in any way contributed to the immediate cause of the accident, it cannot be set up as an answer to the action. The jury, in such a case, have no right to take the consequences, and to divide them in proportion, according to the negligence of the one or the other party.<sup>1</sup>

nouncing judgment, observed :—"The new rules do not exactly provide for actions of tort, where the wrong is not direct, and of such a nature as necessarily to injure the plaintiff in the eye of the law, but only does so, if some special damage is brought upon him. One of the examples of the effect of pleading not guilty is the action for an escape, where that plea is declared to 'operate as a denial of the neglect or default of the sheriff or his officers, but not of the debt, judgment, or preliminary proceedings,' nothing being said as to the injurious result."<sup>1</sup> In actions for malicious arrest or prosecution, for maliciously proceeding to outlawry, for maliciously petitioning for adjudication in bankruptcy, and the like, the plea of not guilty admits the determination of the proceedings as averred in the declaration, such determination being, in strictness, no part of the defendant's tortious conduct, and being at best but an element in proving want of probable cause.<sup>2</sup>

§ 283. Before leaving the subject of the general issue in actions on the case, it will be convenient to draw attention to a passage in the Common Law Procedure Act of 1852,<sup>3</sup> which is calculated to mislead. After reciting that "certain causes of action may be considered to partake of the character both of breaches of contract and of wrongs,"—that "doubts may arise as to the form of pleas in such actions,"—and that "it is expedient to preclude such doubts," the statute proceeds, in § 74, to enact, that, "any plea which shall be good in substance, shall not be objectionable on the ground of its treating the declaration either as framed for a breach of contract, or for a wrong." It may naturally be inferred from this language, that if an action be brought against a carrier for the loss of a parcel, and the declaration be so framed as not clearly to show whether the plaintiff is complaining of a breach of contract or of a tort, the defendant will be equally safe in pleading non assumpsit or not guilty, and that the pleas, though differing in form, will be regarded as substantially setting up the same defence. The fact, however, is quite otherwise; for while the plea of non assumpsit will put in issue the promise and admit the breach, the plea of not guilty will admit the bailment and deny the breach. This is obviously a result never contemplated by the framer of the clause.

§ 284. The rules of 1853 further provide with respect to actions for torts, that "all matters in confession and avoidance shall be pleaded specially, as in actions on contract."<sup>1</sup> This comprehensive language renders it needless to introduce here any separate observations respecting what special pleas are necessary in actions for torts, since by turning to what has been stated before, while treating of actions on contract,<sup>2</sup> it will be seen how the rules bear upon this subject.

§ 285. "In actions for trespass to land, the plea of not guilty shall operate as a denial that the defendant committed the trespass alleged in the place mentioned, but not as a denial of the plaintiff's possession or right of possession of that place, which, if intended to be denied, must be traversed specially."<sup>3</sup>

§ 286. "In actions for taking, damaging, or converting the plaintiff's goods, the plea of not guilty shall operate as a denial of the defendant having committed the wrong alleged, by taking, damaging, or converting the goods mentioned, but not of the plaintiff's property therein."<sup>4</sup> It will be convenient to discuss the effect of this rule, first, as it applies to actions for trespass to personal property, and next, as it relates to actions of trover. In the first class of cases, it seems clear that a defendant cannot, under the general issue, give in evidence a lien, or show that he had any other special property in the goods seized, or damaged; but if he intends to rely on any such defence, he must either

plead specially, or, perhaps more correctly, traverse the plaintiff's possession.<sup>1</sup> In one case of trespass for seizing furniture, where the evidence established the seizure in a stranger's house, Mr. Justice Coleridge is reported to have held, that, without some proof connecting the plaintiff with the stranger or the goods, the defendant would be entitled to a verdict on his plea of not guilty;<sup>2</sup> but this dictum, if indeed it was ever pronounced, seems obviously opposed to the express language of the rule stated above, and is, moreover, at variance with the principle of law laid down in Dunford v. Trattles<sup>3</sup> by the Court of Exchequer. The case, therefore, is here cited merely in order to show that it must not be considered as an authority. Again, it is undoubted law that, in an action of tort for taking the plaintiff's goods, the defendant cannot, under the general issue, prove in mitigation of damages a repayment by him, after action brought, of the money produced by the sale of the goods.<sup>4</sup> Whether, if such an action be brought against an attorney, and it be proved that he delivered a fieri facias to the sheriff who thereupon took the goods, the defendant will be entitled, under the general issue, to give in evidence a judgment on which the fieri facias issued, is a point not yet decided;<sup>5</sup> but the better opinion seems to be, that such evidence would not be admissible without being specially pleaded. Perhaps, however, the attorney, under the plea of not guilty, might show that, though to a certain extent he had interfered in the transaction, his conduct was not such as to involve responsibility. For instance, he would probably be allowed to prove, that he had merely handed over the writ to the sheriff's officer, with no more concurrence than that of a postman who conveys a letter.<sup>6</sup>

§ 287. In applying the rule just cited to actions of trover, it must be recollected, that the term conversion means a tortious act, by which the defendant deprives the plaintiff of his goods. The plea of not guilty, therefore, puts in issue, not merely the fact that the plaintiff has been deprived of his goods by the defendant, but all the circumstances which make that deprivation wrongful,<sup>1</sup> excepting only, that as it admits the plaintiff's title, it must be coupled with the plea of not possessed, whenever the defence set up is inconsistent with the existence of such title.<sup>2</sup> Thus, under the general issue alone the defendant cannot rely on the fact, that the chattel in question had been sold or given to him by the plaintiff, though the only evidence of conversion is a demand and refusal;<sup>3</sup> neither, it seems, is such a defence as a lien, a pledge, or the like admissible under this plea;<sup>4</sup> but the defendant must put on the record the plea of not possessed, which denies the plaintiff's right to the immediate possession of the goods, as well as his property in them.<sup>5</sup>

§ 288. As the conversion, on which an action of trover is founded, is always a wrongful act, it cannot be confessed and avoided by any matter in excuse, for if the circumstanees relied on show that the sale or detention of the chattel was lawful, they will disclose no conversion in law.<sup>6</sup> In fact, the pleas of not guilty and not possessed together now make up the old plea of not guilty; and whatever might be given in evidence under that plea, before the rules of 1834, may be now proved under one

§ 289. The rules of 1853 contain no special provision in regard to the plea of not guilty in actions for assault, or other injury to the person. Nor was it necessary that they should, inasmuch as before they were promulgated, that plea merely denied that the defendant did the act complained of, and all matters in confession and avoidance, or in justification or discharge, were, as they still are, required to be specially pleaded.<sup>9</sup> Some doubts have existed as to the effect of not guilty in actions of trespass which arise out of collisions; but it seems now pretty generally understood that, on the one hand, the defendant under this plea may show either that the plaintiff drove against him instead of his driving against the plaintiff,<sup>1</sup> or that his horse was frightened and rendered ungovernable by the act of a third person,<sup>2</sup> or by the act of God, as by thunder or lightning, or, in short, that the accident had resulted entirely from a superior agency;<sup>3</sup> but, on the other hand, he cannot prove that the injury done by him was unintentional or merely accidental, or was even occasioned by the negligence of the plaintiff, because his act, being primâ facie unjustifiable, requires an excuse to be shown by a special plea.<sup>4</sup> By contrasting what is here said with the remarks before made<sup>5</sup> on the effect of not guilty in case for negligence, the distinction between the general issue, as pleaded to one or other of the two forms of action, trespass and case, will be at once apparent.<sup>6</sup>

§ 290. The effect of not guilty in actions of trespass may in general be ascertained with tolerable certainty, if the doctrine laid down by Lord Mansfield, that "no man is bound to justify who is not primâ facie a trespasser,"<sup>7</sup> be used as a test. Thus, a pound-keeper, who has had nothing to do with the seizure of the plaintiff's cattle, but who, without exceeding his duty or assenting to the original trespass, has merely impounded the cattle when brought to him, may establish a successful defence on the plea of not guilty; though a gaoler, who has a prisoner in custody, must justify, because he is primâ facie guilty of an imprisonment, and cannot have acted legally without a warrant.<sup>8</sup> It seems, too, that a judge of the superior courts, and perhaps any judge of a court of record,<sup>1</sup> who in his judicial capacity commits a man for a contempt, may, under not guilty, defend an action of trespass,<sup>2</sup> though a ministerial or magisterial officer would probably be bound, in an action for false imprisonment, to place on the record a special plea.<sup>3</sup> If an action of tort be brought by a husband and wife for an assault committed on the wife, the plea of not guilty will not put in issue the marriage;<sup>4</sup> but it may be a question of some doubt, whether, if such an action be brought against husband and wife for an assault committed by her, the man may not dispute the marriage under the general issue.

§ 291. Having thus discussed the general effect of pleading not guilty in actions of tort, it may next be observed, that in actions for taking, damaging, or converting the plaintiff's goods, a plea denying that they are the plaintiff's, puts in issue not only the possession of the goods, but the property in them.<sup>5</sup> So, in an action for trespass to land, a traverse of the plaintiff's allegation that the close is his close, puts in issue his right to possession, as well as his actual possession; and consequently, under such a plea, the defendant may show title either in himself or in some other person, under whose authority he claims to have acted.<sup>6</sup>

§ 292. The rules further provide that, "in actions for trespass to land, the close or place in which, &c., must be designated in the declaration by name or abutments, or other description;

in failure whereof the plaintiff may be ordered to amend, with costs, or give such particulars as the court or judge may think reasonable.”<sup>1</sup> The object of this rule was to avoid the ambiguity that would arise if the name of the parish alone were given, and thus to save the defendant from the necessity of pleading liberum tenementum,<sup>2</sup> and the plaintiff from the necessity of a new assignment.<sup>3</sup> A description by two abutments only will be sufficient to satisfy the rule in the first instance,<sup>4</sup> though if the words “abutting towards” are used instead of “abutting upon,” the declaration will be open to objection;<sup>5</sup> and in all cases a judge, on application, will order a better description to be given, if the defendant can show that any real ambiguity exists, and that he cannot distinctly see what close is indicated by the declaration.<sup>6</sup> This rule is here noticed for the purpose of observing, that, if the defendant, instead of objecting to the description of the close, sets up a title in himself to the locus in quo, or otherwise pleads a justification, he will be considered as knowing what close is meant by the plaintiff, and cannot afterwards deny the correctness of the designation; and, consequently, the plaintiff will succeed, on proof of a trespass committed in a close in his possession, to which the description applies with tolerable accuracy,<sup>7</sup> though the defendant has another close, which answers to the same description.<sup>8</sup> It matters not in the application of this rule, whether the spot be designated by name or by abutments.<sup>9</sup> If, indeed, the plaintiff and defendant have separate parts of one entire close, and the former brings an action against the latter for trespassing on his close, describing it either by name or by metes and bounds, the defendant, under a plea that the close is his soil and freehold, is not bound to prove a title to the whole close, but he will succeed if he establishes a title to that part of the close on which all the trespasses have been committed. "By this plea," said Mr. Baron Alderson, in pronouncing the judgment of the court in Smith v. Royston, "the defendant undertakes to prove two propositions :—first, that some part of the described close belongs to him ; and secondly, that it is on this part of the close that all the acts complained of have been done. If he does this, he is entitled to the verdict ; if not, the plaintiff must succeed."<sup>1</sup>

§ 293. We have been hitherto discussing the operation of the pleading rules in limiting and defining the amount of evidence admissible under the general issue in ordinary cases ; but it must be carefully borne in mind, that the numerous class of cases, in which the defendant is expressly empowered by statute to plead the general issue, and to give special matter in evidence under it, is not affected by these rules further than this, that the party who intends so to plead must "insert in the margin of the plea the words 'By Statute,' together with the year or years of the reign in which the Act or Acts of Parliament upon which he relies for that purpose were passed, and also the chapter and section of each of such Acts, and shall specify whether such Acts are public or otherwise, otherwise such plea shall be taken not to have been pleaded by virtue of any Act of Parliament ; and such memorandum shall be inserted in the margin of the issue, and of the Nisi Prius Record."<sup>2</sup>

§ 294. It is extremely difficult to lay down as an abstract proposition of law, what shall amount to an acting in pursuance of a statute, or in execution of an office, so as to entitle a defendant to give special matter in evidence under the general issue, to rely on

§ 295. It is now finally determined that, under the plea of not guilty by statute, the defendant may set up any defence that could be specially pleaded, whether it be founded wholly or partly on the statute, or be merely sustainable at common law.<sup>2</sup> Thus, in an action for an excessive distress, such a plea puts in issue, not only the matter of justification, but the tenancy and the ownership of the goods ;<sup>3</sup> and if a plaintiff sues as administrator, the defendant, who has thus pleaded, may dispute his title to that character.<sup>4</sup> The natural result of this rule is, that the courts will not, in general, allow the defendant to plead the general issue by statute in connexion with special pleas ; because, by so doing, he would plead the same matter twice over, and thus contravene the salutary rule which—except when the court for some special reason shall otherwise order—forbids the use of several “pleas, replications, or subsequent pleadings, founded on the same ground of answer or defence.”<sup>5</sup> It seems, however, that if a reasonable doubt exists as to whether the defendant, in regard to the particular act complained of, is entitled to plead “not guilty by statute,” the court will sometimes relax the rule, and allow him to plead specially in addition to that plea, on the ground that rules should not be made for very nice cases, and that the Acts, which confer this right on defendants, should be liberally and benignantly expounded.<sup>6</sup>

§ 296. The statutes enabling persons, who act in pursuance thereof, or otherwise in execution of their offices, to plead the general issue, and to give special matter in evidence under such plea, are still extremely numerous, although the effect of modern legislation has been greatly to reduce their number. For instance, by the Act of 5 & 6 V., c. 97, § 3, so much of any clause or provision in any Act commonly called Public local and personal, or Local and personal, or in any Act of a local and personal nature,<sup>1</sup> whereby any party was entitled, before the 10th of August, 1842, to give special matter in evidence under the general issue, is repealed. The Irish Common Law Procedure Act of 1853<sup>2</sup> also repeals, by § 69, "so much of any Act of Parliament as entitles or permits any person to plead the general issue only, and to give special matter in evidence without pleading the same." Unfortunately a similar clause is not to be found in either of the English Common Law Procedure Acts; and the pleader is consequently still left to discover, as best he may, in what cases the defendant may or may not avail himself of the plea of the general issue by statute. .

§ 297. It is not intended here to furnish a list of the statutes which authorise such pleas, but among them will be found the Acts passed in 1861 for consolidating the law relating to larceny, malicious injuries, and coin.<sup>3</sup> In every action, too, which is brought against a justice of the peace, "for anything done by him in the execution of his office," the defendant, besides enjoying many other privileges,<sup>4</sup> is allowed to plead the general issue, and "to give any special matter of defence, excuse, or justification, in evidence under such plea."<sup>5</sup> He may even prove under the

§ 298. The rule confining evidence to the points in issue, not only precludes the litigant parties from proving any facts not distinctly controverted by the pleadings, but it limits the mode of proving even the issues themselves. Thus,<sup>3</sup> it excludes all evidence of collateral facts, which are incapable of affording any reasonable presumption as to the principal matters in dispute;

and the reason is, that such evidence tends needlessly to consume the public time, to draw away the minds of the jurors from the points in issue, and to excite prejudice and mislead; moreover, the adverse party, having had no notice of such evidence, is not prepared to rebut it. The due application of this rule will occasionally tax to the utmost the firmness and discrimination of the judge; so that while he shall reject, as too remote, every fact which merely furnishes a fanciful analogy or conjectural inference, he may admit as relevant the evidence of all those matters which shed a real, though perhaps an indirect and feeble, light on the question in issue. And here it will generally be found that the circumstances of the parties to the suit, and the position in which they stood<sup>1</sup> when the matter in controversy occurred, are proper subjects of evidence; and indeed, the change in the law enabling parties to give testimony for themselves, has rendered this proof of "surrounding circumstances" still more important than it was in former times.<sup>2</sup> In accordance with this doctrine it has been properly held that, in an action for money lent, the poverty of the alleged lender was a very relevant fact, the evidence of which was admissible for the purpose of disproving the loan.<sup>3</sup>

§ 298 A. The most important class of facts which are excluded on the ground of irrelevancy, are the acts and declarations, either of strangers, or of one of the parties to the suit in his dealings with strangers. These, which in the technical language of the law are denominated res inter alios actæ, it would be manifestly unjust to admit, since the conduct of one man under certain circumstances, or towards certain individuals, varying as it will necessarily do according to the motives which influence him, the qualities he possesses, and his knowledge of the character of those with whom he is dealing, can never afford a safe criterion by which to judge of the behaviour of another man similarly situated, or of the same man towards other persons.

§ 299. The application and extent of this rule will be best understood by referring to a few of the leading decisions on the subject. In an action of trover brought against the creditor of a bankrupt by the assignees, the goods in dispute were sought to be recovered on the ground that, before they came into the hands of the defendant, acts of bankruptcy had been committed; and the plaintiffs endeavoured to prove these acts by showing the prior delivery of other goods to various creditors, who, after the fiat had issued, had returned them to the assignees; but the court was of opinion that the conduct of these creditors in returning the goods could not affect the title of the defendant. The only way in which their conduct bore upon the case, was by showing their conviction that they had received the goods under circumstances which did not entitle them to keep possession; and as their opinions, expressed after the fiat, could not have been received, evidence of their acts, adduced for the purpose of raising an inference respecting the previous intentions, either of themselves or of the bankrupt, was equally inadmissible.<sup>1</sup> So, proof of the usage of a particular estate, however extensive it may be, is inadmissible for the purpose of importing into the lease of a farm on that estate some special stipulations relative to the mode of cultivation.<sup>2</sup> So, where the question between landlord and tenant was, whether the rent was payable quarterly or half-yearly, evidence of the mode in which other tenants of the same landlord paid their rent was rejected;<sup>3</sup> and where it was necessary for a brewer to prove that he had supplied a publican with good beer, other publicans were not allowed to show that, during the same period as the dealing in question, he had furnished them with beer of an excellent quality, for a man may deal well with some of his customers, though not with others.<sup>4</sup> In another case, where the point in issue was whether the plaintiff's scholars were ill fed, a witness was not allowed to be asked as to the comparative quality of the provisions supplied by the plaintiff, with those consumed in a particular school, where the witness was educated, though evidence would be admissible to show the general treatment of boys at schools.<sup>1</sup> Again, in an action of assumpsit against a married woman, where the issue was in part, whether the defendant had represented herself to the plaintiff as a feme sole, and whether he had dealt with her believing her to be such, it was held that evidence of the defendant's dealings with other tradesmen could only be admissible, if at all, on the ground that she had held herself out to them as a single woman, in such a manner as to reach the plaintiff's ears.<sup>2</sup> So, also, in an action brought by the indorsee against the acceptor of a bill, where the defence was that the acceptance was a forgery, evidence that a collection of bills, on which the defendant's acceptance was forged, had been in the plaintiff's possession, and that some of them had been circulated by him, was rejected, as no distinct proof was given that the bill in question had ever formed part of that collection.<sup>3</sup>

§ 300. These last words deserve special notice, since they point out an exception to the rule under discussion, in favour of the admissibility of facts which, though collateral, are proved to be connected by some general link with the matter in issue. This exception has been recognised in numerous cases. Thus, no rule is better established, or more frequently acted upon, than that which precludes the customs of one manor from being given in evidence to prove the customs of another; because, as each manor may have customs peculiar to itself, to admit the peculiar customs of another manor in order to show the customs of the manor in question, would be a very false guide for the purpose of leading to any sound conclusion, and would, in fact, put an end to all question as to the peculiar customs in particular manors, by throwing them open to the customs of all surrounding manors.<sup>1</sup> Still, such customs become evidence the moment that a foundation has been laid for their admission, by clear proof of a sufficient connexion between the two manors. The mere fact, indeed, that the two lie within the same parish and leet, will not be sufficient; nor even that the one was a subinfeudation of the other; at least, unless it be clearly shown that they were separated after the time of legal memory, since otherwise they may have had different immemorial customs.<sup>2</sup> If, however, it can be satisfactorily proved that the customs in the two manors are identical, or that the one was derived from the other after the time of Richard the First, then the customs of each will respectively become evidence;<sup>3</sup> and so, also, if the customs in question be a particular incident of the general tenure which is proved to be common to the two manors, evidence may be given of what the custom of the one is as to that tenure, for the purpose of showing what is the custom of the other as to the same.<sup>4</sup> For instance, prove in a particular manor that borough English or gavelkind prevails, and then you may see from other manors what are the peculiarities of these tenures.<sup>5</sup>

§ 301. The manors on the border between England and Scotland,<sup>6</sup> and those in the mining districts of Derbyshire and Cornwall, will furnish other examples of the application of this rule; since, throughout the former, a particular species of tenure, called tenant-right, and in the latter, particular customs, as to the rights of the miners and the rights to the minerals, prevail; and consequently, if in one of the manors no example can be adduced of what is the custom in any particular case, it is only reasonable that, in order to explain the nature of the tenure or right in question, which is not confined to a single manor, but prevails equally in a great number, evidence should be admissible to show what is the general usage with respect to that tenure or right.<sup>1</sup> Thus, where in each of several manors belonging to the same lord, and forming part of the same district, a particular class of tenants called assessional tenants held the farms, to whom their tenements were granted by similar words, evidence of the rights enjoyed by those tenants in one manor was received, to show the extent of their rights in another.<sup>2</sup> This last case, indeed, raised no question as to manorial title; for had there been no manor at all, precisely the same evidence would have been admissible, provided the land had been all held under the assessional tenure.<sup>3</sup>

§ 302. Again, upon a question whether the Crown, in right of the Duchy of Lancaster, had the exclusive privilege, under the original charter granted to Henry Duke of Lancaster in the year 1349, of appointing a coroner within the honour of Pontefract, evidence of appointments of coroners, and of their acting, in other parts of the duchy, out of the honour of Pontefract, was held admissible.<sup>4</sup> On the same principle, the mode of conducting a particular branch of trade in one place has been proved, by showing the manner in which the same trade is carried on in another place;<sup>5</sup> and where the dispute at the trial was as to the exact line of boundary between the manors of Wakefield and Rochdale, which the plaintiff contended was the ridge of a mountain, whence the waters descended in opposite directions, he was allowed to prove, in support of this view, that the ridge of the same range of hills separated the manor of Rochdale from another manor which adjoined the manor of Wakefield; because, this being a natural boundary, which was equally suitable in both cases, it was highly improbable that it should have been varied.<sup>1</sup>

§ 303. In like manner it has been held, upon a question whether a slip of waste land, lying between the highway and the enclosed lands of the plaintiff, belonged to him, or to the lord of the manor, that the lord might give evidence of acts of ownership on other parts of the waste land between the same road and the enclosures of other persons, although at the distance of two miles from the spot in dispute, and although the continuity of the waste was interrupted for the space of some sixty or seventy yards, by the intervention of a bridge and some old houses.<sup>2</sup> So, where, in trespass, the object of the plaintiff was to prove himself the owner of the entire bed of a river flowing between his land and that of the defendant, and thus to rebut the presumption that each party was entitled ad medium filum aquæ,<sup>3</sup> he was allowed to give in evidence acts of ownership exercised by himself upon the bed and banks of the river on the defendant's side, lower down the stream, where it flowed between the plaintiff's land and the farm of a third party, adjoining the defendant's property; as also repairs which he had done, beyond the limits of the defendant's land, to a fence which, dividing that and other land from the river, ran along the side of the stream for a considerable distance, till it came opposite to the extremity of the plaintiff's property on the other side.<sup>4</sup>

<sup>4</sup> Jones v. Williams, 2 M. & W. 326. The observations of Parke, B., in this case are so pertinent, that no apology is necessary for introducing them here at length. "I am also of opinion that this case ought to go down to a new trial, because I think the evidence offered of acts in another part of one continuous hedge, and in the whole bed of the river, adjoining the plaintiff's land, was admissible in evidence, on the ground that they are such acts as might reasonably lead to the inference that the entire hedge and bed of the river, and, consequently, the part in dispute, belonged to the plaintiff.

§ 304. The same principle applies with increased force to the case of mines, because it is not possible that the lessees of minerals, lying under an extensive district, can enter upon, and take actual possession of, every part of that which forms the subject of demise; and, moreover, the mode of occupying a mine cannot afford the same evidence of possession as the occupation of the surface, the produce of which is from time to time consumed and renewed. When one is taken, it is gone for ever. Evidence, therefore, of working under one part of the surface is, under a demise of all mines and minerals lying beneath a large

Ownership may be proved by proof of possession, and that can be shown by acts of enjoyment of the land itself; but it is impossible, in the nature of things to confine the evidence to the very precise spot on which the alleged trespass may have been committed; evidence may be given of acts done on other parts, provided there is such a common character of locality between those parts and the spot in question, as would raise a reasonable inference in the minds of the jury, that the place in dispute belonged to the plaintiff if the other parts did. In ordinary cases, to prove his title to a close, the claimant may give in evidence acts of ownership in any part of the same enclosure; for the ownership of one part causes a reasonable inference that the other belongs to the same person; though it by no means follows as a necessary consequence, for different persons may have balks of land in the same enclosure; but this is a fact to be submitted to the jury. So, I apprehend, the same rule is applicable to a wood which is not enclosed by any fence: if you prove the cutting of timber in one part, I take that to be evidence to go to a jury to prove a right in the whole wood, although there be no fence, or distinct boundary surrounding the whole; and the case of Stanley v. White, 14 East, 332, I conceive, is to be explained on this principle: there was a continuous belt of trees, and acts of ownership on one part were held to be admissible to prove that the plaintiff was the owner of another part, on which the trespass was committed. So I should apply the same reasoning to a continuous hedge; though no doubt the defendant might rebut the inference that the whole belonged to the same person, by showing acts of ownership on his part along the same fence. It has been said in the course of the argument, that the defendant had no interest to dispute the acts of ownership not opposite his own land; but the ground on which such acts are admissible is not the acquiescence of any party: they are admissible of themselves proprio vigore, for they tend to prove that he who does them is the owner of the soil; though if they are done in the absence of all persons interested to dispute them, they are of less weight. That observation applies only to the effect of the evidence. Applying that reasoning to the present case, surely the plaintiff, who claims the whole bed of the river, is entitled to show the taking of stones, not only on the spot in question, but all along the bed of the river, which he claims as being his property; and he has a right to have that submitted to the jury. The same observation applies to the fence and the banks continuous tract of waste land, evidence of possession of the entire subject of demise.<sup>1</sup>

§ 305. In these, and the like cases, it is for the judge to decide,<sup>2</sup> whether such an unity of character exists between the spot in dispute and the parcel of land over which acts of ownership have been exercised, as to lead to the fair inference that both are subject to the same rights, and constitute in fact but parts of an entire property. If no such inference can be raised, evidence of acts done beyond the limits of the locus in quo will be inadmissible. Thus, where it was attempted to connect parcels of waste land with each other, merely by showing that they all lay within the same manor, and between enclosures and public roads, it was held that evidence of acts of ownership over some of these lands was inadmissible to prove title to the others.<sup>3</sup>

of the river. What weight the jury may attach to it is another question. The principle is the same as that which is laid down in Doe v. Kemp."—pp. 331, 332. See, also, *R. v. <sup>3</sup> Doe v. Kemp, 2 Bing. N. C. 102. Ld. Denman, in giving judgment, observes, "If the lord has a right to one piece of waste land, it affords no inference, even the most remote, that he has a right to another, in the same manor, although both may be similarly situated with respect to the highway; assuming that all were originally the property of the same person, as the lord of the manor, which is all that the fact of their being in the same manor proves, no presumption arises from his retaining one part in his hands, that he retained another; nor, if in one part of the manor the lord has dedicated a portion of the waste to the use of the public, and granted out the adjoining land to private individuals, does it by any means follow, nor does it raise any probability, that in another part he may not have granted the whole out to private individuals, and they afterwards have dedicated part as a public road. But the case is very different with respect to those parcels, which from their local situation may be deemed parts of one waste or common; acts of ownership in one part of the same field, are evidence of title to the whole; and the like may be said of similar acts on part of one large waste or common."—pp. 107, 108. See, also, Tyrwhitt v. Wynne, 2 B. & A. 554; Hollis v. Goldfinch, 1 B. & C. 218, 219, per Bayley, J.

§ 306. This rule, limited in the manner above stated, is founded on common sense and common justice, and applies with even greater force to criminal than to civil proceedings; for, as one of the chief objects of an indictment is to afford distinct information to the prisoner of the specific charge which is about to be brought against him, the admission of any evidence of facts unconnected with that charge, would be clearly open to the serious objection of taking the prisoner by surprise. No man should be bound at the peril of life or liberty, fortune or reputation, to answer at once and unprepared for every action of his life. Few even of the best of men would choose to submit to such an ordeal.<sup>1</sup> If, therefore, on an indictment for burglariously entering a house on a certain day and stealing goods therein, the prosecutor fail in proving that any larceny was on that occasion committed, he cannot abandon the charge of burglary, and then proceed to show that the prisoner stole some of the articles mentioned in the indictment on a previous occasion; because, though time is not usually a material allegation, yet the prisoner, having been led to suppose that he was to meet a charge of burglary, cannot be expected to come prepared to prove his innocence with respect to a distinct offence, committed, if at all, at a totally different time.<sup>2</sup> So, an admission by the prisoner, that he has, at another time, committed an offence similar to that with which he is charged, and that he has a tendency to perpetrate such crimes, cannot be received;<sup>3</sup> and, in treason, no overt act amounting to a distinct independent charge, though falling under the same head of treason, can be given in evidence, unless it be either expressly laid in the indictment, or be direct proof of any of the overt acts which are laid.<sup>4</sup> Thus, on an indictment for adhering to the King's enemies on the high sea, where the overt act laid was the prisoner's cruising on the King's subjects in a vessel called the

§ 307. But when felonies are so connected together as to form part of one entire transaction, evidence of one may be given to show the character of the other.<sup>2</sup> Thus, where the lessee of a coal-mine had run levels from his own shaft into his neighbours' mines, and had, during a period of four years, been constantly extracting coal belonging to thirty different proprietors, he was permitted to be indicted in one and the same count for stealing the coal of each of these proprietors; and although the judge, in summing up, advised the jury to confine their attention to one particular charge, he refused to make the prosecutor elect on which case he would rely, but allowed him to give evidence in support of all the charges, as at least furnishing proof of a felonious intent.<sup>3</sup> So, where a shopboy was indicted for robbing his mistress of six shillings, and it was proved that on one occasion, when the till contained some marked silver and other money amounting in all to 12s. 6d., the prisoner went to it, and it was afterwards found to contain 11s. 6d. only, the prosecutrix was allowed to show that, on subsequent examinations of the till, the money was perceived to have gradually diminished, and that, on the prisoner being searched, 8s. of the marked money was found on his person; for though each taking was a separate felony, they were all so connected together as mutually to illustrate and prove each other.<sup>4</sup> So, where four indictments were found against a woman, which respectively charged her with poisoning her husband and two of her sons, and with attempting to poison a third son, evidence was tendered on the trial of the first indictment, that arsenic had been taken by the three sons a few months after their father's death; that all the four parties, when taken ill, exhibited the same symptoms; and that the woman, who had lived in the same house with her husband and children, had been in the habit of preparing their meals. It was objected, on behalf of the prisoner, that the facts proposed to be proved took place subsequently to the death of the husband, and were, moreover, calculated to create a suspicion that the prisoner had committed three other felonies; but the court held that the evidence was clearly admissible, for the purpose of proving, first, that the husband died of arsenic, and next, that his death had not been accidental.<sup>1</sup> So, where a man committed three burglaries in one night, and left at one of the houses property taken from another, the three felonies were considered so connected, that the court heard the history of them all;<sup>2</sup> and the same course was adopted where the prisoner was charged on three indictments with firing three stacks belonging to separate parties, and it appeared that the stacks, being within sight of each other, were fired about the same time.<sup>3</sup>

upon the same indictment.<sup>1</sup> In cases of felony, however, this rule has, from motives of humanity, been considerably modified; for, as an indictment containing several distinct charges is calculated to embarrass a prisoner in his defence, the judges, in the exercise of a sound discretion, are accustomed to quash indictments so framed, when it appears, before the prisoner has pleaded and the jury are charged, that the inquiry is to include separate crimes. When this circumstance is discovered during the progress of the trial, the prosecutor is usually called upon to elect one felony, and to confine himself to that,<sup>2</sup> unless the offences, though in law distinct, seem to constitute in fact but parts of one continuous transaction. Here such a course will not be pursued, as its adoption would defeat the ends of justice.<sup>3</sup>

§ 309. Thus, if a prisoner is charged with receiving several articles, knowing them to have been stolen, and it be proved that they were received at separate times, the prosecutor may be put to his election, but if it be possible that all the goods may have been received at one time, he cannot be compelled to abandon any part of the accusation.<sup>4</sup> So, where several prisoners were charged in different counts of the same indictment with committing successive rapes upon the prosecutrix, and aiding each other in turn, she was not put to her election, but the court heard the history of the whole transaction;<sup>5</sup> and a similar course was adopted, where an indictment contained five counts for setting fire to five houses belonging to different owners, and it appeared that the houses were in a row, and that one fire burnt them all.<sup>6</sup> So, where an indictment, in the same count, charged four prisoners with assaulting and robbing two persons, who, it appeared, were walking together at the time when they were attacked, Chief Justice Tindal refused to put the prosecutors to elect upon which felony they would rely, and evidence being given as to the entire transaction, the prisoners were convicted.<sup>1</sup> In another case the defendant was charged in a single count with uttering twenty-two forged receipts, which were severally set out and purported to be signed by different persons, with intent to defraud the King. His counsel contended that the prosecutor ought to elect upon which of these receipts he would proceed, as, amidst such a variety, it would be almost impossible for the prisoner to conduct his defence. As, however, the indictment alleged that they were all uttered at one and the same time, and the proof corresponded with this allegation, the court refused to interfere, and all the judges subsequently held that a proper discretion had been exercised.<sup>2</sup>

§ 310. In the case of embezzlement by clerks, servants, and persons employed in the public service, or in the police, the Legislature has expressly provided that distinct acts, not exceeding three, may be charged in one indictment, if they have been committed against the same master, and within the period of six calendar months from the first to the last of such acts;<sup>3</sup> this exception being suggested by the difficulty which was felt in procuring a conviction, where the inquiry was confined to one offence. Still, if the prosecutor, disregarding the statute, indict his servant for a single act of embezzlement, he must confine his evidence to that alone, and, if it appear that the prisoner received different sums on different days, and made a false account respecting each sum separately, he must elect one sum and one day on which to proceed.<sup>4</sup>

§ 311. In the case of larceny the doctrine of election has been still further limited; for not only may several counts be inserted in the same indictment for distinct acts of stealing, not exceeding three, which may have been committed by the prisoner against the same person within the space of six calendar months;<sup>1</sup> but if, upon the trial of any indictment for larceny, the property alleged to have been stolen at one time shall turn out to have been taken at different times, the prosecutor shall not be put to his election, unless it shall appear that there were more than three takings, or that more than the space of six calendar months elapsed between the first and the last of such takings.<sup>2</sup> In either of these last events the prosecutor shall be required to elect to proceed for such number of takings, not exceeding three, as have occurred within six months of each other.<sup>3</sup>

§ 312. Another salutary exception to the rule of election is recognised with respect to receivers of stolen goods;<sup>4</sup> and, provided the inquiry relate to a single criminal act, one or more counts for feloniously stealing property may now be always joined in the same indictment with one or more counts, charging the felonious receipt of the same property by the prisoner, he well knowing it to have been stolen.<sup>5</sup>

<sup>4</sup> 24 & 25 V., c. 96, § 92, enacts, that "in any indictment containing a charge of feloniously stealing any property, it shall be lawful to add a count or several counts for feloniously receiving the same, or any part or parts thereof, knowing the same to have been stolen; and in any indictment for feloniously receiving any property, knowing it to have been stolen, it shall be lawful to add a count for feloniously stealing the same; and where any such indictment shall have been preferred and found against any person, the prosecutor shall not be put to his election, but it shall be lawful for the jury who shall try the same to find a verdict of guilty, either of stealing the property, or of receiving the same, or any part or parts thereof, knowing the same to have been stolen; and if such indictment shall have been preferred and found against two or more persons, it shall be lawful for the jury, who shall try the same, to find all or any of the said persons guilty, either of stealing the property, or of receiving the same, or any part or parts thereof, knowing the same to have been stolen, or to find one or more of the said persons guilty of stealing the property, and the other or others of them guilty of receiving the same, or any part or parts thereof, knowing the same to have been stolen."

§ 313. The time for putting the prosecutor to his election is, when it shall appear by the evidence that the two or more supposed occurrences took place at different periods, and it is not sufficient for this purpose that the counsel for the Crown, in his opening address, has stated that the fact was so, because the witnesses, on being examined, may put the matter in a different light.<sup>1</sup>

§ 314. Upon the same principle, that collateral facts are only excluded, when they cannot raise any fair inference respecting the matter in issue, evidence of other offences committed by the prisoner is sometimes admitted, with the view either of establishing his identity, or of corroborating the testimony of a witness in some material particular. Thus, on an information for a libel, where the printer swore that he had received the manuscript from the defendant, and had returned it to him, and notice had been given to the defendant to produce it, other libels written by him concerning the same subject were received by Lord Kenyon, as evidence to corroborate the statement of the printer.<sup>2</sup> So, where the prisoner was charged with robbing the prosecutor of a coat by threatening to accuse him of an unnatural crime, evidence of a similar, but ineffectual, attempt on the following evening, when the prisoner brought the duplicate pawn ticket for the coat, and which ticket was found on his person at the time of his apprehension, was held admissible, as confirmatory of the truth of the prosecutor's evidence respecting what occurred on the former day.<sup>3</sup> So, on a charge of highway robbery, the prosecutor was allowed to rebut an alibi, by proving that, shortly before the attack made upon him, and near the same spot, the prisoner had robbed another person; <sup>4</sup> and even had no such defence been set up, similar evidence would, it seems, have been admissible, as showing at least that the prisoner was in the neighbourhood at the time when the crime was committed.<sup>5</sup>

§ 315. In civil causes, too, evidence of collateral facts is sometimes received for the purpose of confirming the testimony of witnesses. For instance, where a party was sued on a bill of exchange, which had been accepted in his name by another person, and evidence had been given that this person had a general authority from the defendant to accept bills in his name, the court held that an admission by the defendant of his liability on another bill so accepted, was receivable in evidence, in order to confirm the witness who had spoken to the general authority.<sup>1</sup>

§ 316. Another exception to the rule excluding evidence of collateral facts is recognised, where the question is a matter of science, and where the facts proved, though not directly in issue, tend to illustrate the opinions of scientific witnesses. Thus, where the point in dispute was, whether a sea-wall had caused the choking up of a harbour, and engineers were called to give their opinions as to the effect of the wall, proof that other harbours on the same coast, where there were no embankments, had begun to be choked about the same time as the harbour in question, was admitted, as such evidence served to elucidate the reasoning of the skilled witnesses.<sup>2</sup>

§ 317. In some cases evidence has been received of facts which happened before or after the principal transaction, and which had no direct or apparent connexion with it; and, consequently, their admission might seem, at first view, to constitute another exception to this rule. But in these cases, the knowledge, or good faith, or intent of the party was a material fact, on which the evidence, apparently collateral, and foreign to the main subject, had a direct bearing. The admission, therefore, of such evidence, instead of being an exception to the rule, falls strictly within it. Thus, where the question was, whether the acceptor of a bill of exchange either knew that the name of the payee was fictitious, or else had given to the drawer a general authority to draw bills on him payable to fictitious persons, evidence was admitted to show that he had accepted other bills, drawn in like manner, before it was possible to have transmitted them from the place at which they bore date.<sup>1</sup> So, in an action for an assault and consequent injury, where evidence for the defence was given that the plaintiff had ascribed her injury to a previous accident, she was allowed to show that in fact no such accident had ever occurred.<sup>2</sup> So, on any trial, evidence will be admissible to prove or disprove any attempt at subornation of witnesses.<sup>3</sup> So, in an action for fraudulently representing that a trader was trustworthy, whereby the plaintiff was induced to sell him goods, and thus lost the price of them, the court permitted the defendant to call fellow-townsmen of the trader to state, that, at the time when the representation was made, the man was, according to their belief, in good credit.<sup>4</sup> So, in an action for work and labour in fixing railings to certain houses belonging to the defendant, where the defence was that the plaintiff had given credit to a third person by whom the houses were built under a contract, the builder was allowed to state that the order was given by him on his own account, and not as agent for the defendant; and that the defendant had actually paid him for the building of the houses, including the charge for the railings. This evidence of payment was objected to, but the court held that it was clearly admissible, as tending to show the bona fides of the defence.<sup>5</sup> In another case, where a plaintiff sought to set aside a contract on the ground of his having been insane when it was made, the court held, upon an issue as to whether or not the defendant was at the time aware of the insanity, that evidence of the plaintiff's conduct, at different times both before and after the date of the contract, was admissible, for the purpose of showing that the madness was of such a character as must have been apparent to any one, who had had opportunities of observation like those afforded to the defendant.<sup>6</sup>

§ 318. Again, in actions for false representation, where the question turns on fraudulent intent, other mis-statements besides those laid in the declaration will be admissible in evidence, for the purpose of showing that the defendant was actuated by dishonest motives.<sup>1</sup> So, in the Matrimonial Court, in a suit for dissolution of marriage, evidence of acts of adultery, subsequent to the date of the latest act charged in the petition, will be admissible, for the purpose of showing the character of previous acts of improper familiarity.<sup>2</sup> So, in actions for malicious arrest, the jury are always at liberty to draw an inference of malice ex antecedentibus et consequentibus.<sup>3</sup> In actions, too, for defamation, other words written or spoken by the defendant either before<sup>4</sup> or after those declared upon, or even after issue joined,<sup>5</sup> are, under the general issue, admissible as evidence of actual malice or of deliberate publication; <sup>6</sup> and for this

That was an action of libel, to which the defendant pleaded not guilty, and a special plea framed on § 2 of 6 & 7 V., c. 96. The plaintiff, to show the animus of the defendant, tendered in evidence other libels published by him against the plaintiff six years before, and the court held that they were admissible, the jury having been cautioned not to give damages respecting them. purpose it makes in general no difference, whether the language on which the action is founded be equivocal or clear,<sup>1</sup>—whether the collateral words tendered in evidence be addressed to the same party, to whom the slander is alleged in the declaration to have been spoken, or to a stranger,<sup>2</sup>—or whether those words be themselves actionable or not.<sup>3</sup> The case of Warwick v. Foulkes<sup>4</sup> will illustrate this doctrine. That was an action of trespass for false imprisonment, to which the defendant pleaded first, not guilty, and secondly, a justification, alleging that the plaintiff had committed a felony. This last plea was abandoned and apologised for at the trial; but the court held that, in estimating the damages under the first issue, the jury might take into account the fact of a justification having been pleaded, because the placing such a plea on the record was a persisting in the charge, which, under the circumstances, was strong evidence of malice. So, where on the trial of an action for slander, to which the general issue and a justification were pleaded, the plaintiff expressed his willingness to accept an apology and nominal damages if the plea of justification were withdrawn, but the defendant refused to abandon this plea, though he offered no evidence in support of its truth, the court held that the jury might consider the defendant's conduct, not only with reference to the question of damages, but as furnishing evidence of express malice, and thus rendering the words proved actionable, though they were prima facie privileged communications.<sup>1</sup>

J.*, in pronouncing the judgment of the court, states the correct rule to be, "That either party may, with a view to damages, give evidence to prove or disprove the existence of a malicious motive in the mind of the publisher of defamatory matter; but that, if the evidence given for that purpose establishes another cause of action, the jury shall be cautioned against giving any damages in respect of it; and if such evidence is offered merely for the purpose of obtaining damages for such subsequent injury, it will be properly rejected. And perhaps the cases of Pearce v. Ornsby and Symmons v. Blake went no farther than this. * * Upon principle, we think, that the spirit and intention of the party publishing a libel are fit to be considered by a jury, in estimating the injury done to the plaintiff, and that evidence tending to prove them cannot be excluded, simply because it may disclose another and different cause of action." 5 M. & Gr. 719, 720. See, also, Rustell v. Macquister, 1 Camp. 49, n., where Ld. Ellenborough remarked, that the distinction between words actionable and not actionable was not founded on any principle; and Camfield v. Bird, 3 C. & Kir. 56, per Jervis, C. J.

§ 319. If, however, to an action for a libel, the defendant were to plead not guilty and a justification, the jury, in forming an opinion, under the first issue, whether or not the communication was privileged, should not, as it seems, take into consideration the circumstance that the justification had been pleaded, provided that such plea were openly abandoned at the trial.<sup>2</sup> So, if it clearly appear that other libels are offered in evidence, merely with the view of unfairly recovering damages for the injury sustained by their publication, they will properly be rejected;<sup>3</sup> and it seems that no subsequent libels will be admitted, unless they directly refer to the defamatory language set out in the declaration, or at least relate to the same subject-matter.<sup>4</sup>

§ 320. Not only is other defamatory matter admissible for the purpose of showing the animus of the defendant, but the mode in which such matter was published may also be highly material; as, for instance, if printed placards were sent to the plaintiff's house, or paraded before his door.<sup>5</sup>

§ 321. On the same principle the defendant, in mitigation of damages, has been allowed, under the general issue, to give evidence palliating, though not justifying, his act of publishing a libel, as, for instance, that he copied it from another newspaper,<sup>6</sup> or that he had been provoked to act as he had done by the conduct of the plaintiff, who had previously published libels of him respecting the same subject-matter. But in this last case some proof must be given that the libels published by the plaintiff had first come to the knowledge of the defendant,<sup>1</sup> since they are admissible, not on the ground of any right to set off one libel against another,<sup>2</sup> but simply from an indulgent consideration of the weakness of human nature, which leads a man, when his feelings are exasperated, to say "that he should be sorry for."

§ 322. Evidence of this kind is very frequently admitted in criminal proceedings. Thus, on an indictment for knowingly uttering a forged document, or a counterfeit bank note, or counterfeit coin, proof of the possession, or of the prior or subsequent<sup>3</sup> utterance, either to the prosecutor himself or to other persons, of other false documents or notes, or bad money, though of a different description,<sup>4</sup> and though themselves the subjects of

Smith*, 4 C. & P. 411; as to whether evidence of subsequent utterings would be admissible, if the notes or coin were of a different description.

<sup>4</sup> R. v. Harris, 7 C. & P. 429, by all the judges; R. v. Forster, Pearce & D. 456. Doubts had been entertained on this subject by some of the judges, in R. v. Millard, R. & R. 245, but the evidence was admitted in separate indictments,<sup>1</sup> is admissible as material to the question of guilty knowledge, or intent;<sup>2</sup> but in these cases it is essential to prove distinctly that the instruments offered in evidence of guilty knowledge were themselves forged.<sup>3</sup> It seems also, that though the prosecutor may prove the uttering of other forged notes by the prisoner, and his conduct at the time of uttering them, he cannot proceed to show what the prisoner said or did at another time, with respect to such uttering; for these are collateral facts, too remote for any reasonable presumption of guilt to be founded upon them, and such as the prisoner cannot by any possibility be prepared to contradict.<sup>4</sup>

§ 323. This laxity of evidence, which has long prevailed in charges of uttering, and of one or two offences of a cognate character,<sup>5</sup> has recently, with respect to the receivers of stolen goods, been expressly sanctioned by the Legislature. Thus, "The Prevention of Crimes Act, 1871,"<sup>6</sup> in § 19, contains an enactment that, "where proceedings are taken against any person for having received goods knowing them to be stolen, or for having in his possession stolen property, evidence may be given at any stage of the proceedings that there was found in the possession of such person other property stolen within the preceding period of twelve months, and such evidence may be taken into consideration for the purpose of proving that such person knew the property to be stolen, which forms the subject of the proceedings taken against him."

The doctrine, however, does not extend to ordinary indictments for false pretences; R. v. Holt, 30 L. J., M. C. 11; Bell, C. C. 280, S. C.; 8 Cox, 411, S. C. Still, it has been applied to cases of arson with intent to defraud insurance companies; R. v. Gray, 4 Fost. & Fin. 1102, per Willes, J., & Martin, B.; sed qu.

§ 323 A. Notwithstanding the above enactment, and perhaps, even, in consequence of it, the judges may still decline to recognise the doctrine under discussion in ordinary criminal trials.<sup>1</sup> Thus much, however, may be safely predicated, that, on a charge of sending a threatening letter, other letters written by the prisoner, both before and after the one in question, are admissible to explain its meaning;<sup>2</sup> on an indictment for malicious shooting, if it be doubtful whether the shot was fired by accident or design, proof may be given that the prisoner at another time intentionally shot at the same person;<sup>3</sup> and in indictments for murder, while evidence of former menaces or quarrels will have an important tendency towards supporting the legal inference of malice, proof of expressions of kindness or of friendly acts towards the deceased will be entitled to equal weight as raising a counter-presumption.<sup>4</sup>

§ 324. In like manner, on an indictment for a robbery, where it appeared that the prisoners had formed part of a mob, who went to the prosecutor's house, and that one of the mob had civilly advised him to give them something to prevent mischief, evidence that this mob, in the presence of some of the prisoners, had demanded money at other houses on the same day, was admitted, as tending to prove that the advice was not given bonâ fide, but was in reality a polite mode of committing a robbery.<sup>1</sup> This last case differs from those just cited in one respect, namely, that the acts given in evidence were not committed by the prisoners themselves, but only by some of the mob with whom they were connected. The principle, however, is the same; for the law has wisely provided, that where several evil-doers conspire together to effect some unlawful purpose, the acts done by one of the party in furtherance of the common design shall be considered as done by all.<sup>2</sup>

§ 325. To this rule may be referred the admissibility of evidence respecting the general character of individuals. Such evidence is tendered for the purpose either of raising a presumption of innocence or guilt, or of affecting the amount of damages, or of impeaching or supporting the veracity of a witness;<sup>3</sup> the first object being chiefly confined to criminal prosecutions, and the second to civil causes, while the third is equally applicable to both modes of procedure.

§ 325 A. The term “character,” as here used, is not, as some of our ablest judges have considered it to be,<sup>4</sup> synonymous with “disposition,” but it simply means “reputation,” or the general credit which a man has obtained in public opinion.<sup>5</sup> A witness, therefore, who is called to speak to character,—unlike a master who is asked for the character of his servant,—cannot give the result of his own personal experience and observation, or express his own opinion, but, in strict law, he must confine himself to evidence of mere general repute.<sup>6</sup> This rule,—which appears to rest rather on authority than on reason,—would probably have been rejected long ago by the courts, had it not been for two causes. First, the rule, in practice, is seldom strictly enforced; and next, it has to a certain extent been modified by the judges. Aware that "the best character is generally that which is the least talked about,"<sup>1</sup> they have found it necessary to permit witnesses to give negative evidence on the subject, and to state that "they never heard anything against the character of the person on whose behalf they have been called."<sup>2</sup> Nay, some of the judges have gone so far as to assert that evidence in this negative form is the most cogent proof of a man's good reputation.<sup>3</sup>

§ 326. When the point at issue is whether the accused has committed a particular criminal act, evidence of his general good character is obviously entitled to little weight, unless some reasonable doubt exists as to his guilt; and, therefore, in this event alone will the jury be advised to act upon such evidence.<sup>4</sup> The inquiry, too, must be confined,—except where the intention forms a material ingredient in the offence,<sup>5</sup>—to the general character of the prisoner, and must not condescend to particular facts;<sup>6</sup> for although the common reputation, in which a person is held in society, may be undeserved, and the evidence in support of it must, from its very nature, be indefinite, some inference, varying in degree according to circumstances, may still fairly be drawn from it; since it is not probable that a man, who has uniformly sustained a character for honesty or humanity, will forfeit that character by the commission of a dishonest or a cruel act. But the mere proof of isolated facts can afford no such presumption. "None are all evil," and the most consummate villain may be able to prove, that on some occasions he has acted with

humanity, fairness, or honour. In all cases, too, when evidence is admitted touching the general character of the party, it ought manifestly to bear reference to the nature of the charge against him; <sup>1</sup> as, for instance, if he be accused of theft, that he has been reputed an honest man;—if of treason, a man of loyalty. It should also relate to the same period as the supposed offence; for, as Lord Holt once remarked, “A man is not born a knave; there must be time to make him so, nor is he presently discovered after he becomes one.” <sup>2</sup> Subject to these observations, evidence of the defendant’s general good character is admissible in all prosecutions whether for felony or misdemeanor. <sup>3</sup>

§ 327. Although the defendant, from motives of humanity, is allowed this reasonable indulgence, the prosecutor cannot, in the first instance, have recourse to the same loose testimony, for the purpose of establishing the guilt of the accused; <sup>4</sup> but if, with the view of raising a presumption of innocence, witnesses to character are called for the defence, the counsel for the Crown may then rebut this presumption, by cross-examining the witnesses, either as to particular facts, <sup>5</sup> or if they deem it essential, as to the grounds of their belief. <sup>6</sup> Evidence of general bad character will also in such case be admissible, <sup>7</sup> though it is seldom resorted to in practice. <sup>8</sup> In most trials for felony, and in some for misdemeanor, if the defendant endeavours to establish a good character, either by calling witnesses himself, or by cross-examining the

§ 327 A. Receivers of stolen goods have recently been subjected to a peculiar law, which, though probably salutary, is somewhat at variance with the humane doctrine illustrated in the last section. Thus, "The Prevention of Crimes Act, 1871,"<sup>3</sup> enacts, in § 19, that "where proceedings are taken against any person for having received goods knowing them to be stolen, or for having in his possession stolen property, and evidence has been given that the stolen property has been found in his possession, then if such person has within five years immediately preceding been convicted of any offence involving fraud or dishonesty, evidence of such previous conviction may be given at any stage of the proceedings, and may be taken into consideration for the purpose of proving that the person accused knew the property which was proved to

The Larceny Act of 1861 contains a somewhat similar provision with respect to offences punishable under that Act; 24 & 25 V., c. 96, § 116. So does the Act of 1861, relating to offences against the coin; 24 & 25 V., c. 99, § 37. See R. v. Martin, 1 Law Rep., C. C. 214; 11 Cox, 343, S. C. § 328. As evidence of general character can, at best, afford only a glimmering light, when the question is whether a party has done a certain act or not, its admission for such a purpose is exclusively confined to criminal proceedings, in which it was originally received, some two centuries ago,<sup>2</sup> in favorem vitæ ; and so strict is this rule, that even upon an information filed in the Exchequer by the Attorney-General, with the view of recovering penalties from the defendant, for keeping false weights, and for offering to corrupt an officer, such evidence was rejected, because proceedings of this kind, though brought in the name of the Sovereign, are considered as civil suits, the Court of Exchequer having no criminal jurisdiction.<sup>3</sup> So, in an action of ejectment brought by the heir-at-law against a devisee, where the defendant was charged with having imposed a fictitious will on the testator in extremis, he was not permitted to call witnesses to prove his general good character ; <sup>4</sup> and a similar rule was laid down in an action for slander, where the words charged the plaintiff with stealing money from the defendant, though the latter, by pleading truth as a justification, had put the character of the former directly in jeopardy.<sup>1</sup> In an action, too, for a libel, which charged a surveyor with want of skill in doing some particular work for the defendant, the plaintiff was not allowed to prove his general competency as a surveyor, though he offered this evidence with the view of showing that the defendant, in making the charge, was actuated by malice.<sup>2</sup> It seems, notwithstanding a decision by Lord Kenyon to the contrary,<sup>3</sup> that, in an action for malicious prosecution, the defendant, in support of probable cause, cannot give evidence of the plaintiff's notoriously bad character;<sup>4</sup> and it has been held that, in an action of trespass for false imprisonment on a criminal charge, the defendant must not cross examine, either as to the plaintiff's bad character, or as to previous charges made against him.<sup>5</sup>

service, a witness, with whom she had formerly lived, was allowed to testify to her antecedent good conduct.<sup>1</sup> These cases, however, can scarcely be deemed an exception to the rule of exclusion ; for it is clear that, as in cumulative offences, such as treason or a conspiracy to carry on the business of common cheats, many acts are given in evidence, because such crimes can be proved in no other way,<sup>2</sup> so, where the general behaviour of a party is impeached, it is only by general evidence that the charge can be rebutted.

§ 330. It has been above observed, that in some cases general evidence of character is admissible, for the purpose of increasing or diminishing the amount of damages.<sup>3</sup> Thus, evidence impeaching the previous general character of the wife or daughter in regard to chastity, is admissible under the general issue, in a petition by the husband for damages on the ground of adultery,<sup>4</sup> or in an action by the father for seduction ;<sup>5</sup> for in these proceedings the plaintiff in reality seeks compensation for the pain which the defendant has caused him to suffer, by disgracing his family, and ruining his domestic happiness ; and it is manifest that, such being the true nature of the claim, though in cases of seduction not the ostensible ground of action,<sup>6</sup> the damages should be commensurate with the pain, which will vary according as the character of the wife or daughter has been previously unblemished or profligate. In these cases, therefore, not only evidence of general bad character is admissible in mitigation of damages, but the defendant may even prove particular acts of immorality or indecorum.<sup>7</sup>

§ 331. But evidence of these acts, as well as proof of general bad character, must be confined to what occurred previously to the defendant's misconduct, because this very misconduct may, by weakening the principles of the woman, have indirectly caused any subsequent immorality, and may itself have directly occasioned her general want of reputation.<sup>1</sup> Whether, in an action of seduction, where the plaintiff's daughter is called as a witness, the defendant can prove specific acts of immorality, without first laying a foundation for such evidence in the cross-examination of the woman, is not perfectly clear; though, on principle, such a course seems open to no objection, provided the evidence be tendered with the view, not of impeaching the veracity of the party seduced, but of showing that, as her previous conduct had been disgraceful, the father's feelings could not have been wounded by the misconduct of the defendant.<sup>2</sup> However, if the daughter, in her examination in chief, states that the defendant has seduced her, and that she has borne a child in consequence, and the defence is that she has declared another person to be the father, it is clear that witnesses cannot be called to prove her declarations, unless she be first cross-examined as to the fact of her having made them; because, though language of this kind, if lightly uttered, would tend to degrade her character, yet, if used in earnest, it would directly contradict the testimony she had given, and would be evidence, not in mitigation of damages, but in bar of the action.<sup>3</sup>

§ 332. On a petition claiming damages from an alleged adulterer,<sup>4</sup> the respondent may also prove in mitigation of damage, that the petitioner has been guilty of notorious infidelity; has turned his wife out of doors; has refused to maintain her; or has otherwise been guilty of dissolute conduct;<sup>5</sup> for, in such cases, a man can scarcely complain of the loss of that society, upon which he has himself placed so little value. It seems, also, that upon a

like principle, evidence may be given in an action for seduction, that the plaintiff is a man of profligate habits. In actions for breach of promise of marriage a similar rule prevails, the defendant being entitled, under the general issue, to prove in mitigation of damages, that the plaintiff is a person, either of bad character,<sup>1</sup> or of coarse and brutal manners,<sup>2</sup> though if the acts of misconduct relied upon were committed after the promise, or even before that event without the knowledge of the defendant,<sup>3</sup> and were sufficiently glaring to constitute a bar to the action,<sup>4</sup> they can only be proved under a special plea.<sup>5</sup>

impunity. To this it is replied with much force, that, though the arguments on the other side would be entitled to great weight, if the question respected the right of proving particular acts of misconduct, they do not apply where evidence is offered of merely general reputation; that every man, who demands compensation for the ruin of his good character, ought to be prepared to rebut any evidence of his general bad character; that the danger of admitting testimony of this kind is only imaginary, since the witnesses, on cross-examination, might be compelled to state the grounds of their belief; that, as any failure in the evidence would probably much increase the damages, witnesses would scarcely be called, except in support of a decisive case; that the law will not presume the existence of criminal conspiracies to ruin reputations, and cannot be moulded to suit the convenience of irrational timidity; that to estimate the extent of the injury which a plaintiff has sustained, and, consequently, the amount of damages to which he is entitled, the jury must first ascertain what was the real value of his character at the time when it was attacked by the defendant; and, that they can best, if not only, arrive at a safe conclusion on this point, by inquiring what opinion was previously entertained respecting him, by those with whom he was personally acquainted. Such being the arguments on either side of this vexed question, it remains only to observe that the weight of authority inclines slightly in favour of the admissibility of the evidence, even though the defendant has pleaded truth as a justification, and has failed in establishing his plea.<sup>1</sup>

It seems, however, that here, as in other cases where witnesses to character are admitted, evidence must be confined to the particular trait which is attacked in the alleged libel, and, as to this, it can only furnish proof of general reputation, and must by no means condescend to particular acts of bad conduct.<sup>1</sup> And it is quite clear, that any evidence of rumours, which are calculated to compromise the plaintiff's character, must be strictly confined to such as were prevalent before the publication of the slander of the defendant; for if this were not so, one man might slander another, and then call his neighbours to say that they had heard of the imputations which he had himself originated.<sup>2</sup>

§ 335. In aggravation of damages the plaintiff cannot give evidence of general good character, unless counter-proof has been first offered by the defendant; for, until the contrary appear, the presumption of law is already in his favour. Therefore, in an action of slander for imputing theft, the plaintiff will not be allowed to prove his character for honesty, even though the defendant has placed on the record pleas of justification.<sup>3</sup> This rule has, in some cases, been carried to a cruel extent. Thus, in an action of seduction, where evidence was produced for the defence, to prove that the girl had previously had a child by another man, Lord Ellenborough would not allow a question to be asked respecting her general good character for chastity, but restricted the plaintiff to the proof that the specific charge made by the defendant was false;<sup>4</sup> and the same learned judge on another occasion, where the daughter was cross-examined at length, with a view of showing that she had been guilty of gross levity and indelicacy, rejected similar evidence, observing that the witness, on her re-examination, had had ample opportunity of explaining her conduct.<sup>1</sup> In another case for criminal conversation, in which the defendant had endeavoured, by cross-examining the plaintiff's witnesses, to impeach his character, but had failed in the attempt, Lord Kenyon refused to permit the plaintiff to call witnesses to his general good conduct.<sup>2</sup> It is true that in these cases the facts insinuated had, or might have, been denied, and that, consequently, the characters attacked remained in strictness unimpeached; still, the very circumstance of the questions being asked was calculated to excite a suspicion in the minds of the jury, which, in common justice, the plaintiff should have had an opportunity of entirely removing.<sup>3</sup> It is satisfactory to find that a contrary rule has prevailed in two later cases,<sup>4</sup> one of which has been recognised in Ireland.<sup>5</sup>

§ 336. The law which regulates the admission of general evidence of character for the purpose of impeaching the veracity of a witness will be discussed hereafter;<sup>6</sup> but it may be here convenient to point out how far such evidence will be receivable, where its object is, not so much to shake the credit of the witness as to show directly that the act in question has not been committed. Thus, on indictments for rape, or an attempt to commit that crime, while evidence of general bad character is admissible to show that the prosecutrix, like any other witness, ought not to be believed upon her oath, proof that she is a reputed prostitute would go far towards raising an inference that she yielded willingly to the prisoner's embraces. General evidence, therefore, of this kind will be received, though the woman be not called as a witness, and though, if called, she be not asked, on cross-examination, any questions tending to impeach her character for chastity;<sup>1</sup> but it seems that the counsel for the defence cannot go further, and prove specific immoral acts with the prisoner, unless he has first given the prosecutrix an opportunity of denying or explaining them.<sup>2</sup> It further appears to be the law, that although the prosecutrix may be cross-examined as to particular acts of immorality with other men, she may decline to answer such questions, and if she answers them in the negative, witnesses cannot be called to contradict her.<sup>3</sup>

CHAPTER III.

BURTHEN OF PROOF.

§ 337.<sup>1</sup> A THIRD RULE, which governs the production of evidence, is, that the burthen of proof lies on the party who substantially asserts the affirmative of the issue. This rule of convenience, which in the Roman law is thus expressed, Ei incumbit probatio, qui dicit, non qui negat,<sup>2</sup> has been adopted in practice, not because it is impossible to prove a negative, but because the negative does not admit of the direct and simple proof of which the affirmative is capable;<sup>3</sup> and, moreover, it is but reasonable and just that the suitor who relies upon the existence of a fact, should be called upon to prove his own case. In the application of this rule, regard must be had to the substance and effect of the issue, and not to its grammatical form; for in many cases the party, by making a slight alteration in the drawing of his pleadings, may give the issue a negative or affirmative form, at his pleasure.<sup>4</sup>

§ 338. The best tests that can be devised for ascertaining on whom the burthen of proof lies, are, first to consider which party would succeed if no evidence were given on either side;<sup>5</sup> and, secondly, to examine what would be the effect of striking out of the record the allegation to be proved, bearing in mind that the onus must lie on whichever party would fail, if either of these steps were pursued.<sup>6</sup> For instance, if, in an action of covenant or assumpsit, brought against a tenant, the breach assigned be that the premises were not kept in repair, and this allegation be traversed by the plea, the plaintiff must prove his negative averment;<sup>1</sup> for though according to the grammatical construction of the issue, the affirmative lies on the defendant, yet the substantial merits of the case must be proved by the plaintiff; and if no evidence were given, or if the allegation on which issue was joined were struck from the record, the defendant would clearly be entitled to a verdict. So, if a declaration on a life policy,—after averring that the insurance was effected on a statement made by the plaintiff, that the insured was not subject to habits or attacks of illness tending to shorten life, but was in good health,—should allege that this statement was true, and the defendant were to plead that it was false in these respects, that the insured was subject to habits and attacks tending to shorten life, to wit, to habits of intemperance and attacks of erysipelas, and was ill at the time when the statement was made, the burthen of proof would lie upon the plaintiff, though the plea should conclude with a verification, and be met by a replication offering a general denial, because, to entitle the plaintiff to a verdict, some evidence must be given to show that, at the time when the policy was effected, the life was insurable.<sup>2</sup> Again, if to an action for not executing a contract in a workmanlike manner, the defendant plead that the work was properly done,<sup>3</sup> or if a declaration allege that a horse sold under a warranty was unsound, and this fact be traversed by the plea,<sup>4</sup> the onus, in either case, will lie on the plaintiff; and the same rule will prevail in an action brought against an attorney for not using due diligence,<sup>1</sup> or against a merchant for not loading a sufficient cargo on board a ship, pursuant to a charter-party,<sup>2</sup> or against an architect for not building houses according to a specification,<sup>3</sup> and, indeed, in every case in which the plaintiff grounds his right of action upon a negative allegation, and where, of course, the establishment of this negative is an essential element in support of his claim.<sup>4</sup>

§ 339. On this general rule, that the burthen of proof lies on the party holding the substantial affirmative, some exceptions have been engrafted, which should here be noticed. First, if a disputable presumption of law<sup>5</sup> is in favour of an affirmative allegation, the party who supports the negative must call witnesses to rebut this presumption. For instance, where a shipper was charged, in an action on the case, with having shipped goods dangerously combustible on board the plaintiff's ship, without giving notice of their nature to any officer on board, whereby the ship was burnt, it was held that, as the omission to give notice would have been a criminal neglect of duty on the part of the defendant, the law presumed that notice had been given, and threw upon the plaintiff the burthen of proving the negative.<sup>6</sup> So, where a landlord brought an action of ejectment against his tenant, on an alleged forfeiture by breach of a covenant to insure in some office in or near London, it was held that the omission to insure must be proved by the plaintiff, because the law, in favour of the party in possession, will presume that he has satisfied the terms of the covenant;<sup>7</sup> and had the landlord wished to have been relieved from the necessity of establishing this negative proof, he might easily have inserted a clause to that effect in the lease.<sup>1</sup> If, to an action on a policy of insurance effected on a ship, the underwriter plead that certain material facts, known to the assured, had been concealed from him, the burthen of proving the non-communication of these facts will, on a replication traversing the whole plea, fall on the defendant; for, although the allegation contained in his plea may be negative in its terms, still, as it was the duty of the assured to make the communication, either upon the principle that every policy is based on the supposed existence of a certain state of facts, or on the ground that insurance is a contract uberrimæ fidei, some evidence should be given by the underwriter to rebut the presumption that the assured had discharged his duty. The amount of the proof required will, indeed, vary according to the circumstances of the case, and very slender evidence will often be sufficient; for, suppose a ship was known by the assured to have been burnt at the time when the assurance was effected, proof of this fact would in itself be reasonable evidence to show that it had not been communicated, because no underwriter in his senses, had he been aware of such a circumstance, would have executed the policy.<sup>2</sup> § 340. Again, if to an action brought by an indorsee against the acceptor of a bill of exchange, the defendant plead that the bill was accepted by him for the accommodation of the drawer, and was indorsed to the plaintiff without value, and the plaintiff reply that it was indorsed to him for a valuable consideration, the burthen of proving this issue will clearly lie on the defendant, because the mere possession of the bill raises a prima facie presumption of due consideration having been given for it,<sup>3</sup> and perhaps also, independent of this presumption, because the defendant must, as we have just seen, prove all those facts,

<sup>1</sup> Doe v. Whitehead, 8 A. & E. 571. The court there held that the defendant's refusal to produce the policy or any receipt for premium, both before the action was commenced, and also at the trial, was not sufficient proof of an omission to insure, though due notice to produce had been served.

whether affirmative or negative, which are necessary to establish his defence to the action.<sup>1</sup> So, if the defendant were to plead that he had accepted the bill for his own accommodation, and that the drawer, instead of getting it discounted for the use of the defendant, had indorsed it to a stranger, who had fraudulently indorsed it to the plaintiff, after it became due, or without consideration, and the plaintiff were to traverse this last allegation, the burthen of proving that the bill was overdue at the time of indorsement, or that no value was given for it by the holder, would devolve on the defendant, because the plea does not contain such an allegation of fraud as would counteract the presumption arising from the possession of the instrument.<sup>2</sup>

§ 341. If, however, the defendant's plea, after disclosing some original fraud or illegality in the transaction, as, for instance, after stating that the bill had been obtained by fraud or duress, or had been given for gambling purposes,<sup>3</sup> or had been lost or stolen, were to aver that the plaintiff held it without value, and this last fact were to be traversed by the replication, the plaintiff must prove his traverse, because the presumption of illegality arising from an admitted fraud will attach to every subsequent holder, and render him incapable of recovering in the absence of evidence, showing under what circumstances he became possessed of the bill.<sup>4</sup> If, too, in such a case as that just put, the plaintiff, instead

<sup>3</sup> The fact that a note was given for a wager on the hop duty will not render it illegal within this rule, for such a wager is only a promise which the law will not enforce, Fitch v. Jones, 24 L. J., Q. B. 293; 5 E. & B. 238, S. C.

<sup>4</sup> See cases cited in last four preceding notes. Also Bingham v. Stanley, 2 Q. B. 117; 1 G. & D. 237, S. C., overruling Ld. Denman's decision at Nisi Prius as reported in 9 C. & P. 374. In Elkin v. Janson, 13 M. & W. 664, 665, Alderson, B., observes, "But take the case of fraud;—where the defendant, who is sued upon a bill of exchange, pleads that it was obtained from the drawer by fraud upon the part of A., and that A. then indorsed it to the holder; there proof of the fraud renders it highly probable that A., who has obtained the bill from the drawer by fraud, and has not been able to get anything from him, would hand it over to some one else, to be the conduit-

of merely traversing the averment of want of value, were to meet the plea by a general denial, and the defendant at the trial were to give evidence of fraud, the burthen of proving consideration would by such evidence be shifted on the plaintiff.<sup>1</sup> So, where in answer to an action on a promissory note brought by the indorsee against the maker, the defendant pleaded that he had presented a petition to the Court of Bankruptcy, and that the note, which had been indorsed to the plaintiff without value, had been given to the indorser in consideration of his not opposing the petition, the court held, on a replication de injuriâ, that, as soon as the illegality was proved, the onus was cast upon the plaintiff of showing that he gave value.<sup>2</sup>

§ 342. Again, if the plaintiff were to aver that a certain party was, at a specified time, of sound mind, and this averment were traversed by the defendant, the latter would be bound to prove the negative allegation of incompetency, because every man may reasonably be presumed to be sane till the contrary is shown, and consequently, this presumption of fact, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, would equally serve the plaintiff's purpose, as though he had given express evidence of the sanity.<sup>3</sup> If, however, such an issue were to come from the Court of Chancery, the plaintiff would be called upon to prove the sanity of the party, because the court, in such case, would presume that the judge directing the issue had considered that a prima facie case of

pipe for obtaining value for it. That raises a presumption, until some answer is given, that there has been no indorsement for value, and casts upon the plaintiff, after this general evidence, the necessity of negating that presumption, and of showing that, although the above inference might fairly be made from the fact of there being fraud in the original inception of the bill, value has in fact been given for it by the indorsee." madness had been made out, and, by ordering the party, who relied upon the sanity, to be the plaintiff, had intended that the burthen of proof should devolve upon him.<sup>1</sup> So, if a will duly signed and attested be impugned in the Court of Probate, on the ground of the testator's insanity, the onus of proof will lie on the impugner ;<sup>2</sup> but if it be shown that the testator was insane at any time prior to the date of the will, or within a few years after that date, the burthen of establishing his capacity to have made the will in question will be shifted on the propounding party.<sup>3</sup>

§ 343. When infancy is pleaded to an action on contract, and the replication relies on a written and signed ratification of the contract after the defendant became of age, no evidence need be given by the plaintiff to show that the defendant was of age when he signed the paper, but the burthen of disproving that fact will lie on the defendant.<sup>4</sup> This rule rests partly on the presumption that a person will not ratify a contract till he is of age to do so in a binding manner ; partly, on the ground that the replication, in substance, contains a negative assertion that the defendant was not a minor ; and partly, on a rule that will be presently mentioned,<sup>5</sup> which throws the onus of proof on whichever party has peculiar means of knowledge respecting the fact in dispute.

vincing evidence to the contrary, the burthen of proof, unless shifted by legislative interference, will fall in criminal proceedings on the prosecuting party, though, in order to convict, he must necessarily have recourse to negative evidence. Thus, if a statute, in the direct description of an offence, and not by way of proviso, contain negative matter, the indictment or information must also contain a negative allegation, which must in general be supported by primâ facie evidence.<sup>1</sup> Such was formerly the case in prosecuting parties, either for coursing deer in inclosed grounds without the consent of the owner,<sup>2</sup> or for cutting trees without such consent;<sup>3</sup> and although the old statutes, which made the absence of consent a material element in these offences, are now repealed, the cases decided upon them will illustrate the principle under discussion. In such cases, indeed, it is not necessary to call the owner himself to prove that no consent was given by him, but the jury may infer the absence of consent from the conduct of the accused, or from other circumstances; still, some evidence must be given,—as, for instance, that the act complained of was done in a suspicious manner, or at an unseasonable hour, or that the defendant, when detected, endeavoured to escape, or the like,—which, in the absence of counter testimony, would afford ground for presuming that the allegation of non-consent was true.<sup>4</sup>

the part of the prosecution having been found, in the great majority of criminal cases, not only useless, but highly inconvenient, the Legislature has in many instances interfered, sometimes by re-describing the offence, and omitting all mention of the negative matter,<sup>1</sup> but generally, by expressly enacting, that the burthen of proving authority, consent, lawful excuse, and the like, should lie on the defendant. Thus, if a party be indicted for being found by night, having in his possession any picklock key, crow, jack, bit, or other implement of housebreaking;<sup>2</sup> or for buying or selling at an undervalue, or for exporting or importing, counterfeit coin;<sup>3</sup> or for making, mending, or having in his possession coining tools, or for conveying such tools, or any coin or bullion, out of the Mint;<sup>4</sup> or for having in his possession any forged dies or stamps,<sup>5</sup> or any instruments or materials for making, either letter stamps,<sup>6</sup> or excise paper,<sup>7</sup> or paper used for making exchequer bills,<sup>8</sup> bank notes,<sup>9</sup> the notes of private bankers,<sup>10</sup> or foreign notes;<sup>11</sup> or for manufacturing paper similar to that used for postage covers,<sup>12</sup> or exchequer bills;<sup>13</sup> or for having in possession such paper before it has been stamped and issued for use;<sup>14</sup> or for engraving bank notes or any part thereof,<sup>15</sup> the notes of private bankers,<sup>16</sup> or foreign notes;<sup>17</sup> or for having in possession counterfeit dies for making gold and silver wares, or instruments for making such dies, or any wares of gold, silver, or base metal, having thereon forged dies,<sup>18</sup> or having in possession hackney-coach and stage plates, or drivers' or watermen's tickets;<sup>19</sup>

—in all these, and in several other cognate offences,<sup>1</sup> the defendant, by the express language of the statutes relating to them, is bound to protect himself, by showing the existence of some lawful authority or excuse.

§ 346. So, if a party be charged with having naval, victualling, warlike, ordnance, or other public stores in his possession, or with concealing or selling such stores,<sup>2</sup> he must,—as soon as proof has been given, or an inference has been raised, that he has acted<sup>3</sup> “knowingly,”—either prove that he was lawfully authorised to do what he has done, or at least furnish some satisfactory evidence of the legality of his conduct.<sup>4</sup> In any prosecution, too, under the direction of the Commissioners of Customs, in respect of goods seized for non-payment of duties, or any other cause of forfeiture, or for recovering any penalty under any Act relating to the customs, if any dispute arise whether the duties of customs or excise have been paid, or whether the goods have been lawfully imported or unshipped, or concerning the place whence such goods were brought, the proof in every such case lies on the defendant.<sup>5</sup> So, if a person be indicted for making a signal to a smuggling vessel at sea, the burthen of proving that the signal was not made for the purpose of giving illegal notice will lie upon the defendant;<sup>6</sup> and if any goods be found or seized under the customs or excise laws, they will be deemed to be run goods, unless the owner can prove the contrary.<sup>7</sup> So, in proceedings under “The Seamen’s Clothing Act, 1869,” the accused must be prepared to justify his conduct.<sup>8</sup> So, under “The Foreign Enlistment Act, 1870,” if the breach of neutrality charged relate to the delivery of a ship to one of the States at war, the burthen lies on the builder “of proving that he did not know

§ 346 A. Again, in most of the prosecutions for offences against the Bankrupt Law, the accused will be open to conviction on the sole proof of his having committed the act complained of, "unless the jury is satisfied that he had no intent to defraud," or, "to conceal the state of his affairs," or, "to defeat the law," as the case may be.<sup>3</sup> So, if any person exposes for sale, or transports by railway, or turns out on unenclosed land, any animal affected with a contagious disease, he will be deemed guilty of an offence against "The Contagious Diseases Animals' Act, 1869," unless he can show "that he did not know of the same being so affected, and that he could not with reasonable diligence have obtained such knowledge."<sup>4</sup> So, if a consumer of gas be charged with fraudulently abstracting it, "the existence of artificial means" for altering the index to any meter, or for preventing any meter from duly registering, or for abstracting, consuming, or using gas when such meter is under the consumer's control, shall be "prima facie evidence that such alteration, prevention, abstraction, or consumption has been fraudulently, knowingly and wilfully caused by the consumer."<sup>5</sup>

§ 346 B. In accordance with the law as just illustrated, "The Prevention of Crimes Act, 1871,"<sup>6</sup> after showing how minor offences against that Act may be prosecuted, goes on to enact, in subs. 3 of § 17, that "any exception, exemption, proviso, excuse, or qualification, whether it does or does not accompany the description of the offence in this Act, may be proved by the defendant, but need not be specified or negatived in the information or complaint, and if so specified or negatived no proof in

§ 347. In several of the instances above given, the Legislature has adopted a principle which the common law also recognises, and which may here be noticed as a second exception to the general rule, that the burthen of proof lies on the party who substantially alleges the affirmative. The exception is this, that where the subject matter of the allegation lies peculiarly within the knowledge of one of the parties, that party must prove it, whether it be of an affirmative or a negative character, and even though there be a presumption of law in his favour.<sup>2</sup> Thus, where an action for penalties was brought, under the old law, against a person for practising as an apothecary without a certificate,<sup>3</sup> the plaintiff would, independent of this exception, have been bound to prove the want of a certificate; for first, though the allegation was in a negative form, its proof was essential to the plaintiff's case; and next, the law might fairly presume that the defendant would not transgress the provisions of a statute; still, as the defendant was peculiarly cognisant of the fact, whether or not he had obtained a certificate, and, if he had obtained one, could have no difficulty in producing it, the law, which is founded on general convenience, compelled him to do so.<sup>4</sup>

§ 348. This exception equally prevails in all civil or criminal

<sup>1</sup> This seems to be a favourite form of the present Parliamentary draughtsman, for it will be found in several other Acts passed in 1871. See “The Pedlar's Act, 1871,” 34 & 35 V., c. 96, § 20, subs. 3; and “The Petroleum Act, 1871,” 34 & 35 V., c. 105, § 15, subs. 5.

Janson*, 13 M. & W. 662, Alderson, B., while commenting on that passage, observed, “I doubt, as a general rule, whether those expressions are not too strong. They are right as to the weight of the evidence, but there should be some evidence to start it, in order to cast the onus on the other side.”

proceedings instituted against parties for doing acts, which they are not permitted to do unless duly qualified; as for selling liquors, sporting,<sup>1</sup> exercising a trade or profession, and the like.<sup>2</sup> So, in an action for penalties against the proprietor of a theatre, for performing dramatic pieces without the written consent of the author,<sup>3</sup> the onus of proving such consent lies on the defendant.<sup>4</sup> In misprision of treason, if the treason be proved, and the knowledge of it be traced to the prisoner, he is, in strictness, bound to negative the averment of concealment, by offering proof of a discovery on his part.<sup>5</sup> The same rule is recognised in the Ecclesiastical Courts; and, therefore, if proceedings be there instituted against a clergyman for non-residence without licence or exemption, the promoter of the suit need neither allege nor prove that the defendant had not a licence, or was not resident on another benefice.<sup>6</sup>

to create an impression in his favour, which it is difficult by subsequent evidence to erase, but in the event of witnesses being called by his opponent, it secures to him also the last word; still, cases sometimes occur where a defendant goes to trial relying simply on the weakness of the plaintiff's case, and where, if called upon to begin, he will instantly be defeated.<sup>1</sup> Hence it follows, that the duty of beginning is seldom a matter of indifference, but is generally regarded as an object which it is important either to attain or to avoid, according to the circumstances. The question, therefore, is frequently discussed with much spirit; and as the principles which govern the right are difficult of application, and, moreover, are not very distinctly understood, the decisions are alike numerous and conflicting. A lengthened examination of these decisions would be misplaced in a work of this nature, but perhaps a few general rules may be laid down, that will be found of practical value.

§ 350. The first general rule on this subject is, that the party on whom the onus probandi lies,<sup>2</sup> as developed on the record, must begin.<sup>3</sup> It has been sometimes asserted, that the right of beginning belongs to the party on whom the affirmative of the issue lies; but this assertion, if literally understood, is by no means accurate, since, as we have seen, it does not apply to cases where either the affirmative allegation is supported by a legal presumption, or the truth of the negative averment is peculiarly within the knowledge of the party who relies on it.<sup>4</sup> Indeed, the rule as stated above is subject to some exceptions, which it will be convenient here to notice. And, first, if the defendant will admit at the trial the whole prima facie case of the plaintiff, he will be entitled to begin, provided he could not, by his pleading, have made this admission at an earlier period. For instance, if a party, claiming premises as heir-at-law of the person last in possession, brings an action of ejectment against a devisee under such person's will, the defendant, as it seems, is entitled to begin, on admitting not only that the plaintiff is heir, but that the ancestor, through whom he claims, died seised of the estate.<sup>1</sup>

§ 351. But this exception will be strictly confined to cases where the defendant admits the whole title of the plaintiff; and, therefore, if a defendant in ejectment were to admit at the trial a will under which the plaintiff claimed, and were to rely on a subsequent devise or codicil, he would not be allowed to begin; because, in such case, so far from admitting the whole title of the plaintiff, the defendant would expressly deny a most material part of it; for by setting up a second will or codicil, he would in effect assert that his opponent was not devisee at the time of the testator's decease.<sup>2</sup> So, if the defendant's title rests upon a conveyance from the ancestor,<sup>3</sup> or if he claims, even in part, under the ancestor's marriage settlement,<sup>4</sup> he cannot, by simply admitting the heirship of his opponent, and his own possession, deprive the former of his right to begin, because such an admission will not cover the entire title of the plaintiff. So, where each party claimed as heir-at-law, and the defendant was clearly the heir, if legitimate, his admission of the plaintiff's conditional title was held insufficient to give him the initiative, because the plaintiff, in order to recover, must prove his own title; and although in this particular case, the title might depend on the defendant's legitimacy, the fact of legitimacy did not constitute the direct issue.<sup>1</sup> It seems, indeed, that to entitle the defendant to begin, he must make such an admission, as, if set out on the record, would, together with the facts which he is about to prove, amount to a plea in confession and avoidance.<sup>2</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Goodtitle v. Braham, 4 T. R. 498; Doe v. Brayne, 5 Com. B. 670—674; Doe v. Barnes, 1 M. & Rob. 386, per Ld. Denman; Doe v. Smart, id. 476, per Gurney, B., after consulting Patteson, J. In this last case the defendant was allowed to begin, though the plaintiff, as to part of the premises, was prepared to prove that he was assignee of an outstanding term.

§ 352. Moreover, this exception will only be allowed to prevail in cases, where the defendant could not, by the forms of pleading, have made his admission at an earlier period. If, therefore, in an action of trespass, the defendant chooses to plead not guilty, or if to an action on a bill of exchange, he traverses the acceptance or indorsement, he cannot at the trial, by offering to admit the plaintiff's right to a verdict on these issues, claim the privilege of beginning, whatever special pleas may be placed on the record; but if he wishes to begin, he must first, by a judge's order, withdraw the pleas which he seeks to abandon.<sup>3</sup> In an action for goods sold and delivered, where a rule of court had been obtained by consent, ordering the defendant to admit the plaintiff's case, it has been held that the plaintiff was still entitled to begin and state the facts.<sup>4</sup>

§ 353. Another exception to the rule under discussion rests upon the broad principle of public convenience and justice, and provides that the plaintiff shall begin in all actions where he

The dictum of Alderson, B., in this case, that the defendant might begin without making such admission, would seem not to be law. It is directly opposed to the ruling of Ld. Denman in Morris v. Lotan, 1 M. & Rob. 233, and seems overruled by the case of Mercer v. Whall, cited in next §. See, further, Hill v. Fox, 1 Fost. & Fin. 136; Overbury v. Mugridge, id. 137, n. a.

seeks substantial and unliquidated damages, though the general issue be not pleaded, and the affirmative lie upon the defendant. This doctrine was promulgated by a majority of the judges many years back, as applicable to actions for libel, slander, and injuries to the person; <sup>1</sup> and the Court of Queen's Bench has since extended its operation to actions of covenant and assumpsit, and indeed, as it would seem, to all actions, where the plaintiff is seeking to recover actual damages of an unascertained amount.<sup>2</sup>

§ 354. The case which establishes this important exception is that of Mercer v. Whall,<sup>3</sup> and the language of Lord Denman, in pronouncing the judgment of the court, well illustrates the subject. After observing that "the natural course would seem to be, that the plaintiff should bring his own cause of complaint before the court and jury in every case where he has anything to prove, either as to the facts necessary for his obtaining a verdict, or as to the amount of damages to which he conceives the proof of such facts may entitle him,"<sup>4</sup> his Lordship proceeds thus:—"In ejectment, the defendant may entitle himself to begin, by admitting that the plaintiff must recover possession unless the defendant can establish a certain fact in answer; and if in an action for damages the damages are ascertained, and the plaintiff has a primâ facie case on which he must recover that known amount and no more, unless the defendant proves what he has affirmed in pleading, here is a satisfactory ground for the defendant's proceeding at once to establish that fact. But if the extent of damage is not ascertained, the plaintiff is the person to ascertain it; and his doing so will have the good effect of making even the defence, in

§ 355. This last exception does not extend to cases where the plaintiff seeks to recover a debt, or a liquidated demand in money; <sup>2</sup> because in such actions, unless a plea of never indebted be placed on the record, the plaintiff is not required to give any evidence as to the amount of his claim. Neither does the exception apply where the damages sought to be recovered, though unliquidated, are obviously nominal,<sup>3</sup> or where they are admitted by the defendant, so far as the amount is concerned,<sup>4</sup> or where they can be ascertained by mere computation, as, for instance, where the action is brought on a bill of exchange or a promissory note;<sup>5</sup> or where the plaintiff will not say whether or not he intends to proceed for substantial damages.<sup>6</sup>

§ 356. A second general rule respecting the right to begin is, that if the record contains several issues, and the burthen of proving any one of them lies on the plaintiff, he is entitled to begin, provided he will undertake to give evidence upon it.<sup>7</sup> This rule will equally prevail, though it clearly appears, as matter of calculation, that if the defendant should eventually succeed on one of the issues which he is bound to prove, the plaintiff will recover nothing on the issue which lies upon him.<sup>8</sup> But the proviso at the end of the rule constitutes a material part of it; and, therefore, if to some special count, claiming liquidated damages, the plaintiff adds the common money counts, and the defendant, confessing and avoiding the former, pleads the general issue to the latter, this will not entitle the plaintiff to begin, unless in fact he intends to rely on the common money counts, and to adduce evidence in support of them, for the only object of an opening is to explain to the jury the facts which are to be proved by the witnesses.<sup>1</sup>

§ 357. If several issues be joined, some of which lie on either party, the plaintiff may, at his option, go into the whole case in the first instance, or he may content himself with adducing evidence in support of those issues which he is bound to prove, reserving the right of rebutting his adversary's proofs, in the event of the defendant establishing a prima facie case with respect to the issues which lie upon him.<sup>2</sup> The latter course is the one which, in practice, is most usually adopted, and the defendant may then have a special reply on the plaintiff's fresh evidence, while the plaintiff will be entitled to the general reply on the whole case. If, however, the plaintiff at the outset thinks fit to call any evidence to repel the defendant's case, he will not be permitted to give further evidence in reply; for if such a privilege were allowed to the plaintiff, the defendant, in common justice, might claim the same, and the proceedings would run the risk of being extended to a very inconvenient length.<sup>3</sup> In one case, where the general issue and a set-off were pleaded to an action on contract, the plaintiff was permitted to prove certain debts due to him from the defendant, and to reserve the proof of the remainder of his claim till evidence in support of the set-off

There, to an action for goods sold, defendant pleaded, except as to £150, the general issue, and as to that sum a special plea. The plaintiff's particulars limited his demand to £150. Held by Ld. Campbell that defendant should begin.

<sup>2</sup> Formerly, when either by pleading or notice, the defence was known, the plaintiff was bound to open his whole case, Rees v. Smith, 2 Stark. R. 30; but this practice, having been found inconvenient, has been abandoned; Browne v. Murray, Ry. & M. 254, per Abbott, C. J.; Shaw v. Beck, 8 Ex. R. 392. See *Penn v. had been given by the defendant;<sup>1</sup> but, although the court refused a new trial in this case, it may well be doubted whether such a course would now be allowed, without the mutual consent of both parties.

§ 358. However this may be, it is tolerably clear that where there is only one issue, the onus of proving which lies on the plaintiff, he must put forth all his evidence in the first instance, and cannot rely on a primâ facie case, and, after that case has been shaken by the defendant's proof, call other evidence to confirm it. Thus, in an action by the indorsee of a bill against the acceptor, where issue was raised on a plea denying the indorsement, the plaintiff was not allowed to rest his case at first on proof of the indorser's handwriting, and after evidence for the defence had been given that he was himself too poor to have discounted the bill, and had disclaimed all knowledge of it, to prove that in fact he had discounted the instrument.<sup>2</sup>

§ 359. In deciding upon the admissibility of evidence called in reply, regard must be had to the circumstances of the individual case, and considerable latitude will necessarily be granted to the judge in the exercise of his discretion.<sup>3</sup> Thus, where a plaintiff in ejectment made out a primâ facie case as heir-at-law, which was met by a will being proved for the defendant, he was permitted, in reply, to put in a subsequent will whereby the estates claimed were devised to himself; for although this will proved him to be entitled to the premises as devisee, and thus set up a title different from that on which he originally relied, it operated also as a revocation of the former will, and thus demolished the defendant's case.<sup>4</sup> So, in an action on the case for negligent driving, where the plaintiff, as confirmatory evidence of the defendant's having committed the injury, had offered proof that about the time in question, the defendant was at Layton where the collision took place, and the defendant had called witnesses to show that he was then at Richmond, Lord Denman refused to exclude further witnesses, who were tendered by the plaintiff to prove that the defendant was not at Richmond, but at Layton, when the accident occurred.<sup>1</sup> This case certainly carries the privilege of adducing evidence in reply to its extreme limit; for although the plaintiff was at liberty to disprove the alibi by showing that the defendant was not at Richmond, yet when the witnesses went on to prove that he was at Layton, they not only gave evidence which ought to have been submitted to the jury in the first instance, but confirmed that which was actually given in chief, and which consequently should have then been exhausted.<sup>2</sup> Where the issue turned on the soundness of a horse, which was exhibited to the jury during the defendant's case, the plaintiff was not allowed to recall his veterinary witnesses, who had attended the view, to give their opinion respecting his soundness, these gentlemen having had an opportunity of inspecting the horse before the plaintiff's case had closed.<sup>3</sup>

§ 360. The question respecting the right to begin is a matter of practice and regulation upon which the presiding judge must exercise his discretion; and the court in banc will not interfere with his decision, unless it be clearly proved, not only that the ruling on this point was manifestly wrong, but that it has occasioned substantial injustice.<sup>4</sup> It seems that the court will not grant a new trial, merely because the judge has either admitted evidence in reply, which should in strictness have been produced in support of the plaintiff's original case,<sup>5</sup> or has prevented the plaintiff from calling witnesses in anticipation of the defendant's case, provided such witnesses be subsequently examined in reply.<sup>1</sup>

§ 361. The right to begin draws after it, both in civil and criminal proceedings, the right to reply, whenever the adversary adduces evidence to the jury in support of his case;<sup>2</sup> but the mere commenting on a cash-book, which has been used to refresh the memory of one of the adverse witnesses, or even a reference to parts of this book, not looked at by such witness, will not entitle the opposite counsel to reply;<sup>3</sup> neither will the production of a paper, which the judge has called for in order to satisfy his conscience.<sup>4</sup> If in the course of the trial it shall become necessary for the defendant to call witnesses, for the purpose of informing the judge upon a question respecting the admissibility of evidence, the plaintiff's counsel will not thereby be entitled to the last word, because the evidence, in order to give this right, must be produced to the jury.<sup>5</sup> Where several prisoners are jointly indicted, and one of them calls witnesses, the counsel for the prosecutor has a strict right to reply generally, if the charge be a joint one, though, if the charges be separate, as for stealing and receiving, he should confine his remarks to the case of the party, for whom witnesses have appeared.<sup>6</sup> "If the only evidence called on the part of a prisoner is evidence to character, although the counsel for the prosecution is entitled to the reply, it will be a matter for his discretion whether he will use it or not. Cases may occur in which it may be fit and proper to do so."<sup>7</sup> Whether the counsel for the plaintiff or the prosecution will be entitled to reply, if the defendant, without adducing evidence, opens new facts, is a point which is not yet clearly decided; but the better

§ 362. On the trial of public prosecutions, whether for felony or misdemeanor, instituted by the Crown, the law officers of the Crown, and, perhaps, those who represent them,<sup>2</sup> are in strictness entitled to reply, although no evidence be adduced on the part of the defendant;<sup>3</sup> but as this is a privilege, or rather a prerogative, which stands opposed to the ordinary practice of the courts, the true friend of justice will do well to watch with jealousy the parties who are entitled to exercise it. Mr. Horne, so long back as the year 1777, very properly observed, that the Attorney-General would be grievously embarrassed to produce a single argument of reason or justice on behalf of his claim;<sup>4</sup> and as the rule which precludes the counsel for the prosecution from addressing the jury in reply, when the defendant has called no witnesses, has been long thought to afford the best security against unfairness in ordinary trials, this fact raises a natural suspicion that a contrary rule may have been adopted, and may still be followed, in State prosecutions, for a different and less legitimate

CHAPTER IV.

BEST EVIDENCE.

§ 363.<sup>1</sup> THE FOURTH RULE, which governs the production of evidence, requires that the best evidence, of which the case in its nature is susceptible, should always be presented to the jury. This rule does not demand the greatest amount of evidence which can possibly be given of any fact; but its design is to prevent the introduction of any, which, from the nature of the case, supposes that better evidence is in the possession of the party. It is adopted for the prevention of fraud; for when better evidence is withheld, it is only fair to presume, that the party has some sinister motive for not producing it, and that, if offered, his design would be frustrated.<sup>2</sup> The rule thus becomes essential to the pure administration of justice. In requiring the production of the best evidence applicable to each particular fact, it is meant that no evidence shall be received which is merely substitutionary in its nature, so long as the original evidence is attainable.<sup>3</sup> Thus, depositions are in general admissible only after proof that the parties who made them cannot themselves be produced.<sup>4</sup> So, a preliminary agreement, which has been followed up by the execution of a deed of conveyance, cannot be admitted as evidence to show what parcels were subsequently conveyed.<sup>5</sup> But every title by deed must be proved by the production of the deed itself, if it be within the power of the party; for this is the best evidence of which the case is susceptible; and its non-production raises a presumption that it contains some matter of defeasance. If there be duplicate originals of a deed, all must be accounted for, before secondary evidence can be given of any one.<sup>1</sup> Again, if an instrument, which requires attestation to give it validity,<sup>2</sup> be produced, its execution must in general be proved by calling the subscribing witness;<sup>3</sup> and if there be two such witnesses, it will not be sufficient, so long as one of them is alive, sane, free from permanent sickness, within the jurisdiction of the court, and capable of being found by diligent inquiry, to prove the signature of the other who is dead; for such evidence would merely raise a presumption that the deceased had witnessed all which the law requires for the due execution of the instrument; whereas the surviving witness would have been able to give direct proof. Such direct testimony, therefore, might fairly be considered as evidence of a better and higher nature than mere presumption arising from the proof of the witness's handwriting.<sup>4</sup>

§ 364. The rule under discussion excludes only that evidence which itself indicates the existence of more original sources of information; and, therefore, when there is no substitution of inferior evidence, but only a selection of weaker, instead of stronger, proofs, or an omission to supply all the proofs capable of being produced, the rule is not infringed.<sup>5</sup> For instance, where an instrument is required to be attested by two witnesses, it is only necessary at law to call one of them, though the other may be at hand;<sup>6</sup> and the same rule prevails in the Court of Probate,<sup>7</sup> and, excepting in the case of wills, in the courts of equity.<sup>8</sup> Even the previous examination of a deceased subscrib-

ing witness, if admissible on other grounds, may supersede the necessity of calling the survivor.<sup>1</sup> So, in proof or disproof of handwriting, or in proof of the contents of a letter, which cannot be produced, it is not necessary to call the supposed writer.<sup>2</sup> Even where it is necessary to prove negatively that an act was done without the consent, or against the will, of another, the person whose will or consent is denied, need not, as we have seen, be himself called.<sup>3</sup>

§ 365.<sup>4</sup> This rule naturally leads to the division of evidence into PRIMARY and SECONDARY. Primary evidence is what has been just mentioned as the best or highest evidence, or, in other words, it is that kind of proof which, in the eye of the law, affords the greatest certainty of the fact in question. Until it is shown that the production of this evidence is out of the party's power, no other proof of the fact is in general admitted. All evidence falling short of this in its degree is termed secondary. The question whether evidence is primary or secondary has reference to the nature of the case in the abstract, and not to the peculiar circumstances under which the party, in the particular cause on trial, may be placed. It is a distinction of law, and not of fact; referring only to the quality, and not to the strength of the proof. Evidence, which carries on its face no indication that better remains behind, is not secondary, but primary.

§ 366.<sup>5</sup> But though all information must, if possible, be traced to its fountain head, yet if there be several distinct sources of information of the same fact, it is not in general necessary to show that they have all been exhausted, before recourse can be had to secondary evidence with respect to one of them.<sup>1</sup> For instance, if it be requisite to prove that a collector, who is a stranger to the suit, has received certain sums of money, that fact may obviously be established by calling, either the collector himself, or the parties who paid him, and both these modes of proof are equally primary. But suppose the collector be dead; in this case the only primary evidence is the testimony of the persons from whom the money was received. Still the law does not require the production of these persons, but, on proof of the collector's death, it will admit any entries in his book acknowledging the receipt, though such entries are merely secondary evidence of the fact in issue; and if the book be in the hands of the opposite party, who, after notice, refuses to produce it, even secondary evidence of its contents will be admissible.<sup>2</sup> The distinction between this case, and that of the two subscribing witnesses to an instrument,—where, as we have seen,<sup>3</sup> proof must be given that both the witnesses are unable to be called, before evidence of the handwriting of one of them can be received,—seems to rest on this, that the attesting witnesses are either rendered necessary by statute, or at least have been solemnly chosen by the parties, as the persons on whose united testimony they wish to rely, and, consequently, so long as one of them can be called, secondary evidence respecting the other cannot be admitted.

§ 367.<sup>4</sup> The cases which most frequently call for the application of the rule now under consideration, are those which relate to the substitution of oral for written evidence; and the general rule of law with respect to this subject is, that the contents of a written instrument, which is capable of being produced, must be proved by the instrument itself, and not by parol evidence.<sup>5</sup> This rule, which is as old as any part of the common law of England, has ever been regarded with favour, and mentioned with approbation by the judges. "I<sup>1</sup> have always," said Lord Tenterden, "acted most strictly on the rule, that what is in writing shall only be proved by the writing itself. My experience has taught me the extreme danger of relying on the recollection of witnesses, however honest, as to the contents of written instruments; they may be so easily mistaken, that I think the purposes of justice require the strict enforcement of the rule."<sup>2</sup> Lord Wynford, also, in another case observes: "I seldom pass a day in a Nisi Prius court without wishing that there had been some written statement evidentiary of the matters in dispute. More actions have arisen, perhaps, from want of attention and observation at the time of a transaction, from the imperfection of human memory, and from witnesses being too ignorant, and too much under the influence of prejudice, to give a true account of it, than from any other cause. There is often a great difficulty in getting at the truth by means of parol testimony. Our ancestors were wise in making it a rule, that in all cases the best evidence that could be had should be produced; and great writers on the law of evidence say, if the best evidence be kept back, it raises a suspicion that, if produced, it would falsify the secondary evidence on which the party has rested his case. The first case these writers refer to as being governed by this rule is, that where there is a contract in writing, no parol testimony can be received of its contents, unless the instrument be proved to have been lost."<sup>3</sup> One of the main reasons for the adoption of this rule is, that the court may acquire a knowledge of the whole contents of the instrument, which may have a very different effect from the statement of a part.<sup>4</sup>

§ 368. It cannot be denied that these authorities and reasons are entitled to the greatest weight, and the rule in general is undoubtedly a wise one; but those who watch its practical working must be strangely prejudiced in its favour, if they are blinded to the cruel injustice which a strict observance of it too frequently entails upon parties, in consequence of the stamp laws.<sup>1</sup> The judges, it is true, are wont to show no great favour to stamp objections; and some years ago they promulgated a rule, that, unless the want or insufficiency of a stamp be pointed out at the earliest possible period, that is, as soon as the document is tendered in evidence, the objection will not be entertained.<sup>2</sup> This rule is of questionable policy; for although it may occasionally promote substantial justice, it has an obvious tendency to foster sharp practice. Modern legislation has grappled with the evil in a more straightforward manner, and has done much to alleviate the oppressive operation of the stamp laws, so far as the administration of justice is concerned. In the criminal courts, no objection can now be taken to the admissibility of any document in evidence for want of a sufficient stamp;<sup>3</sup> and in the civil courts an attempt has been made, as the Common Law Commissioners express it,<sup>4</sup> “to reconcile the claims of justice with the interests of the revenue,” by enabling all such instruments as may be stamped after execution to be received in evidence, though unstamped, or insufficiently stamped, if the party who tenders them is prepared at the trial to pay to the officer of the court the proper duty and penalty.<sup>5</sup> The Common Law Pro-

The officer receiving the said duty and penalty shall give a receipt for the same, and make an entry in a book kept for that purpose of the payment and of the amount thereof, and shall communicate to the Commissioners the name or title of the cause or proceeding in which, and of the party from whom, he received the said duty and penalty, and the date and description of the instrument, and shall pay over to the Receiver-General of Inland Revenue, or to such other cedure Act of 1854<sup>1</sup> further enacts, in § 31,<sup>2</sup> that “no new trial shall be granted by reason of the ruling of any judge that the stamp upon any document is sufficient, or that the document does not require a stamp;” and this provision,—which impliedly restrains a judge at Nisi Prius from reserving for the court any question respecting the sufficiency of the stamp on a document admitted by him at the trial,<sup>3</sup>—will doubtless be productive of much benefit to the suitor, by relieving him from the annoyance and cost of a second inquiry into a matter, which cannot have any possible connection with the real question in dispute.

§ 369. Returning now to the rule, which requires the contents of a document to be proved by the document itself, if its production be possible, it will be found that<sup>4</sup> the cases on the subject may be arranged into three classes; the first class relating to those instruments which the law requires to be in writing; the second, to those contracts which the parties have put in writing; and the third, to all other writings, the existence or contents of which are disputed, and which are material to the issue.<sup>5</sup>

§ 370.<sup>6</sup> And, first, oral evidence cannot be substituted for any instrument which the law requires to be in writing; such as records, public and judicial documents, official examinations, deeds of conveyance of lands, wills, other than nuncupative, acknowledgments under Lord Tenterden’s Act, promises to pay the debt of another person, and other writings mentioned in the Statute of Frauds. In all these cases the law having required that the evidence of the transaction should be in writing, no other proof can be substituted for that, so long as the writing exists, and is in the power of the party. Thus, for example, parol evidence is inadmissible to prove

at what sittings or assizes a trial at Nisi Prius came on,<sup>1</sup> or even that it took place at all; but the record, or at least the postea, must be produced.<sup>2</sup> So, the date of a party's apprehension for a particular offence cannot be shown by parol, the warrant for apprehension or committal being superior evidence.<sup>3</sup> So, whenever the testimony of a witness is required by law to be reduced into writing, as, for instance, when it is taken by depositions, either before an Examiner of the Court of Chancery, or before a magistrate on an indictable charge, the writing becomes in all subsequent proceedings, whether civil or criminal, the best evidence of what the witness has stated, and parol proof on the subject is consequently excluded in the first instance.<sup>4</sup> So, also, parol evidence cannot be received of the statement of a prisoner before the magistrate, where the examination has, in conformity with the Act of 11 & 12 V., c. 42, in England, or the Act of 14 & 15 V., c. 93, in Ireland, been reduced into writing, and subscribed, and returned by the justice.<sup>5</sup> substitution of the official document, since no such document in that case exists, but as the best evidence which the circumstances admit of being produced. So, if the prisoner was examined on two occasions, or with reference to two offences, and the examination, signed by the magistrates, relates only to what occurred on one occasion,<sup>1</sup> or with respect to one offence,<sup>2</sup> the prosecutor may call any party, who can speak to statements made by the prisoner in that part of the inquiry not included in the written examination. In like manner, if a witness, having given a written deposition in a cause, has afterwards testified orally in court, parol evidence may, in the event of his death, be given of his vivâ voce testimony notwithstanding the existence of the deposition;<sup>3</sup> for, in this last case, as two independent sources of information exist, the party who relies on the evidence may, at his discretion, have recourse to either.

§ 372.<sup>4</sup> In the second place, oral proof cannot be substituted for the written evidence of any contract which the parties have put in writing. Here the written instrument may be regarded, in some measure, as the ultimate fact to be proved, especially in the case of negotiable securities; and in all cases of written contracts, the writing is tacitly considered by the parties themselves as the only repository and the appropriate evidence of their agreement. The written contract is not collateral, but is of the very essence of the transaction;<sup>5</sup> and consequently, in all proceedings, civil or criminal, in which the issue depends in any degree upon the terms of a contract, the party whose witnesses show that it was reduced to writing, must either produce the instrument, or give some good reason for not doing so. Thus, for example, if in an action of ejectment against an overholding tenant, or in an action for the use and occupation of real estate, it should appear, either on the direct or cross examination of the plaintiff's witnesses, that a written contract of tenancy has been signed, the plaintiff must either produce it, or account for its absence.<sup>1</sup> So, if a landlord were to bring an action against a tenant for rent and non-repair, and it should appear that the parties had agreed by parol that the tenant should hold the premises on the terms contained in a former lease between the landlord and a stranger, a nonsuit would be directed, unless this lease could be produced.<sup>2</sup>

agreed on. So, testaments are written, in order to preserve the remembrance of what the party, who has a right to dispose of his property, has ordained concerning it, and thereby to lay down a rule for the guidance of his heir and legatees. On the same principle are reduced into writing all sentences, judgments, edicts, ordinances and other matters, which either confer title, or have the force of law. The writing preserves unchanged the matters intrusted to it, and expresses the intention of the parties by their own testimony. The truth of written acts is established by the acts themselves, that is, by the inspection of the originals."—See Domat's Civ. Law, Liv. 3, tit. 6, § 2, as translated in 7 Monthly Law Mag. p. 73.

plaintiff's claim was for extra work, it has been several times held that, in the absence of positive proof that the work in question was entirely separate from that included in the agreement, and was in fact done under a distinct order, the plaintiff was bound to produce the original document, since it might furnish evidence, not only that the items sought to be recovered were not included therein, but also of the rate of remuneration upon which the parties had agreed.<sup>1</sup> So, where an auctioneer delivered to a bidder, to whom lands were let by auction, a written paper signed by himself, containing the terms of the lease, the landlord was held bound, in an action for use and occupation, to produce this paper duly stamped as a memorandum of an agreement.<sup>2</sup>

The society being afterwards dissolved, the plaintiff sued some of the members of the committee for his salary, and the court held that he was bound to produce the book under which he was engaged; for though he was no party to the original resolution, which was entered into before his appointment as secretary, yet by accepting the situation and the benefit attached to it, he must be taken to have adopted the terms contained in the resolution, and consequently was bound to produce the book to show what those terms really were. occupied under a written agreement, may admit of some doubt. In one case it was held that the agreement must be produced;<sup>1</sup> but in a later case, where nominal damages only were recovered, and independent proof was given of the premises having been devised to the plaintiff, the judges of the Court of Common Pleas were equally divided upon the question whether a nonsuit should be entered, the plaintiff having omitted to produce the written agreement between the occupier and himself.<sup>2</sup>

§ 375. The fact that, in cases of this kind, the writing is in the possession of the adverse party, does not change its character; it is still the primary evidence of the contract; and its absence must be accounted for by notice to the other party to produce it, or in some other legal mode, before secondary evidence of its contents can be received. In all these cases, however, if the plaintiff can establish a primâ facie case, without betraying the existence of a written contract relating to the subject-matter of the action, he cannot be precluded from recovering by the defendant subsequently giving evidence that the agreement was reduced into writing; but the defendant, if he means to rely on a written contract, must produce it as part of his evidence,<sup>3</sup> and in the event of its turning out to be unstamped, or insufficiently stamped, he must pay the duty and penalty.<sup>4</sup> Nor, in such a case, will any material distinction be recognised in the defendant's favour, though a notice to produce the document has been served on the plaintiff.<sup>5</sup> In an action of ejectment it has even been held, that the plaintiff could not be turned round by one of his witnesses proving, on cross-examination, that an agreement, which he only knew related in some way to the land in question, was seen on that morning in the hands of the plaintiff's attorney, and was produced at a former trial between the same parties; for the court held that, in order to exclude parol evidence of the tenancy, it should appear that the agreement was between the same parties, and was binding at the time of the second trial; neither of which facts was proved.<sup>1</sup>

§ 376.<sup>2</sup> Where the written communication or agreement between the parties is collateral to the question in issue, it need not be produced. Thus, if during an employment under a written contract, a verbal order is given for separate work, the workman can perhaps recover from his employer the price of this work, without producing the original agreement, provided he can show distinctly that the items, for which he seeks remuneration, were not included therein; as, for instance, if it clearly appears, that whilst certain work was in progress in the inside of a house under a written agreement, a verbal order was given to execute some alterations or improvements on the outside.<sup>3</sup> So, if the fact of the occupation of land is alone in issue, without respect to the terms of the tenancy, this fact may be proved by any competent parol evidence, such as payment of rent, or the testimony of a witness, who has seen the tenant occupy, notwithstanding it appears that the occupancy was under an agreement in writing;<sup>4</sup> and where a tenant holds lands under written rules, but the length of his term is agreed on orally, the landlord need not produce these rules in an action of trespass under a plea denying his possession, because such plea only renders it necessary for the plaintiff to prove the extent of the tenant's term, which, having been agreed to by parol, does not depend upon the written rules.<sup>5</sup> The fact of partnership may also be proved by parol evidence of

read to them;<sup>1</sup>—in all these instances the court held that parol evidence was admissible, since the writings only amounted, either to mere unaccepted proposals, or to minutes capable of conveying no definite information to the court or jury, and they could not, by any sensible rule of interpretation, be construed as memoranda, which the parties themselves intended to operate as fit evidence of their several agreements.

§ 378. On the same principle it has frequently been held, that where the action is not directly upon the agreement for non-performance of its terms, but is in tort, for its conversion, or detention, or negligent loss, the plaintiff may give parol evidence, descriptive of its identity, without giving notice to the defendant to produce the document itself;<sup>2</sup> and even though the defendant be willing to produce it without notice, the plaintiff is not bound to put it in, but may leave his adversary to do so, if he think fit, as part of his case.<sup>3</sup> It has been well observed that, for the purpose of identification, no distinction can be drawn between written instruments and other articles;—between trover for a promissory note, and trover for a waggon and horses.<sup>4</sup>

§ 379. The same rule prevails in criminal cases; and, therefore, if a person be indicted for stealing a bill or other written instrument, its identity may be proved by parol evidence, though no notice to produce it has been served on the prisoner or his agent.<sup>5</sup> If, however, the indictment be for forgery, and the forged instrument be in the hands of the prisoner, the prosecutor must serve him or his attorney with a notice to produce it, before he can offer secondary evidence of its contents.<sup>6</sup> One ground of difference between these two cases appears to be, that in the first it was always sufficient, both in the indictment and the proof, to describe in very general terms the instrument stolen, whereas in the case of forgery, the prosecutor, under the old law,<sup>1</sup> was often required to enter into a minute description of the document alleged to have been forged.<sup>2</sup> But the main reason why parol evidence is admissible in a case of larceny, though inadmissible in a case of forgery, is, that a person charged with stealing an instrument must know, from the very nature of the accusation, that he will be called upon to produce it, while an indictment for forgery furnishes no such intimation; and it will be presently seen, when the rules which regulate the serving of notices to produce are discussed,<sup>3</sup> that this is a material distinction. Indeed, it may well admit of a doubt, whether all the cases cited in this and the preceding section, wherein parol evidence has been received, do not rest on those rules, rather than on the fact that the contents of the writings were collateral to the questions in issue.

§ 380.<sup>4</sup> In the third place, oral evidence cannot be substituted for any writing, the existence or contents of which are disputed, and which is material to the issue between the parties, and is not merely the memorandum of some other fact. Thus, a witness cannot be asked whether certain resolutions were published in the newspapers,<sup>5</sup> neither can he be questioned as to the contents of his account-books:<sup>6</sup> but in both these cases the papers and the books, as being the best evidence, must be produced. So, the primary proof of the publication of an opera is the production of the printed music, and the fact of publication cannot be proved in the first instance by a witness who has merely seen the opera in print, or heard parts of it played in society.<sup>7</sup> So, doubts have been entertained as to whether the contents of handbills, written by dictation at a meeting of conspirators, could be proved by oral testimony.<sup>1</sup> So, the fact of a person being rated to the relief of the poor cannot be legally proved by the collector stating that such person's name was on the rate,<sup>2</sup> but either the rate-book itself,<sup>3</sup> or at least a certified or examined extract from it,<sup>4</sup> must be produced. So, a plaintiff cannot be asked on cross-examination whether his name is written in a certain book described by the questioner, unless a satisfactory reason be first given for the non-production of the book itself.<sup>5</sup>

§ 381. In stating that oral testimony cannot be substituted for any writing included in either of the three classes above mentioned, a tacit exception must be made in favour of the parol admissions of a party, and of his acts amounting to admissions, both of which species of evidence are always received as primary proof against himself and those claiming under him, although they relate to the contents of a deed or other instrument, which are directly in issue in the cause.<sup>6</sup> "The reason," says Mr. Baron Parke, "why such statements or acts are admissible, without notice to produce, or accounting for the absence of the written instrument, is, that they are not open to the same objection which belongs to parol evidence from other sources, where the written evidence might have been produced; for such evidence is excluded from the presumption of its untruth, arising from the very nature of the case, where better evidence is withheld; whereas, what a party himself admits to be true, may reasonably be presumed to be so."<sup>7</sup>

§ 382. It may seem presumption to question the correctness of this reasoning and of the decisions founded upon it; but the author cannot refrain from observing that, although the admission of a party may fairly be presumed to be true, the parol evidence by which that admission is proved need by no means be so; and, indeed, such testimony is open to even greater objection than applies to the ordinary case, where secondary evidence is produced, and the best evidence is withheld.<sup>1</sup> When the admission is made in court, it may very reasonably be allowed to render needless the production of the written instrument to which it refers, because the simple question in such case will be, is the admission true? and the rational presumption is, that a man will not tell a falsehood, which is against his own interest; but when a witness is called to say that he has heard the opposite party make a certain statement with respect to the contents of a written instrument, the further question arises, was this statement really made? and to permit such parol evidence to be equally admissible, in proof of the contents of the instrument, with the production of the instrument itself, is to open a vast field for misapprehension, perjury, and fraud, which would be wholly closed, if the salutary rule of law, requiring that what is in writing should be proved by the writing itself, were here, as in other cases, to prevail. It must be remembered, that Lord Tenterden, and Mr. Justice Maule, no mean authorities, have emphatically expressed opinions in support of the view here suggested;<sup>2</sup> while Mr. Baron Parke himself has declared that the parol evidence of admissions may, in some cases, be quite unsatisfactory to a jury,<sup>3</sup> and that too great weight ought never to be attached to such evidence, since it frequently happens that the witness not only has misunderstood what the party has said, but, by unintentionally altering a few of the expressions really used, has given to the statement an effect completely at variance with what was intended.<sup>1</sup>

§ 383. Since the above observations were written, the subject has undergone much discussion in Ireland, where the judges have not hesitated to declare their disapproval of the principles advanced in Slatterie v. Pooley.<sup>3</sup> “The doctrine laid down in that case,” said Chief Justice Pennefather, “is a most dangerous proposition; by it a man might be deprived of an estate of 10,000*l.* per annum derived from his ancestors through regular family deeds and conveyances, by producing a witness, or by one or two conspirators, who might be got to swear that they heard defendant say he had conveyed away his interest therein by deed, or had mortgaged, or had otherwise encumbered it; and thus, by the facility so given, the widest door would be opened to fraud, and a man might be stripped of his estate through this invitation to fraud and dishonesty.”<sup>4</sup> The case which called forth these remarks was an action for use and occupation. At the trial, one of the plaintiff’s witnesses, after proving the occupation of the premises by the defendant, acknowledged in cross-examination the existence of a written agreement; and the court held, that this agreement must be produced, though the defendant had admitted that he was tenant at a particular rent.

§ 384. Whether the doctrine propounded in Slatterie v. Pooley would be held to extend to records, as well as to deeds and ordinary writings, and whether it would embrace the case of a confessio juris, as well as that of a confessio facti, may admit of some doubt. In one case before Lord Ellenborough, the admission of a party that he had been discharged under the Insolvent Debtors Act, was held insufficient evidence of a valid discharge, because the judicial document, on being produced, might be found irregular and void, and the party might be mistaken;<sup>1</sup> but on an indictment for bigamy it has been held that the prisoner's deliberate declaration, that he had been married in a foreign country, rendered it unnecessary to prove that the marriage had been celebrated according to the laws of that country.<sup>2</sup> So, in an action for wages, an admission by the plaintiff that his claim had been referred to an arbitrator, who had made an award against him, has been held admissible evidence on behalf of the defendant.<sup>3</sup> It may be further observed, with respect to this exception, that a material difference exists between proving by means of an admission the execution of an instrument requiring attestation, which is produced, and proving the party's admission, that by such instrument, which is not produced, a certain act was done; and, indeed, it still appears to be the law, as will hereafter be shown,<sup>4</sup> that, when an instrument, which requires attestation to give it validity,<sup>5</sup> is in court, and its execution is to be proved against a hostile party, an admission on his part of due execution, unless made with a view to the trial of that cause, is not sufficient. This rule is founded on reasons peculiar to the class of cases to which it is applied.

§ 385.<sup>6</sup> Where the writing does not fall within either of the three classes already described, no reason exists why it should exclude oral evidence. If, therefore, a written communication be accompanied by a verbal one to the same effect, the latter may be received as independent evidence, though not to prove the contents of the writing, nor as a substitute for it.<sup>7</sup> So, the payment of money may be proved by oral testimony, though a receipt be taken;<sup>8</sup> a verbal demand of goods is admissible in trover, though a demand in writing was made at the same time;<sup>1</sup> and the admission of a debt is provable by oral testimony, though a written promise to pay was simultaneously given.<sup>2</sup> So, the determination of an interest in land, whether freehold or copyhold, may be proved without producing, or accounting for the non-production of, the title deeds or court rolls, by merely showing that a deceased occupier had, while in possession, declared that his interest in the premises would expire at his death.<sup>3</sup> For, as will presently be seen,<sup>4</sup> all statements made by a person, while in possession of property, are, after his death, in themselves primary evidence, provided they tend to cut down his interest therein.<sup>5</sup>

§ 386. Where, on a preliminary hearing of a charge, the magistrate's clerk takes down what the witness says, but neither the witness nor the magistrate signs the writing, nor does it constitute part of the depositions returned, oral evidence of what passed on that occasion is equally admissible with the clerk's note;<sup>6</sup> and the same rule will prevail, if, on the hearing of an information for a trespass in pursuit of game,<sup>7</sup> the clerk takes a note of the charge; because this is not one of those cases where the magistrate is bound to take down what the witnesses say.<sup>8</sup> So, in support of an indictment for perjury committed in a County Court, it is unnecessary to subpoena the judge to produce his notes, for he is not required by law to keep any, and the perjury may be proved by any witness, who was present at the trial.<sup>9</sup> So, where the proceedings of directors, commissioners, public trustees, and the like, are entered in books, the fact that such books are rendered by statute admissible in evidence, does not exclude parol proof of what has taken place at the respective meetings.<sup>1</sup> Neither is it necessary to produce a certificate of registration, in order to prove that a joint stock company has been completely registered.<sup>2</sup> So, the fact of birth, baptism, marriage,<sup>3</sup> death, or burial, may be proved by parol testimony, though a narrative or memorandum of these events may have been entered in registers, which the law requires to be kept; for the existence or contents of these registers form no part of the fact to be proved, and the entry is no more than a collateral or subsequent memorial of that fact, which may furnish a satisfactory and convenient mode of proof, but cannot exclude other evidence, though its non-production may afford grounds for scrutinising such evidence with more than ordinary care.<sup>4</sup>

§ 387.<sup>5</sup> On a somewhat similar ground it has been held, that in prosecutions for political offences, such as treason, conspiracy, and sedition, the inscriptions on flags and banners, paraded in public, and the contents of resolutions read at a public meeting, may be proved, as being of the nature of speeches, by oral testimony;<sup>6</sup> and where a party was indicted for administering an unlawful oath, a witness was permitted to give parol evidence of the words used, though he stated his belief that the accused read the words from a paper, which he held in his hand when he administered the oath, and no notice to produce this paper had been served on the prisoner.<sup>1</sup>

§ 388. The preceding observations have been confined to cases, where the attempt has been made to substitute oral for written evidence; but precisely the same rules operate to the exclusion of writings, which the law considers as entitled to less weight than those which might, and, consequently, ought to be forthcoming. Thus, an original document must,—subject to some exceptions that will be presently mentioned,<sup>2</sup>—be produced at the trial, and a mere copy, however accurate, will not in the first instance be admissible.<sup>3</sup> If, then, it be necessary to show the contents of a manuscript which is in the possession of the opposite party, a paper, purporting to be a printed copy, cannot be received in evidence, without a notice to produce the manuscript;<sup>4</sup> neither will a duplicate writing, taken from an autograph at one impression by means of a copying machine, be regarded as an original, but the autograph itself must be produced, or its non-production be accounted for as in ordinary cases.<sup>5</sup> Still, all printed copies struck off in one common impression, though they constitute merely secondary evidence of the contents of the paper from which they are taken, are considered as primary evidence of each other's contents; and, therefore, where the question was, whether a prisoner was acquainted with the contents of certain placards, some copies of which were traced to his possession, a copy remaining with the printer was allowed to be read in evidence for the prosecution, though no notice had been served upon the prisoner to produce the copies which had been delivered to him.<sup>6</sup> Again, on an indictment for feloniously setting fire to a house, with intent to defraud the insurers, the policy itself, being the best evidence of the fact of insurance, must be produced

transaction. Thus, where goods have been sold through the medium of a broker, it is not yet distinctly decided how far the broker's book is admissible in proof of the contract. On the one hand, it has been powerfully urged by many eminent judges, that this book, if duly signed by the broker, furnishes the best evidence of the agreement,<sup>1</sup> but on the other hand it has been ruled, after much consideration, and after consulting merchants, that the bought and sold notes, provided they agree, and are signed so as to satisfy the Statute of Frauds,<sup>2</sup> constitute the contract, and, as such, must be produced in the first instance.<sup>3</sup> However this particular point may be ultimately determined, it seems to be quite clear, that if no notes have been transmitted to the principals, recourse may be had to the signed entry in the book kept by the broker,<sup>4</sup> or, indeed, to any other memorandum made by him as agent for both parties, which is sufficient to satisfy the statute.<sup>5</sup> In one case, where the contract was made through the medium of a broker, but the note delivered to the vendor was actually signed by the purchaser, Lord Ellenborough held,—and it would seem correctly,—that this note of itself constituted the contract, though it differed materially from the note which was sent to the purchaser.<sup>6</sup> Where, however, the transaction was an ordinary one of bought and sold notes, signed by the broker, which substantially differed from each other, the Privy Council held that no binding contract had been effected, although the purchaser had, on objection raised by the vendor to a particular word inserted in the sold note, struck out that word, and evidenced his consent to the erasure by affixing his initials thereto.<sup>1</sup>

§ 391. Whether, in the event of a material disagreement between the bought and sold notes, the broker's book may be resorted to, is a more difficult question. On two occasions, Lord Denman appears to have considered that such a course could not be pursued;<sup>2</sup> and Lord Abinger has expressed a similar opinion, though he has carefully confined his observations to a case where it cannot be shown that the broker's book was known to the parties.<sup>3</sup> On the other hand, Lord Wensleydale appears to have entertained serious doubts upon the subject, urging that the broker would scarcely be bound by his oath and bond to enter the terms of the contracts negotiated by him in his books, and to sign those books, if the entries so made by him were not intended to have a binding effect.<sup>4</sup> The force of this reasoning is now however neutralised, since even London brokers are no longer bound to keep books.<sup>5</sup> Still, it is probable that the doctrine supported by Lord Wensleydale will ultimately vendor having signed a note which differed from the one sent to him by the purchaser's broker, the court held that the validity of that note depended upon the question of fact, whether it was intended by both parties to be the contract, or whether the vendor only intended to be bound by it, provided the purchaser would sign a corresponding note.

prevail; and the more so, as the argument rejecting the broker's book, on the ground that the parties are ignorant of its contents, appears to be entitled to little weight; for, first, there is no necessity that they should be ignorant, but either of the principals may, if he think fit, demand to see the entry of the contract; secondly, if the broker perform his duties in so negligent a manner as to subject either of the parties to loss, he is responsible to the amount of the injury sustained; and, lastly, if this argument were to prevail, it might equally be applied to almost every case, where a contract is negotiated through the medium of an agent.

§ 392. Where a party wishes to enforce a contract made through a broker, it will be sufficient for him to produce the note in his possession, and to show that the broker has been employed in the transaction by his adversary; and this latter, if he seeks to rely on any variance between the bought and sold notes, must produce, as his evidence, the one that has been handed to himself.<sup>1</sup>

§ 393. The amount of variance that will render the contract nugatory cannot be expressly defined. In one case, where the bought note spoke of a brokerage of one per cent., and a deposit of fifteen per cent., and the sold note stated that the brokerage was ten shillings per cent., and omitted all mention of the deposit, Lord Denman ruled that the discrepancy was fatal, though with respect to the brokerage, one of the jury interpreted the notes as meaning that the broker should be paid by the buyer one per cent., and by the seller half per cent.<sup>2</sup> In another case, where Scotch iron was named in the bought note, and Dunlop's iron, which is Scotch iron, but not the only kind of Scotch iron, was specified in the sold note, the contract was held to be invalidated by the variance; <sup>3</sup> and the court arrived at a similar conclusion in a third case, where the sole difference between the bought and the sold notes was, that the one purported to deal with "Riga," and the other with "Petersburg," hemp.<sup>1</sup> It seems, however, that a mere clerical error, or even a mistake in a name, if productive of no loss, will not invalidate the sale.<sup>2</sup>

§ 394. With respect to notarial instruments, the general rule is that a duplicate made out any time from the original or protocol in the notarial book, is equivalent to an original drawn up at the time of the entry in the book.<sup>3</sup> If, therefore, a foreign bill of exchange be protested for non-payment, or if it be paid under protest for the honour of an indorser, the fact of the protest may be primarily established, not only by producing a formal instrument of protest, extended by the notary from his register at the date of the actual protest, but by putting in evidence a duplicate protest, even though it may have been drawn up after the commencement of the action, provided that the entries in the notary's book can be shown to have been made at the time when the transactions occurred.<sup>4</sup>

§ 395. The title of a person as executor or administrator might have been primarily proved under the old law in any one of the following ways :—namely, by producing either the probate or letters of administration, or an exemplification or certificate thereof granted by the Ecclesiastical Court,<sup>5</sup> or the Book of Acts in the Prerogative Office which directed the grant of the probate<sup>6</sup> or letters,<sup>7</sup> or an examined or certified copy of such book,<sup>8</sup> or, if no act book or other record were kept, even minutes of the proving of the will and sealing of probate, indorsed on the original will by the surrogate and registrar or deputy registrar of the Diocesan Court.<sup>1</sup> Since the 11th of January, 1858,<sup>2</sup> the Court of Probate has had jurisdiction over all matters testamentary; but as the statute which established that court, and the rules and orders which regulate its proceedings, are alike almost wholly silent on the subject of evidence, it is not easy to determine with precision how much of the law just referred to remains in force. An executor or administrator, however, may doubtless still prove his title, either by producing the probate or letters, or by an exemplification thereof granted by a registrar or district registrar of the Court of Probate.<sup>3</sup>

§ 396. The rule, which determines under what head of evidence deeds executed in duplicate are to be classed, appears to be this: When two or more parts are sealed and delivered by each party, —a practice which of late years has frequently prevailed,—they are denominated duplicate or triplicate originals,<sup>4</sup> and as such are considered to be primary evidence.<sup>5</sup> When, however, each part is executed by one party only, as often occurs in the case of leases, the two instruments are called counterparts, and each is alternately the best evidence as against the party sealing it, and those in privity with such party;<sup>6</sup> and secondary evidence of the contents of the other part.<sup>7</sup> Thus, if a landlord brings an action for rent,

With respect to the stamp, the counterpart sealed by the lessor is usually deemed the original; but that which is sealed by the lessee may be described in pleading as the "indenture," though stamped as a counterpart, provided the action be brought against the lessee.<sup>3</sup>

§ 397. On one or two occasions, where it was necessary to show that the plaintiff's ancestor had exercised acts of ownership over the property in question, counterparts of leases older than the period of living memory, and found in the ancestor's muniment room, have been admitted in evidence even against strangers, though they were executed by no one but the persons named as lessees, who were not shown to have actually held under them, and though no excuse was given for not producing the original leases sealed by the ancestor.<sup>4</sup> It is difficult to reconcile these decisions with strict principle, since the counterparts amounted, in fact, to no more than admissions by third parties that the ancestor was seised ; but the judges appear to have relaxed the rule, in consequence of the acknowledged difficulty of tracing acts of ownership after the lapse of many years ; and looking at the question in this light, few persons will probably feel inclined to quarrel with the doctrine as now established.

CHAPTER V.

SECONDARY EVIDENCE.

§ 398. IN the last chapter the rule was discussed which requires the production of the best attainable evidence, and an attempt was made to illustrate by examples the distinction between primary and secondary modes of proof. It remains to be seen upon what occasions secondary evidence will be received; and the first general rule on this subject is, that such evidence is inadmissible, until it be shown that the production of primary evidence is out of the party's power. It will be convenient to discuss this rule, and the exceptions to it, as they apply, first, to documentary evidence, and next to oral testimony; and with respect to documents, it will be found that proof of their contents may be established by secondary evidence, first, when the original writing is destroyed or lost; secondly, when its production is physically impossible, or at least highly inconvenient; thirdly, when the document is in the possession of the adverse party, who refuses, after notice, and in some cases without notice, to produce it; fourthly, when it is in the hands of a third party, who is not compellable by law to produce it, and who, being called as a witness with a subpoena duces tecum, relies upon his right to withhold it; fifthly, when the law raises a strong presumption in favour of the existence of the document; sixthly, when the papers are voluminous, and it is only necessary to prove their general results; and lastly, when the question arises upon the examination of a witness on the voire dire.

prove its destruction positively, or at least presumptively, as by showing that it has been thrown aside as useless,<sup>1</sup> or he must establish its loss, by proof that a search has been unsuccessfully made for it, in the place or places where it was most likely to be found. What degree of diligence is necessary in the search cannot easily be defined, as each case must depend much on its own peculiar circumstances;<sup>2</sup> but the party is generally expected to show, that he has, in good faith, exhausted in a reasonable degree all the sources of information and means of discovery, which the nature of the case would naturally suggest, and which were accessible to him.<sup>3</sup> As the object of the proof is merely to establish a reasonable presumption of the loss of the instrument, and as this is a preliminary inquiry addressed to the discretion of the judge,<sup>4</sup>—the party offering secondary evidence need not on ordinary occasions have made a search for the original document, as for stolen goods, nor be in a position to negative every possibility of its having been kept back.<sup>5</sup> If the document be important, and such as the owner may have an interest in keeping, or if any reason exist for suspecting that it has been fraudulently withheld, a very strict examination will properly be required; but if the paper be supposed to be of little or no value, a very slight degree of diligence will be demanded, as it will be aided by the presumption of destruction or loss, which that circumstance affords.<sup>6</sup>

in his possession, he must in general be served with a subpoena duces tecum, and be sworn to account for it;<sup>1</sup> since, so long as he is capable of being called as a witness, his declarations respecting it will in strictness be inadmissible,<sup>2</sup> and even after his death, this species of evidence, though admissible as tending to prove the diligence and extent of the search, must be received with great caution.<sup>3</sup> Still, on one occasion, where an apprentice shortly before his death had stated that his indenture had been given up to him after the expiration of the apprenticeship, and that he had burnt it, secondary evidence of its contents was received without any search having been made for it, as proof was given that the deed had not been executed in duplicate, that the master was dead, and that his executrix had declared that she knew nothing about the instrument.<sup>4</sup> This decision appears to have proceeded on the somewhat dubious ground, that if the statement of the apprentice was inadmissible, the indenture was not traced into his hands, and as the term of service had expired, no particular reason could be assigned why it should be in his custody, while, if the statement was receivable to show a possession of the deed by him, it further showed that search for it was unnecessary.<sup>5</sup> The second branch of this dilemma is unanswerable, but the first is open to much doubt; for even if the fact of the deed not being traced into the hands of the apprentice, could preclude the necessity of searching in that quarter,<sup>6</sup> it could not discharge the parties of laches, in having neither called the personal representative of the master, nor even examined his papers. Perhaps,

Wait*, 6 C. & P. 591, Alderson, B., held, that, in order to let in secondary evidence of the appointment of one of the defendants as overseer, it was sufficient to show that a witness had asked him for his appointment, when he stated that he had lost it, whereupon no search was made.

however, the case may best be supported, by considering that the evidence was admitted for the mere purpose of satisfying the conscience of a judge on a preliminary inquiry; and that, consequently, a looser rule was allowed to prevail than would have been applicable to the proof of the material facts.<sup>1</sup> Indeed, this distinction between evidence addressed to the judge and that submitted to the jury, has been adopted by the Court of Queen's Bench, which has gone the length of holding, that, in order to show that search has been made for a document, so as to let in secondary proof of its contents, hearsay evidence of the answers given by persons who were likely to have it in their custody ought to be received.<sup>2</sup>

§ 401. If the instrument ought to have been deposited in a public office, or other particular place, it will generally be deemed sufficient to have searched that place, without calling the party whose duty it was to have put it there, or any other person who may have had access to it. Thus, where it appeared that a parish indenture of apprenticeship had been given to a person since dead to take to the overseers, and a fruitless search was made for it in the parish chest, which was the proper repository for such instruments, secondary evidence was admitted, though none of the overseers were called, and no inquiry was made of the personal representative of the party, who ought to have delivered it to the parish officers.<sup>3</sup> So, where it was the duty of a paying clerk of a parish to deposit a certain cancelled cheque in a room of the workhouse, an application to the successor of this clerk for an inspection of the cheques in the room, and an ineffectual examination of several bundles, which were handed to the party searching by the successor, was deemed a sufficient search to let in secondary evidence, though no notice to produce had been served on the first clerk, he being the defendant in the cause, and though the person who succeeded him in the office was not called.<sup>4</sup> Again, secondary evidence of the contents of a warrant, issued by the defendant, has been received, on proof by the high constable, who levied under it, that he had deposited it in his office, and had sought for it there in vain, though he added that the town-clerk had access to the office, and it was objected that the defendant should have been served with a notice to produce the warrant, and the town-clerk with a subpoena duces tecum.<sup>1</sup>

§ 402. It may often be difficult to ascertain what is the proper custody of an instrument,<sup>2</sup> and on these occasions it will be always expedient, and sometimes necessary, to search several places. Thus, where a marriage settlement, after providing a portion for younger children, and vesting a legal term in trustees to secure it, reserved an ultimate remainder to the settlor's heir, it was held, that a search among the papers of the surviving younger child was insufficient to let in secondary evidence of its contents, and that the papers of the surviving trustee, and of the heir, should also have been examined.<sup>3</sup> Again, an expired indenture of apprenticeship remains sometimes with the master, sometimes with the apprentice; but as the apprentice appears to have the greatest interest in its preservation,<sup>4</sup> stricter inquiry should be made of him than of the master, though, in the absence of positive proof respecting the possession, caution would suggest, what strict law might not require,<sup>5</sup> a search among the papers of both. The lessor and the lessee appear to be equally entitled to the custody of an expired lease; for, whether the term has come to an end by efflux of time or by forfeiture, the lessee, for a time at least, will have a right to keep the deed, since he may have occasion to use it in an action of covenant against the lessor; but, after a considerable interval, it will frequently be found in the landlord's possession, as constituting one of the muniments of his title.<sup>6</sup> Under these circumstances, prudence dictates an application to both parties, whenever it may be necessary to prove the loss of such an instrument, though it has never been expressly decided that a search among the muniments of the lessor alone would not let in secondary evidence ; and Mr. Justice Bayley, on one occasion, seems to have thought that an examination of the lessee's papers would not be absolutely necessary.<sup>1</sup>

§ 403. The legal custody of a document appointing an overseer is in that officer, he being the person most interested in it, and requiring its production as a sanction for those acts which he may be called upon to do under its authority. In the absence, therefore, of proof that the parish officers have the actual custody of such an instrument, it will not suffice to give them notice to produce it, but before secondary evidence can be received it will be necessary to call the overseer himself.<sup>2</sup> In a case before Vice-Chancellor Wigram, it appeared that a solicitor, who had prepared an agreement between the plaintiff and defendant, had sent it after execution to the defendant by his clerk. This clerk was not called, having quitted the service of the solicitor a long time back ; but the defendant's clerk stated that he had searched for the deed in his counting-house, where the transactions to which it referred were all carried on, and where books containing entries relating to these transactions were kept. His Honour, on this state of facts, expressed no opinion as to the effect of the absence of the solicitor's clerk, but referred the case back to the Master, in order that a further search might be made at the defendant's private residence, since it did not appear that his clerk, who had been actively concerned in the transactions in question, had ever seen the deed at the counting-house.<sup>3</sup>

Held insufficient, per Best, C. J.

§ 404. If the party entitled to the custody of a document be dead, inquiries should generally be made of his personal representatives, and if the document relate to the real estate, of the heir-at-law also; but these steps will not be necessary, should it appear that another party is in possession of the papers of the deceased. Where, therefore, the master of an apprentice, being possessed of the indenture, failed, and an attorney took the management of the affairs, and the custody of his papers, a search among these papers by the attorney, after the master's death, was held sufficient to let in secondary evidence of the deed of apprenticeship, though no inquiries had been made of the master's widow.<sup>1</sup>

§ 405. The law does not require that the search should have been recent, or made for the purposes of the cause; and therefore, where it was made amongst the proper papers three years before the trial, this was held sufficient, though it certainly would have been more satisfactory had the papers been again examined.<sup>2</sup> If the instrument were executed in duplicate, or triplicate, &c., the loss of all the parts must be proved, in order to let in secondary evidence of the contents;<sup>3</sup> and, in all cases, before such evidence will be admissible, it must be shown that the original instrument was duly executed, and was otherwise genuine.<sup>4</sup> If the instrument were of such a nature as to have acquired attestation,<sup>5</sup> the attesting witness must, if known, be called, or in the event of his death, his handwriting must be proved, precisely in the same manner as if the deed itself had been produced; though, if it cannot be discovered who the attesting witness was, this strictness of proof will, from necessity, be waived. In the absence of evidence to the contrary, the court will presume that the instrument was duly stamped.<sup>6</sup>

§ 406. The question has often been mooted in the Court of Probate as to how far the judge is authorised to grant probate, where the will itself has, after the death of the testator, been irretrievably lost or destroyed; and the decisions seem to go thus far, that, if the substance of the will can be distinctly ascertained, either by the original instructions, or by a copy of the will, or even by the recollection of witnesses who have heard it read, probate may be granted of a copy embodying such substance.<sup>1</sup> In all cases, however, of this nature, it is obviously necessary that the jurisdiction of the court should be exercised with the greatest possible caution; and the judge will scarcely feel justified in acting on the evidence, unless it be of the most cogent and irrefragable character, not only free from suspicion in its sources, but exact and certain in its conclusions.<sup>2</sup>

§ 407. Notwithstanding the rule, which in general enables parties to prove, by secondary evidence, the contents of documents lost or destroyed, on some occasions it was necessary, prior to the year 1854, to produce the written instruments themselves. Thus, no action at law could be sustained on a lost bill of exchange, promissory-note, or cheque, or on the respective considerations, provided the instrument had been originally drawn payable to order, or bearer, and provided the fact of the loss had been specially pleaded.<sup>3</sup> As this law, however, was found to occasion great inconvenience to the payee of a lost note, who, in order to recover payment, was compelled to have recourse to a court of equity,<sup>1</sup> it has been materially modified by the Common Law Procedure Act of 1854,<sup>2</sup> which in § 87 enacts, that "In case of any action founded upon a bill of exchange or other negotiable instrument," which last words will include a bank note,<sup>3</sup> "it shall be lawful for the court or a judge to order that the loss of such instrument shall not be set up, provided an indemnity is given, to the satisfaction of the court or judge, or a master, against the claims of any other person upon such negotiable instrument."<sup>4</sup> If the payee of a lost note can show that the instrument was never negotiable, as having been originally made payable to himself alone, he cannot, as it would seem, be called upon to give an indemnity under this clause, but the action at law will be sustainable, either on the instrument itself, or on the consideration; because, in such case, the defendant cannot be rendered liable to pay the amount a second time.<sup>5</sup>

§ 408. Secondly, the contents of writings may be proved by secondary evidence, when their production is either physically impossible, or highly inconvenient. Thus,<sup>6</sup> inscriptions on walls and fixed tables, mural monuments, gravestones, surveyors' marks on boundary trees, notices warning trespassers affixed on boards, and the like, may be proved by secondary evidence, since they cannot conveniently, if at all, be produced in court.<sup>7</sup> A remarkable illustration of this rule was furnished in the case of a man, who was convicted of writing a libel on the wall of the Liverpool gaol, on mere proof of his handwriting.<sup>1</sup> But, in order to let in secondary evidence, it must clearly appear that the document or writing is affixed to the freehold, and cannot easily be removed; and therefore, where a notice was merely suspended to the wall of an office by a nail, it was considered necessary to produce it at the trial.<sup>2</sup> On one occasion, the Committee for Privileges in the House of Lords received in evidence, as proof in a pedigree,<sup>3</sup> a copy of a plate of the arms of the Knights of the Garter, which had been put up in the Chapel Royal at Windsor in the reign of Henry V., and which, being fastened to the building only by screws, was physically removable; but this case seems to rest, at least partly, on the ground that the plate in question could not have been removed without a special warrant from the Queen.<sup>4</sup> If a document be deposited in a foreign country, and the laws or established usage of that country will not permit its removal, secondary evidence of the contents will be admitted, because in that case, as in the case of mural inscriptions, it is not in the power of the party to produce the original.<sup>5</sup>

removal, especially if the documents were wanted in two or more places about the same time,—and partly, because of the public character of the facts recorded, and the consequent facility of detection of any fraud or error in the copy.<sup>1</sup>

§ 410. Thirdly, when the document is in the possession of the adversary, who withholds it at the trial, secondary evidence of its contents will be admitted, provided that a notice to produce the original has been duly served, where such notice is requisite.<sup>2</sup> In the application of this rule, no distinction is recognised between civil and criminal cases; but in either mode of proceeding, in order to render the notice available, it must be first shown that the instrument is in the hands, or under the control, of the party required to produce it.<sup>3</sup> Of this fact very slight evidence will raise a sufficient presumption, where the document exclusively belongs to him, or regularly ought to be in his custody according to the course of business; and therefore, where a bankruptcy certificate was proved to have been obtained for the defendant, the court presumed that it had come into his possession.<sup>4</sup> So, if papers were last seen in the hands of the defendant, it lies upon him to trace them out of his possession,<sup>5</sup> and for this purpose he may interpose with evidence while the plaintiff's case is proceeding; and, as such evidence is submitted to the judge alone, its admission does not give the plaintiff's counsel a right to reply to the jury.<sup>6</sup> It would seem that, where a party has notice to produce a particular instrument traced to his possession, he cannot object to parol evidence of its contents, on the ground that, previous to the notice, he had ceased to have any control over it, unless he has stated this fact to the opposite party, and has pointed out to him the person to whom he delivered it;<sup>1</sup> neither can he escape the effect of the notice, by afterwards voluntarily parting with the instrument, which it directs him to produce.

§ 411. If the instrument be in the possession of a person in privity with the party, such as his banker,<sup>2</sup> agent, servant, deputy, or the like, such person need not be served with a subpoena duces tecum, or even be called as a witness, but a notice given to the party himself will suffice.<sup>4</sup> Thus, a notice to a shipowner to produce papers, though the captain has possession of them for his own protection,<sup>5</sup>—or a notice to a sheriff to produce a warrant, which is shown to have been returned to the under-sheriff during the time that the sheriff remained in office,<sup>6</sup>—will justify the admission of secondary evidence. Where a document deposited in a court of equity by a party to a suit, and scheduled in his answer, had been ordered to be delivered to him, it was held to be sufficiently within his control to let in secondary evidence after notice to produce, though it appeared that, at the time of the trial, the document was still in the hands of an officer of the court.<sup>7</sup> But though, in order to render the notice available, the party need not have actual possession of the instrument, he must have such a right to it as would entitle him, not merely to inspect, but to retain it; and, therefore, where it was held by a stakeholder between the defendant and a stranger to the cause,<sup>8</sup> or where it was delivered to a third person, under whom the defendant justified in an action of trespass, and by whose directions he acted,<sup>9</sup> parol evidence of its contents was rejected, notwithstanding that a notice to produce had been duly served on the defendant.

§ 412. The notice may be given either verbally or in writing; <sup>1</sup> and if in the latter form, it may be directed to the party or to his attorney, and may be served on either; <sup>2</sup> indeed, it will be sufficient to leave the notice with a servant of the party at his dwelling-house, <sup>3</sup> or with a clerk at the attorney's office; and where the attorney has been changed, a notice served on the first attorney before the change will suffice; for otherwise the effect of the notice might be easily evaded by changing the attorney on the eve of the trial. <sup>4</sup> A notice duly served on the party will not be rendered invalid by a subsequent bad service on the attorney. <sup>5</sup>

§ 413. It may be difficult to lay down any general rule as to what the notice ought to contain, since much must depend on the particular circumstances of each case; but thus much is clear, first, that no misstatement or inaccuracy in the notice will be deemed material, if it be not really calculated to mislead the opponent; <sup>6</sup> and next, that it is not necessary, by condescending minutely to dates, contents, parties, &c., to specify the precise documents intended. Indeed, it may be dangerous to do so, since if any material errors were to creep into the particulars, the party sought to be affected by the notice might urge, with possible success, that he had been misled thereby. If enough is stated on the notice to induce the party to believe that a particular instrument will be called for, this will be sufficient. <sup>7</sup> Thus a notice to produce "all letters written by the plaintiff to the defendant, relating to the matters in dispute in the action,"<sup>1</sup> or "all letters written to or received by the plaintiff between the years 1837 and 1841, both inclusive, by and from the defendants, or either of them, or any person in their behalf; and also all books, papers, &c., relating to the subject matter of this cause,"<sup>2</sup> has been held sufficient to let in parol evidence of a particular letter not otherwise specified. In these cases the names of the parties by and to whom the letters were addressed appeared on the notice, and perhaps this circumstance sufficiently distinguishes them from an older decision,<sup>3</sup> where a notice to produce "all letters, papers, and documents, touching or concerning the bill of exchange mentioned in the declaration, and the debt sought to be recovered,"<sup>4</sup> was held too vague to admit secondary proof of a notice of dishonour sent by plaintiff to defendant. The authority, however, of this last case has been considerably shaken, if not entirely overruled, by a subsequent decision of the Court of Queen's Bench, where, in an action for work and labour, a notice to produce "all accounts relating to the matters in question in this cause," was held to point out with sufficient precision a particular account relating to a small part of the work, though it appeared that many such accounts for different parts of the work had been rendered by the plaintiff to the defendant.<sup>5</sup> The case of Jones v. Edwards<sup>6</sup> is not affected by this decision. That was an action against four defendants, as owners of a sloop, to recover an account for warehousing the rigging of the vessel. In order to prove that one of the defendants was a joint owner, the plaintiff called for a letter, which was stated to have been written nine years before by this defendant to the son of another defendant, and relied upon a "notice to produce letters and copies of letters, and all books relating to the cause." The Court decided that the notice was too uncertain, and no sensible man could entertain a different opinion.

§ 414. In one case, where the notice misdescribed the title of the cause, it was held to be invalid ;<sup>1</sup> but as the strict application of this rule, in cases where it is evident that the party served has not been misled, might be productive of serious injustice, it is hoped that, at the present day, it would not be allowed to prevail, unless the misdescription were of a flagrant nature. Indeed, the Court of Exchequer has thrown out an intimation to this effect; for where a notice was objected to on the ground that it was entitled (by mistake) in a wrong court, Mr. Baron Alderson discountenanced the objection, saying, " One does not know where we are to stop. Would the notice be bad if one of the names was spelt wrong? . . . At the time of the decision in Harvey v. Morgan, the courts were much more strict than now as to matters of this nature."<sup>2</sup>

§ 415. As to the time and place of the service, no precise rule can be laid down, except that it must be such as to enable the party, under the known circumstances of the case, to comply with the call.<sup>3</sup> If the person to be served, whether client or attorney, dwell in another town than that in which the trial is had, he must generally be served before the commission day,<sup>4</sup> and if the service be postponed till he has left home to attend the court, it will be insufficient.<sup>5</sup> In town causes, however, and in country causes where the attorney lives in the assize town, a shorter notice will be required, and provided the documents be such as may reasonably be presumed to be in the attorney's possession, a service on him, or at his office, early in the evening of the day preceding the trial, will in general be sufficient;<sup>1</sup> though, if they would probably be in the client's custody,—as, for instance, if they were a tradesman's books,<sup>2</sup> or if they were letters or papers not obviously connected with the cause,—such a service would be too late, since the attorney should have sufficient time to communicate with his client for the purpose of procuring the documents required.<sup>3</sup> If a party be served with notice sufficiently early to enable him to produce the document, it makes no difference that at the time of the service the cause is part heard.<sup>4</sup>

§ 416. If the party served can prove that his papers are in a foreign country, or at such a distance from the place of trial as to render it impossible for him to produce them under an ordinary notice, such a notice will be inoperative; but the courts are very properly inclined to favour the sufficiency of the notice, whenever the circumstances of the case will warrant them in so doing. Thus, where the party had gone abroad, leaving the cause in the hands of his attorney, it was presumed that he had left with him all papers material to the cause, and, consequently, a notice served on the attorney the evening next but one before the trial,

Abinger to be insufficient, the notice being left at the attorney's office a few minutes before nine on the evening preceding the trial, and the attorney having at that time gone home. So, in an action on a bill of exchange, where notice to produce the bill was put into the letter-box of the office of the plaintiff's attorney, in London, at half-past eight on the evening before the cause was tried at the Middlesex sittings, it was held to be too late, though the plaintiff also lived in London; Lawrence v. Clark, 14 M. & W. 250. If the trial is to take place on the Monday, a service on the Sunday will not do; and perhaps a service on a Sunday would in any event be considered irregular and bad. was held to be sufficient.<sup>1</sup> So, a four days' notice, given to the defendant to produce letters written by him to his partner in New South Wales, was considered good, where long litigation on the subject of them made it presumable that they had been remitted to this country.<sup>2</sup> It has even been held, that a similar notice to a foreign defendant was sufficient, though the letters required had been addressed to him eighteen years before at his residence abroad. In that case, the action had commenced seven months before the trial; and though it was objected that the defendant had had no time to procure the original papers to be transmitted from his own country, where it was to be presumed they had been left, Chief Justice Abbott admitted secondary evidence of their contents, observing that it would lead to great inconvenience and delay, if trials were allowed to be postponed upon such an objection.<sup>3</sup>

§ 417. The party who seeks the production of papers must not put his adversary to needless trouble and expense. Therefore, where a defendant's attorney, having been served in Essex with notice to produce certain deeds, fetched them from London, and on the commission day was served with a fresh notice to produce another deed, upon which he stated that the document was in town, where he had already been once, but that it should be forthcoming at the trial if the plaintiff would pay the expenses of a messenger, which offer was declined, the court held that the defendant was justified in not complying with the notice, and that secondary evidence was inadmissible.<sup>4</sup> If a party, on being served with a notice to produce a document, states that it is not in existence, parol proof of its contents will be received, and no objection can be taken to the lateness of the service.<sup>5</sup> It may here be added, that a notice to produce certain documents

§ 418. The mode of proving that a notice to produce has been duly served is now partially regulated by § 119 of "The Common Law Procedure Act, 1852,"<sup>2</sup> which enacts, that "An affidavit of the attorney in the cause, or his clerk, of the service of any notice to produce, in respect of which notice to admit shall have been given,<sup>3</sup> and of the time when it was served, with a copy of such notice to produce annexed to such affidavit, shall be sufficient evidence of the service of the original of such notice, and of the time when it was served."

§ 419. In seven cases notice to produce is not necessary. The first is, where the instrument in the possession of the adversary, and that tendered in proof, are either duplicate originals,<sup>4</sup> or are counterparts, and the part offered in evidence has been executed by the adversary, or by some person through whom he claims. Here no notice is necessary, because, as before stated, the instrument produced is considered, not as secondary, but as primary evidence.<sup>5</sup>

rienced inconvenience attendant on a strict observance of the rule requiring notice;<sup>1</sup> partly, because the secondary evidence that is usually offered of a notice is a copy of the paper sent, which partakes in great measure of the character of a duplicate original;<sup>2</sup> and, chiefly, because it constantly happens that the opposite party is well aware, from the nature of the suit, that he will be charged with the possession of the original document.<sup>3</sup> On one or other of these grounds, it has been held, that, in order to let in proof by a copy, if not any species of secondary evidence, no notice is required to produce a notice to quit;<sup>4</sup> a notice of dishonour,<sup>5</sup> provided the action be brought upon the bill, but not otherwise;<sup>6</sup> notices of action, or written demands, which are necessary to entitle the plaintiff to recover;<sup>7</sup> and bills of costs of solicitors, attorneys, and parliamentary agents, delivered pursuant to statute.<sup>8</sup> principal, a notice to produce this notice was held necessary by Lord Ellenborough, on the ground that it was not a mere notice, but in the nature of a statement of account between the plaintiff and the principal.<sup>1</sup> Whether this case would now be considered a binding authority, may be well questioned, since, in principle, it is difficult to distinguish it from several of the cases cited above, in which the notice to produce has been deemed unnecessary. But, be this as it may, the judges have determined, in a case where two parties had become sureties, by a joint and several bond, for the payment, within one month after notice should have been given to them, of such sum as should be due from their principal, that the service of notice upon one of the parties could not be proved in an action brought against the other, by producing the duplicate of the notice, but the first party should have been subpoenaed to produce the original, or to account for its non-production.<sup>2</sup> Indeed, the exception would seem to be always inapplicable to cases in which the notice has been served on a third person.<sup>3</sup>

§ 422. Thirdly, if, from the nature of the action, or indictment, or from the form of the pleadings, the defendant must know that he will be charged with the possession of an instrument, and be called upon to produce it, no notice to produce need be served upon him.<sup>4</sup> Thus, in an action of trover for converting a bond, a bill of exchange, or other writing,<sup>5</sup> or in a prosecution for stealing any document,<sup>6</sup> the counsel for the plaintiff or the Crown may at once produce secondary evidence of its contents, even though the defendant should offer to produce the document itself;<sup>7</sup> and this exception has been recognised in an action on contract against a carrier for the non-delivery of written instruments,<sup>8</sup> as also in indictments for conducting a traitorous correspondence.<sup>1</sup> It has, however, been held inapplicable on a charge of forging a deed;<sup>2</sup> and no doubt can be entertained that an indictment for arson, with intent to defraud an insurance office, does not convey such a notice that the policy will be required, as to dispense with a formal notice to produce.<sup>3</sup> So, if the maker of a note or cheque, or the acceptor of a bill, does not, as defendant in an action, deny by his plea the making or acceptance, the plaintiff, who is not bound to produce the instrument as part of his case,<sup>4</sup> since it is admitted on the record, may object to the defendant's giving secondary evidence of its contents, for the purpose even of identification, unless a notice to produce has been duly served,<sup>5</sup> or unless the instrument is shown to be in court.<sup>6</sup>

§ 425. Sixthly, notice will not be required, either where the adverse party or his attorney has admitted the loss of the document, for in such case the notice would be nugatory,<sup>2</sup> or it seems, where the party in possession of the writing might himself give secondary evidence of its contents without producing it, as, for instance, if it be an inscription or notice attached to the freehold.<sup>3</sup> A party, however, cannot under this exception call witnesses to prove the destruction of a document that has been traced into the hands of his opponent, and then show its contents by secondary proof without serving a notice to produce, because, notwithstanding evidence to the contrary, the document may still be in existence, and, at any rate, the opponent may dispute the fact of its destruction.<sup>4</sup>

§ 426. Lastly, a notice to produce is rendered unnecessary by proof that the adverse party, or his attorney, has the original instrument in court; for the object of the notice is not, as was formerly thought,<sup>5</sup> to give the opposite party an opportunity of providing the proper testimony to support or impeach the document; but it is merely to enable him to produce it, if he likes, at the trial, and thus to secure the best evidence of its contents.<sup>6</sup> The question is yet undecided, as to whether an attorney would be ordered to search among his papers, if, on being called by his client's opponent to state whether he had a particular document in court, he were to assert that he did not know whether he had brought it with him or not, and that he did not intend to ascertain that fact, unless he were compelled to do so by the judge.

§ 427. Secondary evidence is, in the fourth place, admissible, when a document is in the hands of a stranger, who is not compellable by law to produce it, and who refuses to do so, either when summoned as a witness with a subpoena duces tecum,<sup>1</sup> or when sworn as a witness without a subpoena, if he admits that he has the document in court.<sup>2</sup> In applying this rule it must be carefully borne in mind, that the mere disobedience of a person served with a subpoena duces tecum will not render admissible secondary evidence of the contents of the document which he is called upon to produce;<sup>3</sup> but the witness must also be justified in refusing the production, for otherwise the party will have no remedy, except as against him.<sup>4</sup> The reason why the rule is recognised at all is the same as that which admits parol proof, when the adversary, after notice, refuses to produce a deed in his possession,—namely, that the party offering secondary evidence has done all in his power to obtain the original document.<sup>5</sup> If therefore a solicitor refuses to produce a deed as claiming a lien upon it, secondary evidence of its contents cannot be received, provided the party tendering such evidence be the person liable to pay the solicitor's charges.<sup>6</sup> So, also, if an attorney, who is not acting under special instructions from his client, declines to produce an instrument on the ground of privilege, it may be very questionable whether the client must not be subpoenaed, in order to ascertain whether he also relies on his right to withhold the deed;<sup>7</sup> and this course will assuredly be prudent, inasmuch as the privilege is, in strictness, not that of the attorney, but that of the client. If, indeed, the attorney can undertake to swear that his client has instructed him not to produce the instrument, it will not be necessary to subpoena the client; for in such a case the court would very properly assume that the client, if called, would continue to be of the same mind.<sup>1</sup>

his client, and which his client has the right to keep back;<sup>1</sup> but, in this case, as has just been noticed, it by no means necessarily follows that, in the event of the client himself not being summoned, secondary evidence will be admissible.

§ 429. The rule exempting witnesses from producing title-deeds has been applied to a will, under which the witness claimed as devisee, though it was suggested that this will extended to personalty as well as to realty, and, therefore, ought to have been deposited in the Ecclesiastical Court, where the public might have had access to it.<sup>2</sup> Still, unless it appears that the title of the person possessing the document will in some way be effected by its production, the rule will not prevail;<sup>3</sup> and, therefore, in an action of ejectment, where the title of the lessor of the plaintiff was disputed, the solicitor of a gentleman, who had been in treaty with him for the purchase of the property, but which treaty had gone off, was allowed to produce on behalf of the defendant the abstract that had been delivered to his client, as furnishing secondary evidence of the contents of the deeds relating to the property, which the lessor of the plaintiff, after notice, had refused to produce.<sup>4</sup>

§ 430. Again, the mere circumstance, that the production of the document may render the witness liable to a civil action, does not come within the protection of the rule. Thus, in an action of ejectment, in which the lessor of the plaintiff claimed as devisee in remainder, and the defendant held under an invalid lease made by the late tenant for life, a witness, who was an executor and legatee of the late tenant for life, was compelled to produce his testator's rent-book, for the purpose of enabling the lessor of the plaintiff to identify the lands in question with the lands originally devised, though the witness, as executor, was bound to indemnify the defendant from all loss he might sustain from an adverse verdict, under a covenant contained in the lease granted by the late tenant for life.<sup>1</sup> Where a witness, who was steward of a borough, and attorney for the lord, declined to produce certain old precepts, books of presentment, and a case, relative to his office, on which the opinion of counsel had been taken by a former steward, saying that he held them as attorney for the lord, and that their production would prejudice his client's interest, Lord Denman decided that he was bound to produce the precepts and presentments, they being public documents, but that the case and opinion might be withheld.<sup>2</sup>

§ 431.<sup>3</sup> Fifthly, in consequence of the strong presumption, which arises from the undisturbed exercise of a public office, that the appointment to it is valid, the law does not in general require that the written appointments of public officers should be produced, but it will be sufficient to show that such officers have acted in an official capacity.<sup>4</sup>

§ 432.<sup>5</sup> A sixth relaxation of the rule demanding primary proof has been admitted, where the evidence required is the result of voluminous facts, or of the inspection of many books and papers, the examination of which could not conveniently take place in court.<sup>6</sup> Thus, if bills of exchange have been drawn between particular parties in one invariable mode, this may be proved by the testimony of a witness conversant with their habits of business, and speaking generally of the fact, without producing the bills; though, if the mode of dealing has not been uniform, the case does not fall within this exception, but is governed by the

The rules of pleading have, for a similar reason, been made to yield to public convenience in the administration of justice; and a general allegation is frequently allowed, "when the matters to be pleaded tend to infiniteness and multiplicity, whereby the rolls shall be incumbered with the length thereof." Mints v. Bethil, Cro. Eliz. 749; Steph. Pl. 392—396. Courts of Equity admit the same exception in regard to parties to bills, where they are numerous, on the like grounds of convenience. Story, Eq. rule requiring the production of the writings.<sup>1</sup> So, a witness who has inspected the accounts of the parties, though he may not give evidence of their particular contents, will be allowed to speak to the general balance without producing the accounts.<sup>2</sup> And, where the question turns upon the solvency of a party at a particular time, the general result of an examination of his books and securities may be stated in like manner.<sup>3</sup> This exception, however, will not enable a witness to state the general contents of a number of letters received by him from one of the parties in the cause, though such letters have since been destroyed, if the object of the examination be to elicit from the witness the impression which they produced on his mind, with reference to the degree of friendship subsisting between the writer and a third party.<sup>4</sup> The distinction between this and the preceding cases is obvious; since, in those, the fact in question was one, the truth of which simply depended on the honesty of the witness, whereas here, not only his honesty, but his taste and feelings were involved; and he might, from perusing the letters, conscientiously draw a very different inference as to their legitimate construction from that which would be drawn by an unbiassed jury.

§ 433. Secondary evidence is admissible in the examination of a witness on the voire dire, and in preliminary inquiries of the same nature. But as this rule, owing to the modern improvements in the law of evidence on the subject of the competency of witnesses, has now become practically inoperative, further reference to it here is deemed unnecessary.<sup>5</sup>

§ 434. Passing now to the consideration of the circumstances, under which secondary evidence of oral testimony will be received, and bearing in mind the broad proposition before stated,<sup>1</sup> that such proof is only admissible where the production of primary evidence is out of the party's power, it may be advanced as a general rule of law, that where a witness has given his testimony under oath in a judicial proceeding, in which the adverse litigant had the power to cross-examine, the testimony so given, will, if the witness himself cannot be called, be admitted in any subsequent suit between the same parties, or those claiming under them, provided it relate to the same subject, or substantially involve the same material questions.<sup>2</sup> In discussing the effect and extent of this rule, which is recognised by courts of equity<sup>3</sup> as well as by courts of law, it seems almost needless to observe, that, in order to render admissible secondary evidence of the testimony of a witness, it must be proved that the witness was duly sworn in some judicial proceeding, to the authority of which the party, against whom his testimony is offered, was legally bound to submit, and in which he might have exercised the right of cross-examination; for, if this were not the case, the preposterous consequence would follow, that secondary evidence of testimony might be received under circumstances that would exclude the testimony itself. If, therefore, it should appear that depositions were taken, either by parties not legally authorised to take them,<sup>4</sup> or without the sanction of an oath or affirmation, or in the absence of the party against whom they are offered,<sup>5</sup> when, as in most criminal investigations,<sup>6</sup> his presence was requisite, they cannot be received.<sup>7</sup>

§ 435. But although the party, against whom depositions are offered in evidence, must have had an opportunity of being present at the examination, and of cross-examining the witnesses,<sup>1</sup>—and therefore, if a commission be executed without any notice, or without a sufficient notice,<sup>2</sup> being given to the opposite party, to enable him, if he pleases, to put cross-interrogatories, the depositions will be rejected,<sup>3</sup>—yet, it is by no means requisite that he should exercise that power; and if notice has been given to him of the time and place of the examination, and he neither intimates any wish to cross-examine, nor applies to the court to enlarge the time for that purpose, it will be presumed that he has acted advisedly, and the depositions will be received.<sup>4</sup> So, where a defendant, after joining the plaintiff in obtaining a commission to examine witnesses upon interrogatories, gave notice that he declined to proceed with the examination; whereupon the plaintiff sent him word that he should apply for a commission ex parte, which he accordingly did: the court held that the examinations taken under this order were admissible in evidence, although the defendant had received no notice of the time and place of taking them.<sup>5</sup>

§ 436.<sup>6</sup> The admissibility of this evidence seems to turn, rather on the right to cross-examine, than upon the precise identity, either of the parties or of the points in issue, in the two proceedings. Therefore, where a witness testified in a suit, wherein A. and several others were plaintiffs and B. defendant, his testimony was, after his death, held admissible in a subsequent action relating to the same matter, brought by B. against A. alone.<sup>7</sup> And though the two trials were not between the same parties, yet, if the second trial is between those who represent the former parties, and claim through them by some title acquired subsequently to the first trial, the evidence is admissible.<sup>1</sup> Again, if in a dispute respecting lands any fact comes directly in issue, the testimony given to that fact is admissible to prove the same point in another action between the same parties or their privies, though the last suit relate to other lands.<sup>2</sup> So, in criminal cases, a deposition taken on a charge either of assault and robbery, or of stabbing, or doing grievous bodily harm, can, after the death of the witness, be read upon a trial for murder, where the two charges relate to the same transaction;<sup>3</sup> and, indeed, if this were not the law, the depositions of the deceased would, in all cases of homicide, be most improperly excluded.<sup>4</sup> In one case,<sup>5</sup> where a prisoner, who had been summarily convicted of an assault, was, in consequence of the death of the party struck, subsequently indicted for murder, the convicting magistrate was permitted to state what the deceased had sworn in the prisoner's presence, the examination not having been reduced into writing; but the learned judge appears to have received the evidence, not as proving the facts stated, but as producing an answer from the prisoner.

§ 437. If the point in issue, though very similar, was so far different in the two proceedings, that the witness, who was called to prove or disprove the issue in the former, need not have been fully cross-examined in regard to the matters in controversy in the latter, his deposition, if tendered on the second trial, will be excluded; and on this ground it has been held—though, perhaps, with questionable propriety—that a deposition taken on a charge of assault could not afterwards be received on an indictment for wounding.<sup>1</sup> Again,<sup>2</sup> it has been held in America, that where the issue in one action had been upon a common or free fishery, and that in another action was upon a several fishery, evidence of what a witness, since deceased, had sworn upon the former trial, was inadmissible.<sup>3</sup>

§ 438. In stating that this rule mainly depends on the right of cross-examination, care must be taken to guard against the error of imagining that, whenever a party has had the right of cross-examining a witness, he will be liable to have the statement of that witness adduced against him in any subsequent action. This will be so only in the event of his opponent being the same in both suits; <sup>4</sup> because, the right to use evidence, other than admissions, being co-extensive with the liability to be bound thereby, the adversary in the second suit has no power to offer evidence in his own favour, which, had it been tendered against him, would have been clearly inadmissible.<sup>5</sup> On the same ground of want of reciprocity, it has been twice held, that, on an issue from Chancery between A. and B., depositions taken under the old system, and produced by B. in an equity suit of C. against B., could not be read as part of A.'s evidence, though the question in both suits was precisely the same.<sup>6</sup> As these depositions, however, had been used by the party himself against whom they were offered in evidence, they were clearly receivable as admissions, in spite of a want of mutuality. The cases, therefore, in which they were rejected can no longer be relied on as law, since they rest, in fact, on a misapprehension of the old practice in Chancery with respect to the non-publication of depositions prior to the hearing.<sup>7</sup> The courts of common law erroneously imagined that a party, who,

prior to the 1st of November, 1852,<sup>1</sup> used depositions in equity, did not know beforehand what they were, and therefore was no further bound by their contents, than he would have been by the vivâ voce testimony of a witness whom he might have called at Nisi Prius.<sup>2</sup>

§ 439. It has already been stated that secondary evidence of oral testimony cannot be received so long as the witness himself can be called; but an attempt has been made in equity to engraft an exception on this wise rule, whenever depositions have been taken against a party in one suit, who is also a party to a second suit, wherein substantially the same questions arise. The case in which this point was mooted was that of Blaggrave v. Blaggrave.<sup>3</sup> There, a person was tenant for life of certain real and personal estate. Two suits were instituted against him in respect of alleged mismanagement of the property, the one being commenced by the tenant for life in remainder, and referring only to the real estate, the other being commenced by the first tenant in tail, and embracing both the real and the personal estate. The objects sought in each suit, though not entirely identical, were to a great extent the same. Under these circumstances it was proposed, on the authority of Nevil v. Johnson,<sup>4</sup> Barton v. Palmes,<sup>5</sup> Byrne v. Frere,<sup>6</sup> and particularly, the City of London v. Perkins,<sup>7</sup> to read as against the defendant in the second suit the depositions that had been taken against him in the first, without any proof that the witnesses were dead, or otherwise incapable of being examined. Vice-Chancellor Knight Bruce, however, very properly held that this course could not be pursued; and his decision would not have deserved any notice, had it not been that his Honour, while pronouncing his judgment, appeared to recognise the case of the City of London v. Perkins, as an authority to a certain extent for the doctrine propounded by the plaintiff's counsel. Now, it is submitted that this is an entire mistake, though naturally occasioned by the imperfect manner in which the case has been reported. The real facts were these. The City of London, having filed a bill against Messrs. Perkins to recover certain tonnage dues under an alleged custom, claimed to read, as evidence of reputation with respect to the custom, certain depositions which had been taken by them in two former suits for the recovery of the same species of tonnage against two other defendants. The Court of Exchequer rejected this proof on the ground that the deaths of the witnesses were not shown by "the depositions taken in the cause;" and they refused to allow the plaintiffs to prove by vivâ voce testimony or by affidavit that the witnesses were in fact dead. The plaintiffs appealed, and prayed, among other things, that the order of the court below should be reversed, and that they might be at liberty to read the depositions; whereupon, the House of Lords, without granting or alluding to the last paragraph of the prayer, gave judgment that the order be reversed.<sup>1</sup> It is obvious, therefore, that this case does not decide that depositions can in any event be read in evidence, where the witnesses are themselves capable of being called. Neither can such a doctrine be supported by any of the three other cases cited by the plaintiff's counsel in Blagrove v. Blagrove.<sup>2</sup> In Byrne v. Frere,<sup>3</sup> it is clear that the witnesses were dead, and there is nothing whatever to show that they were alive, either in Nevil v. Johnson,<sup>4</sup> or in Barton v. Palmes.<sup>5</sup> These last two cases were decided at the commencement of the last century by a judge of no very exalted reputation, Sir Nathan Wright, and are, moreover, so wretchedly reported as to be utterly valueless as expositions of the law.

§ 440. Returning now to the rule which rejects secondary evidence of oral testimony so long as the witness can himself be called, it should be observed, that the common law regards a witness as incapable of being called,—1, When he is dead;

2, When he is out of the jurisdiction of the court, or possibly, when he cannot be found after diligent inquiry; 3, When he is either insane, or permanently sick; and 4, When he is kept out of the way by the contrivance of the opposite party. In noticing the authorities which support these propositions, no case need be cited to establish what is admitted on all hands, that if the witness be proved to be dead, secondary evidence of his statement on oath in a former trial between the same parties will be received as of course.<sup>1</sup> The court, however, unless some account of the death of a witness be given, or at least some evidence be furnished showing that proper inquiries have been made, and that no tidings can be heard of him, will not presume his death, so as to admit his depositions, though they were taken as much as fifty years before the trial.<sup>2</sup>

§ 441. The ground for admitting secondary evidence in civil proceedings seems equally clear, where it is proved that the witness is actually residing in some place beyond the jurisdiction of the court;<sup>3</sup> but questions have occasionally arisen respecting the amount and nature of the proof required to establish this fact. Thus, where a naval captain had been examined on interrogatories by consent, on account of his expected absence, Sir James Mansfield held that it was not absolutely necessary that he should be on his voyage, when the trial came on. If the ship had sailed, though it had put back, or if the witness had gone on board, and was ready to sail, though prevented by contrary winds, that would be sufficient.<sup>4</sup> The same doctrine has prevailed in another case, where the signature of an attesting witness was allowed to be proved, it appearing that he had sailed for Spain, had been driven back by stress of weather, and, six days before the trial, was at Falmouth, expecting to sail again immediately.<sup>5</sup> In a third case, where it was sworn that the witness was a seafaring man, and some six months before the trial had belonged to a ship lying in the Thames, Lord Ellenborough, in rejecting the evidence as too vague, was disposed to admit the depositions, if it could be further shown that any efforts had been recently made to find him.<sup>1</sup> This case suggests the propriety of noticing an old decision of the time of James the First,<sup>2</sup> in which it was expressly laid down that, if a party cannot find a witness, then he is, as it were, dead to him; and his depositions in a cause betwixt the same parties may be read, provided the party make oath that he endeavoured to find him, but could neither see him nor hear of him. In no modern case has precisely the same point been ruled, but as it has frequently been held that proof of inability to find an attesting witness will let in evidence of his handwriting,<sup>3</sup> these analogous decisions would seem in some degree to support the correctness of the old authority, at least so far as relates to civil causes.

§ 442. In criminal proceedings a similar latitude is not allowable at common law, and the deposition of a witness, whether taken before a magistrate or a coroner, will not be rendered admissible, on mere proof that the witness himself cannot be found after diligent search.<sup>4</sup> Neither will it be received, though satisfactory proof be given that the witness was not absent from any intention to defeat justice, but that, being a foreigner, he had, since the prisoner was committed for trial, returned to his own country, and was at the time of the trial resident abroad.<sup>5</sup> This kind of evidence has also been rejected in America, both where the witness could not be found within the jurisdiction, but was reported to have gone to an adjoining State,<sup>6</sup> and where he was proved to have left the State, after being summoned to attend at the trial.<sup>1</sup>

§ 443. How far answers to inquiries respecting the witness are admissible to prove that he cannot be found, is not very clearly defined by the decisions. That such answers will be rejected as hearsay, if tendered in proof of the fact that the witness is abroad, is beyond all doubt;<sup>2</sup> but where the question is simply whether a diligent and unsuccessful search has been made for the witness, it would seem, both on principle and authority, that the answers should be received, as forming a prominent part of the very point to be ascertained.<sup>3</sup> In order to show that inquiries have been duly made at the house of the witness, his declarations as to where he lived cannot be received;<sup>4</sup> neither will his statement in the deposition itself that he is about to go abroad, render it unnecessary to prove that he has put his purpose in execution.<sup>5</sup>

§ 444. If the witness be proved at the trial to be insane, his deposition will be admissible at common law<sup>6</sup> in like manner as if he were dead;<sup>7</sup> and the same rule is stated to prevail, though the insanity be only of a temporary character.<sup>8</sup> This, however, appears to be carrying the doctrine beyond its legitimate extent; for since the casual illness of a witness will not, as presently shown,<sup>9</sup> warrant the reading of his former testimony, at least in a civil suit, but will only furnish good ground for moving to postpone the trial, the same rule should surely prevail in the event of a witness being afflicted with temporary madness. distinction can be drawn between the two cases. Where depositions are tendered on the ground of the witness being insane, it may sometimes be advisable to show that his intellects were sound at the time of his previous examination; and this course may even be necessary, if such examination were had but a short time before the trial.<sup>1</sup>

§ 445. It is somewhat difficult to discover from the authorities what degree of illness must be proved in order to let in depositions at common law.<sup>2</sup> In an old case, where a witness on his journey to the place of trial was taken so ill as to be unable to proceed, his deposition was allowed to be read;<sup>3</sup> but too much weight must not be given to this decision, since, if the course there adopted were ordinarily allowed, there would be very sudden indispositions and recoveries.<sup>4</sup> The rule laid down by Lord Ellenborough, that where a witness is taken ill, the party requiring his testimony should move to put off the trial, is certainly less open to objection and abuse.<sup>5</sup> In the criminal courts, this practice has long prevailed, and it has there been expressly decided, that the depositions of a woman, who was so near her confinement as to be unable to attend a trial, could not, at common law, be received.<sup>6</sup> If, however, from the nature of the illness or other infirmity, no reasonable hope remains that the witness will be able to appear in court on any future occasion, his deposition is certainly admissible in criminal,<sup>7</sup> as it is in civil,<sup>8</sup> proceedings. being directed out of Chancery, it appeared that a witness, who had been examined in the cause as to the handwriting of certain documents, had since become blind, the court made an order that his depositions should be read at the trial.<sup>1</sup>

§ 446. The proposition that, if a witness be kept out of the way by the adversary, his former statements on oath will be admissible, rests, partly, on the authority of several decisions both in the civil and criminal courts;<sup>2</sup> partly, on the analogies furnished by one or two statutes;<sup>3</sup> but, chiefly, on the broad principle of justice, which will not permit a party to take advantage of his own wrong. In a case where three prisoners were indicted for felony, and a witness for the prosecution was proved to be absent through the procurement of one of them, the court held that his deposition might be read in evidence as against the man who had kept him out of the way, but that it could not be received against the other two men.<sup>4</sup>

§ 447. Besides those cases, in which the admissibility of secondary proof of oral testimony is found to rest upon the ordinary principles of common law, the Legislature in a few instances has expressly provided, that certain depositions should, under particular circumstances, be received in evidence.<sup>5</sup> The most important Act on this subject is that of 11 & 12 V., c. 42, which regulates the mode of taking depositions before committing magistrates, and their subsequent admissibility in evidence. § 17 of this statute enacts, "That in all cases, where any person shall appear or be brought before any justice or justices of the peace charged with any indictable offence, whether committed in England or Wales, or upon the high sea, or on land beyond the sea, or

“To wit,—The examination of C. D. of [Farmer] and E. F. of [Labourer], taken on [oath] this            day of            in the year of our Lord at            in the [county] aforesaid, before the undersigned, [one] of Her Majesty’s Justices of the Peace for the said [county], in the presence and hearing of A. B.; who is charged this day before [me], for that he the said A. B. on            at            [&c., describing the offence as in a warrant of commitment]. This deponent C. D. on his [oath] saith as follows [&c., stating the deposition of the witness as nearly as possible in the words he uses. When his deposition is complete, let him sign it].

<sup>2</sup> This fact may be negatived by proof that the accused was insane when the deposition was taken, or was otherwise incapacitated by illness from deposition purport to be signed by the justice by or before whom the same purports to have been taken, it shall be lawful to read such deposition as evidence in such prosecution, without further proof thereof, unless it shall be proved that such deposition was not in fact signed by the justice purporting to sign the same."

§ 448. It would be difficult to frame a clause open to more objections than the one just cited. First, the Act states, that if it be proved, among other things, that the witness "is dead, or so ill as not to be able to travel," it shall be lawful to read his deposition as evidence in the prosecution. Now, any one, bearing in mind the maxim, "expressio unius est exclusio alterius," would reasonably interpret this to mean that, unless one or other of these facts be established, the deposition shall in all cases be excluded; but, as such an interpretation would lead to very absurd results, the judges have put another construction on the words, and have held that they do not annul the wise common-law rule,<sup>1</sup> that if a witness be fraudulently or forcibly kept out of the way by the prisoner himself, his deposition shall be received.<sup>2</sup> In thus deciding, the judges have certainly got rid of one difficulty; but since, in so doing, they have relaxed the principles of judicial interpretation, the law, regarded as a science, has lost almost as much as it has gained. Whether the courts will go one step further, and admit the deposition of a witness, who, although not too ill to travel, may be proved to be permanently insane,<sup>3</sup> remains to be seen; but such a decision seems naturally to follow from the former ruling.

§ 449. Next, do the words just cited mean, that in all cases where a witness is too ill to travel at the time of the trial, his deposition, if proved to have been properly taken, must be admitted in evidence ; or, in other words, do they set at nought the salutary practice of obliging the prosecutor to apply for a postponement of the trial,<sup>1</sup> where a material witness is only suffering under a temporary indisposition ? Such appears to be the only construction that can fairly be put upon the Act ; and, consequently, the court has admitted the deposition of a woman who, when the trial took place, had just been confined,<sup>2</sup> though it was urged with much force that in a very few weeks the woman would almost certainly be able to testify vivâ voce in court.<sup>3</sup> What renders this state of the law the more remarkable is, that if, instead of the woman's deposition having been offered in evidence in a criminal case, her examination before a commissioner had been tendered in a civil suit, it could not have been received ; for, as will presently appear,<sup>4</sup> an examination taken under the Act of 1 W. 4, c. 22, cannot be read in evidence on the ground of the sickness or other infirmity of the witness, unless it be shown that such sickness or infirmity is of a permanent character.

<sup>3</sup> Ante, § 444. In R. v. Cockburn, Dear. & Bell, 203; 7 Cox, 265, S. C., the deposition of a witness was received, on his doctor proving, that, though he might have been brought to the court without danger to life, he was suffering from paralysis, which disabled him altogether from giving evidence. See, also, R. v. Wilson, 8 Cox, 453.

§ 450. Again, what amount of proof will authorise the reading of the deposition ? Will it suffice simply to show that the witness is dead, or too ill to travel ; that he was examined in the presence of the accused, who had a full opportunity of cross-examining him ; and that the document purports to be signed, either by the committing justice, or, at least, by the justice " by or before whom the same purports to have been taken ? " <sup>5</sup> or must the prosecutor

<sup>2</sup> So, in R. v. Stephenson, 31 L. J., M. C. 147 ; L. & Cave, 165 ; and 9 Cox, 156, S. C., the court admitted the deposition of a woman, who was daily expecting her confinement, and was " otherwise poorly." See, too, R. v. Croucher, 3 Fost. & Fin. 285.

<sup>3</sup> R. v. Harvey, 4 Cox, 441. But see R. v. Omant, 6 Cox, 466, per Crompton, J. ; R. v. Wilton, 1 Fost. & Fin. 309, per Willes, J. ; R. v. Walker, id. 534, per id. ; R. v. Tait, 2 Fost. & Fin. 553, per Crompton, J., from which cases it appears that the judge, notwithstanding the Act, has a discretionary power of postponing the trial, instead of allowing the deposition to be read.

<sup>5</sup> In R. v. Vidil, 9 Cox, 4, Blackburn, J., held that the deposition of a sick witness was admissible, though it had been taken before two magistrates who

further prove all or any of the following facts, viz., that the deposition was taken before the accused was committed or bailed ; that it was taken on oath or affirmation ; that it was read over to the witness, and that it was signed by him ? The clause enumerates all these circumstances as apparently necessary ingredients in a valid deposition ; and then, in the paragraph relative to the proof, speaks, first, of " the person, whose deposition shall have been taken as aforesaid," being dead, &c., and next, of "such<sup>1</sup> deposition " purporting to be signed by the justice. If it be contended, that the court will infer from the magistrate's signature that the statutory provisions have all been complied with, the form of the caption of the deposition, as given in the schedule to the Act,<sup>2</sup> furnishes a probable answer to such an argument : for by that form the justice merely states that the witness was examined on oath, and in the presence of the accused, and it is wholly silent as to whether or not the examination was read over to the witness, or was signed by him. Now, as the magistrate's signature is clearly insufficient to prove that the accused was present during the examination of the witness, though that fact is positively stated in the caption so attested, on what ground can it be urged that the same signature is sufficient to prove the taking of the oath, which is a fact stated in the caption in a precisely similar manner ? At all events, how can the facts that the deposition was read over to the witness, and that it was afterwards signed by him, be proved by the magistrate's signature, when neither of these circumstances is so much as alluded to in any part of the document ? In short, if the signature of the magistrate does not authenticate the facts which are recited in the caption, how can it authenticate facts which are not there recited at all ?

§ 451. A further difficulty arises in determining what amount of proof on the part of the prisoner will render a deposition inadmissible ? If he can show that the signature, purporting to be that of the justice is a forgery, of course the deposition cannot be received. But how will the case stand, if, being unable to prove that fact, he can still show that the deposition was not taken upon oath, or that it was not read over to the witness, or that the signature purporting to be that of the witness was not made by him, or that the witness had refused or omitted to sign the statement? Will he be allowed to adduce such evidence, and will such evidence, if adduced, avail him? These are, all of them, points which cannot fail to raise serious difficulties in interpreting the Act, and which might easily have been avoided had the draftsman possessed ordinary knowledge of the subject, or exercised ordinary care.

§ 452. Passing now from these speculative questions, it will be convenient to consider briefly the proper course of taking depositions under the Act. And here it seems clearly to have been intended by the Legislature, that the accused should be charged, in the first instance, with some indictable offence; that the statement of each witness should then be made under the sanction of an oath or affirmation, administered by the magistrate before whom the charge is preferred;<sup>1</sup> that such oath or affirmation should be administered in the presence of the accused; that the statement should be made entirely in his presence,<sup>2</sup> and that he should have full opportunity for cross-examination; that the whole of the statement elicited either by examination or by cross-examination, and not merely so much of the evidence as the justice might consider material,<sup>3</sup> should be reduced to writing in the first person, and in the very words of the witness;<sup>4</sup> that the deposition, when completed, should be read over to the witness, and be signed by him, as a token of his assenting to its correctness;<sup>5</sup> that the whole body of the depositions, if not each deposition,<sup>1</sup> should also be signed by the justice; and that they should be transmitted by him, together with the written information, the statement of the accused, and the recognizance of bail, if any such documents should exist, to the proper officer of the court in which the trial is to be had, before or at the opening of such court.<sup>2</sup>

§ 453. In directing the magistrate to take down the statements of the witnesses as nearly as possible in their own words, and not merely "so much thereof as shall be material," the Legislature, of course, did not intend that the depositions should be loaded with every idle word let fall by the persons under examination, though obviously having no reference to the charge against the accused; but it certainly meant to fetter the discretion of the justices, who, under the old law, were apt to reject as immaterial much valuable information. Regarded in this light, the change is salutary; for not only does it frequently happen, that facts, which on a preliminary inquiry appear to be of trifling importance, turn out in the sequel to be extremely relevant; but, where all the evidence is not given, the court, the prosecutor, and the prisoner, are alike kept in the dark, and much time may be wasted in endeavours to throw discredit upon the testimony of witnesses, by showing that they have made statements at the trial which are not to be found in the depositions returned.<sup>3</sup> If a person of weak intellect, or a child, be examined before the justice, it is also desirable that the questions and answers touching his capacity to take an oath, should appear on the face of the deposition.<sup>4</sup>

§ 454. Whether a deposition originally written down in the absence of the prisoner could be received in evidence under the Act, on proof being given that it had afterwards been read over in his presence to the witness, who had then assented on oath to its contents, is a very problematical question; for although depo-

sitions, thus laxly taken, have more than once been admitted under the old law,<sup>1</sup> this course of proceeding has frequently been condemned by the judges as highly unjust;<sup>2</sup> and, indeed, it is obvious that it affords no fair opportunity to the accused of cross-examining the deponent. On one occasion, Mr. Baron Platt rejected a deposition expressly upon this ground; and, at the same time, took occasion to remark, that a prisoner could not have "a full opportunity of cross-examining the witness," within the meaning of the statute, unless the deposition was taken down in his presence, and in the presence of the magistrate, and unless he was warned by the magistrate at the close of the examination that he might put any questions he liked to the witness, with reference to the statement which had been made.<sup>3</sup> It is also extremely doubtful whether a deposition can be read in a case, where the prisoner has abstained from asking any questions in consequence of the witness being too ill to bear further examination.<sup>4</sup>

for all, at the end of the whole body of depositions, provided that all of them be written either on one sheet of paper,<sup>1</sup> or on different sheets connected with each other.<sup>2</sup> Still, this course of proceeding should not be indiscriminately adopted; for, if the depositions be copied on separate sheets, and no proof be given of their having been pinned, or otherwise fastened together, at or before the time when the last was signed,<sup>3</sup> those bearing no signature will be rejected.<sup>4</sup> It seems, too, that the signature of the justice must appear on the face of the deposition to be that of the magistrate "by, or before, whom the same purports to have been taken," and that no parol evidence will be received to supply any omission on this head.<sup>5</sup> The depositions, when admissible under the Act, may be read in evidence before the grand jury as well as at the actual trial.<sup>6</sup>

§ 456. Although, as before stated,<sup>7</sup> many points may arise respecting the proper mode of proving depositions under the statute, thus much appears to be quite clear, that it is no longer necessary, as formerly was the case, to verify the signature of the magistrate. This change, however, is productive of no real advantage; for as proof must certainly be adduced "that the deposition was taken in the presence of the accused, and that he, or his counsel or attorney, had a full opportunity of cross-examining the witness," it is obvious that either the justice or his clerk, or at least some person who was present during the whole inquiry,<sup>8</sup> must be forthcoming, in order to show that the forms of law have been duly complied with. When the deposition is sought to be read on the ground of the sickness of the witness, it must, of course, be proved that he is at the actual time of the trial

too ill to travel; and the judges, very properly, seem inclined to hold that this fact should be strictly established.<sup>1</sup> Mere proof that the witness was confined to his bed some days before will not suffice;<sup>2</sup> and, as a general rule, it will be prudent,<sup>3</sup> though it is not absolutely necessary,<sup>4</sup> to have the testimony of a medical man.

§ 457. It may here be convenient to repeat what was mentioned before in another connexion,<sup>5</sup> that a deposition will be admissible under this Act, though it was taken upon a charge technically different from that in respect of which the accused is afterwards indicted, provided that on the former inquiry a full opportunity of cross-examination has been afforded to the accused. For instance, the deposition of a deceased person, taken on a charge against the prisoner of having stabbed him, or done him some grievous bodily harm, can be read on a subsequent trial for the murder or manslaughter of the deceased.<sup>6</sup>

<sup>9</sup> § 3 enacts, that "in all cases where any person shall appear or be brought before any justice or justices of the peace, charged with any indictable offence, whether committed within this realm or upon the high seas or upon land beyond the sea, and whether such person appear voluntarily upon summons, or has been apprehended with or without warrant, or be in stance, that every person, who is charged before a justice with an indictable offence, shall be asked whether he desires to call any witnesses; and, if he does so, the justice, in his presence, shall examine such witnesses on oath, and reduce their statements to writing. The depositions thus taken shall then be read over to the witnesses and signed by them, and shall also be countersigned by the justice, and "transmitted in due course of law;" and afterwards, upon the trial, all the laws relating to the depositions of witnesses for the prosecution shall apply to these depositions.

§ 457 B. The other enactment<sup>1</sup> is intended to provide means for perpetuating the testimony of witnesses, who, being dangerously ill and unable to travel, can yet give material information relating to some indictable offence, or to some person accused of such crime. It is very inartistically drawn, and the lawyer would be more remarkable for courage than for wisdom who would venture to put a legal interpretation on its ambiguous phraseology. Let it speak for itself as follows:—"Whereas, by § 17 of 11 & 12 V., c. 42, it is permitted under certain circumstances to read in evidence on the trial of an accused person the deposition, taken in accordance with the provisions of the said Act, of a witness who is dead, or so ill as to be unable to travel: and whereas, it may happen that a person dangerously ill, and unable to travel, may be able to give material and important information relating to an indictable offence, or to a person accused thereof, and it may not be practicable or permissible to take, in accordance with the provisions of the said Act, the examination or deposition of the person so being ill, so as to make the same available as evidence in the event of his or her death before the trial of the accused person, and it is desirable in the interests of truth and justice that means should be provided for perpetuating such testimony, and for rendering the same available in the event of the death of the person giving the same: therefore, whenever it shall be made to appear to the satisfaction of any justice of the peace that any person dangerously ill, and in the opinion of some registered medical practitioner not likely to recover from such illness, is able and willing to give material information relating to any indictable offence, or relating to any person accused of any such offence, and it shall not be practicable for any justice or justices of the peace to take an examination or deposition in accordance with the provisions of the said Act of the person so being ill, it shall be lawful for the said justice to take in writing the statement on oath or affirmation of such person so being ill, and such justice shall thereupon subscribe the same, and shall add thereto by way of caption a statement of his reason for taking the same, and of the day and place when and where the same was taken, and of the names of the persons (if any) present at the taking thereof, and, if the same shall relate to any indictable offence for which any accused person is already committed or bailed to appear for trial, shall transmit the same with the said addition to the proper officer of the court for trial at which such accused person shall have been so committed or bailed; and in all other cases he shall transmit the same to the clerk of the peace of the county, division, city, or borough in which he shall have taken the same, who is hereby required to preserve the same, and file it of record; and if afterwards, upon the trial of any offender or offence to which the same may relate, the person who made the same statement shall be proved to be dead, or if it shall be proved that there is no reasonable probability that such person will ever be able to travel or to give evidence, it shall be lawful to read such statement in evidence, either for or against the accused, without further proof thereof, if the same purports to be signed by the justice by or before whom it purports to be taken, and provided it be proved to the satisfaction of the court that reasonable notice of the intention to take such statement has been served upon the person (whether prosecutor or accused) against whom it is proposed to be read in evidence, and that such person, or his counsel or attorney, had or might have had, if he had chosen to be present, full opportunity of cross-examining the deceased person who made the same."<sup>1</sup>

§ 458. The depositions of witnesses, who are examined before the coroner, are rendered admissible as secondary proof, by virtue of the Act of 7 G. 4, c. 64, which in § 4 enacts, "That every coroner, upon any inquisition before him taken, whereby any person shall be indicted for manslaughter or murder, or as an accessory to murder before the fact, shall put in writing the evidence given to the jury before him, or as much thereof as shall be material, and shall have authority to bind by recognizance all such persons as know or declare anything material touching the said manslaughter or murder, or the said offence of being accessory to murder, to appear at the next court of oyer and terminer, or gaol delivery, or superior criminal court of a county palatine or great sessions, at which the trial is to be, then and there to prosecute or give evidence against the party charged; and every such coroner shall certify and subscribe the same evidence, and all such recognizances, and also the inquisition before him taken, and shall deliver the same to the proper officer of the court in which the trial is to be, before or at the opening of the court."<sup>1</sup>

<sup>1</sup> § 7 enacts, that "whenever a prisoner in actual custody shall have served, or shall have received, notice of an intention to take such statement as herein-before mentioned, the judge or justice of the peace by whom the prisoner was committed, or the visiting justices of the prison in which he is confined, may, by an order in writing, direct the gaoler having the custody of the prisoner to convey him to the place mentioned in the said notice for the purpose of being present at the taking of the statement; and such gaoler shall convey the prisoner accordingly, and the expenses of such conveyance shall be paid out of the funds applicable to the other expenses of the prison from which the prisoner shall have been conveyed."

§ 459. It may be doubtful whether these provisions have not been repealed by § 34 of 11 & 12 V., c. 42;<sup>2</sup> but assuming that they are still in force, it will be seen that they differ materially from those which regulate the mode of taking depositions before justices, and of proving them when taken. In the first place, the coroner is only required to put in writing "so much of the evidence as shall be material;" secondly, the narrative may be drawn up in the third person; thirdly, the witness is not required to sign the document, though he usually does so for the purpose of identifying it;<sup>3</sup> fourthly, the deposition must, it would seem, be proved, either by calling the coroner who subscribed it, or by proving his signature thereto, and showing by his clerk, or by some person who was present at the inquiry, that the forms of law have been duly complied with.<sup>4</sup>

§ 460. Another striking distinction is said to exist between depositions returned by justices and those taken by coroners. The former, to be admissible as secondary evidence against the prisoner, must have been taken in his presence; but it is alleged that the latter will be received, though taken in his absence. This doctrine appears to rest on two or three decisions of the Eriswell* ;<sup>2</sup>—on a note of a case said to have been decided by Mr. Baron Hotham ;<sup>3</sup>—and on a ruling by Mr. Justice Coleridge,<sup>4</sup> the soundness of which it would be difficult to establish. The opposite doctrine is not only ably supported by Messrs. Starkie,<sup>5</sup> Phillipps,<sup>6</sup> and Russell,<sup>7</sup> but it has of late years been acted on by Mr. Justice Montague Smith,<sup>8</sup> and it appears to be so consistent with sound principle as to insure its recognition, should the question be solemnly discussed in modern times.<sup>9</sup>

§ 461. Two other statutes, which regulate the admissibility of certain depositions, are the Bankruptcy Act, 1869,<sup>10</sup> and the Irish Bankrupt and Insolvent Act, 1857.<sup>11</sup> The one enacts, in § 108, that, “in case of the death of the bankrupt or his wife, or of a witness whose evidence has been received by any court in any proceeding under this Act, the deposition of the person so deceased, purporting to be sealed with the seal of the court, or a copy thereof purporting to be so sealed, shall be admitted as evidence of the matters therein deposed to.” The other enacts, in § 365, that, in the event of the death of any witness deposing to the petitioning creditor’s debt, trading, or act of bankruptcy, under any bankruptcy heretofore or hereafter, or under any petition for arrangement, his deposition, purporting to be sealed with the seal of the Court of Bankruptcy, or a copy thereof purporting to be so sealed, shall in all cases be received as evidence of the matters therein respectively contained.

§ 462. "The Merchant Shipping Act, 1854,"<sup>1</sup> also contains a curious provision in relation to this subject; for, after empowering receivers of wreck and justices to take the examinations of certain persons with respect to ships in distress, it goes on to enact, in § 449, that "Any examination so taken in writing as aforesaid, or a copy thereof, purporting to be certified under the hand of the receiver or justice before whom such examination was taken, shall be admitted in evidence in any court of justice, or before any person having by law or by consent of parties authority to hear, receive, and examine evidence, as prima facie proof of all matters contained in such written examination."<sup>2</sup> It is presumed, though the Act is silent upon the subject, that these examinations are not to be regarded in the light of primary evidence, but that they would only be admissible,—like other depositions,—in the event of the witnesses being dead, ill, or otherwise incapable of being present at the trial.<sup>3</sup>

§ 463. The Irish Act of 50 G. 3, c. 102, after the humiliating recital, that men, who have given information against persons accused of crimes in Ireland, have been murdered before the trial, in order to prevent their giving evidence, and to effect the acquittal of the accused, enacts, in § 5, that if any person, after giving information or examination upon oath against any person for any offence, shall, before the trial, be murdered or violently put to death, or so maimed, or forcibly carried away and secreted, as not to be able to give evidence on the trial, his information or examination shall be admitted in all courts of justice in Ireland as evidence on the trial; provided (and this is a remarkable proviso, since it differs from the ordinary rule of law on the subject<sup>4</sup>), that the information or examination of a witness secreted shall not be evidence, unless it shall be found on a collateral issue, to be put to the jury trying the prisoner, that he was secreted by the person on trial, or by some person acting for him, or in his favour. informations, or examinations, under similar circumstances, and after similar proof, are rendered receivable in evidence before the grand jury.

§ 464. Again, the annual Mutiny Act usually provides,<sup>1</sup> that any justice, within whose jurisdiction any soldier in the regular army, or on the permanent staff of the militia, having a wife or a child, shall be billeted, may summon him, and take his examination in writing upon oath, touching the place of his last legal settlement, and the justice shall give an attested copy of the examination to the person examined, to be by him delivered to his commanding officer, to be produced when required; and the examination and attested copy shall at any time be admitted as good evidence of such last legal settlement, before any justice, or at any sessions, although the soldier be dead or absent from the kingdom. A somewhat similar clause is generally inserted in the annual Marine Mutiny Act, but in order to give the justice jurisdiction, it is not necessary that the marine should have a wife or child.<sup>2</sup>

§ 465. The preceding observations have been confined to cases where the oral testimony has been given, either in some different suit from that in which the secondary evidence is tendered, or in a different stage of the same legal proceedings; but it now becomes necessary to advert to several Acts of Parliament, which have intrenched upon the common law rule, requiring the examination of witnesses to be vivâ voce in the presence of the jury, and which have, under certain circumstances, substituted for such examination the depositions of witnesses, who have been previously examined in the cause.

§ 466. The first Act relative to this subject was passed in the year 1773,<sup>3</sup> and by § 40 provides, that in all cases of indictments or informations laid or exhibited in the Court of Queen's Bench for misdemeanors or offences committed in India, it shall be lawful for the said court, upon motion to be made on behalf of the

See 39 & 40 G. 3, c. 79, §§ 2, 4, 5; 6 G. 4, c. 85, § 20; 4 G. 4, c. 71, §§ 7—17; R. v. Douglas, 13 Q. B. 42. § 467. § 42 enacts, that, in all proceedings in Parliament touching any offences committed in India, the Lord Chancellor or Speaker of the House of Lords, and also the Speaker of the House of Commons, may issue their warrants to the Governor-General and Council, or to the chief justice and judges of the High Court of Judicature at Fort William, Madras, or Bombay,<sup>1</sup> for the examination of witnesses; and such examination shall be returned to the Lord Chancellor or Speakers respectively, and proceeded upon as if the directions contained in § 40 were again repeated; and the examination, so returned, shall be deemed good evidence, and shall be allowed and read in the respective Houses. § 45 provides, that no depositions taken and returned by virtue of this Act shall be given in evidence, in any capital case, other than such as shall be proceeded against in Parliament.

§ 468. The same statute enacts, in § 44, that, whenever any person shall commence any action or suit, in law or equity, for which cause hath arisen in India,<sup>2</sup> in any of the courts at Westminster, such courts respectively<sup>3</sup> may, upon motion there to be made,<sup>4</sup> award a writ in the nature of a mandamus or commission.

§ 469. The provisions contained in § 40 of this statute were re-enacted in §§ 78 and 28 of the respective Acts of 24 G. 3, c. 25, and 26 G. 3, c. 57, which regulate the trial of British subjects, who, while employed in India under the Crown or the late East India Company, shall have been guilty of extortion or other misdemeanors; and a clause, substantially the same, though varying in some of the minute details, has been introduced into the Act of 42 G. 3, c. 85,<sup>2</sup> which authorises the Court of Queen's Bench, in England, to try any person employed in the public service abroad, who, in the exercise, or under colour, of such employment, shall have committed any offence. By § 3 of this last-named statute, as also by § 81 of 24 G. 3, c. 25, the Court of Queen's Bench, instead of directing the evidence to be taken vivâ voce, is empowered, on motion made by the Attorney-General, prosecutor, or defendant, to order that an examination de bene esse of witnesses upon interrogatories, in any case where the vivâ voce testimony of such witnesses cannot conveniently be had, should be taken before an examiner appointed by the court; and the depositions so taken shall be read, and deemed sufficient evidence, upon the trial of the indictment or information, or in any subsequent proceedings relating thereto, saving all just exceptions to the same. The Legislature has, also, by the Act of 6 & 7 V., c. 98, § 4, extended the provisions contained in 13 G. 3, c. 63,

<sup>2</sup> § 2. See, as to mode of proceeding under this sect., R. v. Jones, 8 East, 31, where the court held, that to entitle a defendant to have his trial put off till the return of the writ of mandamus, he must state, by affidavit, such special grounds as will lead the judges to believe that the witnesses sought to be examined are really material for the defence.

§ 40, to all indictments or informations laid or exhibited in the Court of Queen's Bench, for misdemeanors or offences committed against the Acts passed for the suppression of the slave trade, in any places out of the United Kingdom, and within any British colony, settlement, plantation, or territory.

§ 470. By none of these statutes is the party, who seeks to use the depositions, directed to prove that the witnesses, at the time of the trial, are beyond the jurisdiction of the court. Still, upon general principle, some slight evidence of this nature would seem to be requisite; for although the language of the Acts, rendering the depositions evidence, is exceedingly strong, it may well be doubted whether an express enactment would not be necessary, in order to override the long-established rule of law, that when a witness is living within the jurisdiction of the court, and the party who requires his evidence has the power of calling him, his deposition cannot be read. This view of the subject is confirmed by the subsequent enactments of 1 W. 4, c. 22, Eng., and 3 & 4 V., c. 105, Ir., which expressly provide, as will presently be seen,<sup>1</sup> that depositions taken under them shall be deemed merely secondary proof.

§ 471. The Act of 1 W. 4, c. 22, after reciting that "great difficulties and delays are often experienced, and sometimes a failure of justice takes place, in actions depending in courts of law, by reason of the want of a competent power and authority in the said courts to order and enforce the examination of witnesses, when the same may be required before the trial of a cause;" and further reciting that it is expedient to extend the powers and provisions contained in the Act of 13 G. 3, c. 63, enacts, in § 1, that "all and every the powers, authorities, provisions, and matters contained in the said recited Act, relating to the examination of witnesses in India, shall be, and the same are * hereby extended to all colonies, islands, plantations, and places under the dominion of His Majesty in foreign parts, and to the judges of the several courts therein, and to all actions depending in any of His Majesty's courts of law at Westminster, in what place or country soever the cause of action may have arisen, and whether the same may have arisen within the jurisdiction of the court, to the judges whereof the writ or commission may be directed, or elsewhere, when it shall appear that the examination of witnesses, under a writ or commission issued in pursuance of the authority hereby given, will be necessary or conducive to the due administration of justice in the matter wherein such writ shall be applied for."<sup>1</sup> The stat. 3 & 4 V., c. 105, contains a precisely similar enactment in § 66, with respect to the superior courts of law in Ireland, excepting only that, at the place marked above with an asterisk, the words "with reference to all actions in any of Her Majesty's courts of law at Dublin" are introduced; and the insertion of this clause is here noticed, because the omission of corresponding words in the Act of W. 4, has raised some slight doubt whether § 1 of that statute does not apply to criminal proceedings in the Court of Queen's Bench, as well as to actions in any of the superior law courts.<sup>2</sup>

§ 472. The alterations effected by these Acts do not rest here; but § 4 of the one, and § 69 of the other, respectively enact, that it shall be lawful for each of the courts of law at Westminster or Dublin, and the Court of Common Pleas at Lancaster, and the Court of Pleas at Durham, and the several judges thereof,<sup>3</sup> "in every action depending in such court upon the application of any of the parties to such suit, to order the examination on oath, upon interrogatories or otherwise, before the master or prothonotary of the said court, or other person or persons to be named in such order, of any witnesses within the jurisdiction of the court where the action shall be depending, or to order a commission<sup>4</sup> to issue for the examination of witnesses on oath at any place or places out of such jurisdiction, by interrogatories or otherwise, and by the same or any subsequent order or orders to give all such directions touching the time, place, and manner of such examination, as well within the jurisdiction of the court wherein the action shall be depending as without, and all other matters and circumstances connected with such examinations as may appear reasonable and just.”<sup>1</sup> Under this enactment it has been held, that an order for a commission may be granted, though the action pending in the court be merely an issue directed by the Court of Chancery;<sup>2</sup> and though it be in the nature of a criminal charge;<sup>3</sup> but the language employed is not sufficiently comprehensive to include either indictments,<sup>4</sup> or criminal informations.<sup>5</sup> Neither will a commission be granted for the examination of witnesses in an enemy’s country pending hostilities.<sup>6</sup>

<sup>1</sup> The costs of the writ or commission, whether under the Act of 13 G. 3, c. 63, or 1 W. 4, c. 22, or 3 & 4 V., c. 105, and of the proceedings thereon, are in the discretion of the court issuing the same. See 1 W. 4, c. 22, § 3, and 3 & 4 V., c. 105, § 68, Ir.

§ 473. It does not fall within the scope of this work to furnish minute directions as to the course to be pursued by parties, who seek under these Acts, either for an order to examine witnesses at home, or for an order for a commission, when the witnesses are abroad; but a few of the more important decisions may briefly be noticed. The court or judge—for applications of this nature may generally be made to either<sup>7</sup>—will not, except in a case of urgency, to prevent the defeat of justice,<sup>8</sup> make an order either for the examination of witnesses, or for a commission, until after issue has been joined; for before that step has been taken it cannot well be ascertained what witnesses are material, neither is it easy to discover how a false witness can be indicted for perjury.<sup>1</sup> An order, however, may be made prospectively, with reference to a new trial, in case the verdict already obtained should be set aside;<sup>2</sup> and if the witness reside beyond the jurisdiction of the court, the application should be made as soon as possible after issue joined.<sup>3</sup> In the case of a foreign commission, the order must specify the place, and also, within certain limits, the time of examination;<sup>4</sup> but it need not name the witnesses to be examined.<sup>5</sup> Neither is it necessary that the order should contain the names of the commissioners, but the parties are usually left to determine by subsequent arrangement who the commissioners shall be, and their names are then inserted in the commission.<sup>6</sup> Moreover, the commission is not a writ, and therefore it need not be tested in term time, if, indeed, any teste be necessary, which is extremely doubtful.<sup>7</sup>

§ 475. Although the judges are empowered by these Acts to grant commissions to examine parties to the record who are resident abroad,<sup>3</sup>—for such persons are now, by virtue of Lord Brougham's Act,<sup>4</sup> competent witnesses,—it is clear, that motions for this purpose ought not to be lightly entertained, especially when made on behalf of the party who is sought to be examined. In a case,<sup>5</sup> where this question was under discussion in the Queen's Bench, that court very properly determined that the application could not be granted, unless it were supported by affidavits clearly showing that the commission would, under the circumstances, be conducive to the due administration of justice; and Lord Campbell dryly remarked, that a less stringent rule would inevitably lead to the pernicious practice of parties going abroad to avoid the risk of cross-examination in open court.

§ 476. In commissions to examine witnesses out of the jurisdiction of the court, a clause is usually introduced requiring the commissioners to be sworn. This clause, however, is not essential, and on several occasions it has actually been omitted, where, in order to enforce the attendance of witnesses, the commission has been directed either to the judges of a foreign court,<sup>6</sup> or to the foreign court itself.<sup>1</sup> From these cases, as well as from others,<sup>2</sup> it is now perfectly clear that, under §§ 4 and 69 of the respective Acts of 1 W. 4, c. 22, and 3 & 4 V., c. 105, commissions may be granted to examine witnesses, while resident in countries beyond the dominion of the British Crown. If the witness reside in Scotland or Ireland, application for a commission to examine him must be made under § 4 of 1 W. 4, c. 22, since the words "foreign parts," used in § 1, do not include those divisions of the United Kingdom.<sup>3</sup> The same observation applies where the motion is made in Dublin, and the witness is resident in Scotland or England. The commission usually directs that the witnesses shall be examined upon written interrogatories; but this is a matter for the discretion of the court, which may order, if it think fit, that the examination and cross-examination shall be conducted vivâ voce, either altogether, or as to particular portions of the evidence.<sup>4</sup> In the event of such an order, the questions and answers are reduced into writing, and returned as in ordinary cases. In order to render the depositions taken under a commission available, the evidence must be such, in substance, as would be received according to the English law; and if at the trial it should appear, either on the face of the depositions, or by extrinsic proof, that the commissioners have admitted illegal, or rejected legal, evidence, the judge will, it seems, be empowered, in the exercise of his discretion, to suppress the depositions either wholly or in part.<sup>5</sup>

§ 477. The commissioners must substantially follow the instructions which they have received by the instrument appointing them, though the court will not look out critically for objections to their conduct, but will rather in their favour presume that they have discharged their duty.<sup>6</sup> Thus, where a commission, directed to the judges of a foreign court, required that when the examinations were taken, the same should be transmitted to this country, it was held insufficient to send mere copies of them;<sup>1</sup> but where commissioners for the examination of witnesses abroad were directed to reduce the examinations into writing in the English language, and to swear an interpreter to translate the oath, interrogatories, and depositions, the court held that the commission was well executed by the return of depositions, which had originally been taken down in the foreign language, and six weeks afterwards had been translated by the interpreter into English.<sup>2</sup> So, when the commission contained a direction that the witnesses should be examined apart from each other, the court presumed that the commissioners had complied with this order, although their return was silent on the subject.<sup>3</sup> It seems, however, that the Court of Chancery will not presume that commissioners have taken the oaths prescribed to them before acting.<sup>4</sup> The commissioners must also transmit whatever original documents have been produced in evidence before them, as copies of such documents, however authenticated, will not be admissible;<sup>5</sup> unless, indeed, it be distinctly proved, that the law of the country where the commission was held has prevented the removal of the originals.<sup>6</sup>

of the court,<sup>1</sup> or dead, or unable from permanent sickness or other permanent infirmity, to attend the trial; in all or any of which cases the examinations and depositions, certified under the hand of the commissioners, master, prothonotary, or other person taking the same, shall and may, without proof of the signature to such certificate, be received and read in evidence, saving all just exceptions."

§ 479. It will be seen that, under the above enactment, depositions are rendered admissible only in one or other of four events. First, if the opposite party consent; secondly, if the witness be proved to be dead; thirdly, if he be shown to be beyond the jurisdiction of the court; and, lastly, if it appear that, from permanent sickness or infirmity—which terms do not necessarily mean an incurable malady, but will be satisfied by any grave or serious illness,<sup>2</sup>—he cannot attend the trial. The decision of the judge on these facts, though in strict law subject to review, is practically almost conclusive; for the court in banc will seldom interfere in the matter, unless its non-interference would obviously cause injustice.<sup>3</sup> As the evidence, too, is exclusively addressed to the judge, a doubt has been raised as to whether affidavits will not be admissible in lieu of the ordinary vivâ voce testimony; and on one occasion Chief Baron Pollock received the affidavit of a medical man, as sufficient proof of the permanent sickness of a deponent to let in his deposition.<sup>4</sup> This course, however, though highly convenient, is of questionable legality;<sup>5</sup> and the more so,

<sup>1</sup> By the Scotch law, when a witness residing abroad is examined under a commission, his deposition may be read without proving at the trial that he is then absent; and the onus of showing that he is within the jurisdiction rests on the objecting party. *Sutton v. There, Willes, J., who seemed inclined to support the ruling of the Chief Baron, referred to R. v. Ryle, 9 M. & W. 227; but that as the judges seem inclined, in other respects, to construe these statutes strictly. Thus, where a witness stated that he had seen the deponent, whose examination had been taken before the master on board a ship bound for Montreal on the day preceding the trial; that he then had his luggage on board; and that the ship in the evening was lying below Gravesend waiting for the captain, Lord Denman held that this was not sufficient,<sup>1</sup> though less stringent evidence has satisfied other judges, in cases where the admissibility of the depositions rested on the principles of the common law.<sup>2</sup> So, where in order to put in the deposition of a witness examined under 1 W. 4, c. 22, the attorney's clerk swore that he had made inquiries for the witness at his residence, and had there been told, by a person whom he believed to be the wife of the witness, that he had sailed in a certain ship, Lord Abinger rejected the testimony as hearsay, observing that the woman who gave the information to the clerk, or some person who knew of his own knowledge that the witness was abroad, should have been called.<sup>3</sup> This decision was doubtless correct with reference to the wording of the Act; but, as before stated, the evidence would have been admissible at common law, to prove, not indeed that the witness was abroad, but that inquiries had been made for him, and that he could not be found.<sup>4</sup>

§ 480. All the provisions of the Acts of 13 G. 3, c. 68, 1 W. 4, c. 22, and 3 & 4 V., c. 105, which relate to the examination of witnesses under the commissions and orders of the superior courts of law, have been extended to all suits and proceedings on the revenue side of the Court of Exchequer.<sup>5</sup> They have also been made applicable to the Courts of Probate both in England and Ireland, and to the Court for Divorce and Matrimonial Causes. courts contains an enactment,<sup>1</sup> which provides that, "where a witness is out of the jurisdiction of the court, or where by reason of his illness or from other circumstances, the court shall not think fit to enforce the attendance of the witness in open court, it shall be lawful for the court to order a commission to issue for the examination of such witness on oath, upon interrogatories or otherwise, or if the witness be within the jurisdiction of the court, to order the examination of such witness on oath, upon interrogatories or otherwise, before any officer of the said court, or other person to be named in such order for the purpose."<sup>2</sup> The section then proceeds to clothe the court with all the powers vested in the Common Law Courts by the Acts just cited.<sup>3</sup> Somewhat similar powers have also been intrusted to the Provincial and United Diocesan Courts,<sup>4</sup> and the Court for Matrimonial Causes and Matters,<sup>5</sup> in Ireland.

§ 480 A. The legislation on this subject, so far as it relates to the Courts of Bankruptcy in England, is somewhat bald; for the only enactment in reference to the matter is contained in the 75th section of the Act of 1869,<sup>6</sup> which simply empowers the court to "order that a person named in the order being in Scotland or in Ireland shall be examined there." To these few words a supplementary rule<sup>7</sup> has been added, which provides, in language provokingly vague, that "the court may in any matter take the whole or any part of the evidence either vivâ voce, or by interrogatories, or upon affidavit, or by commission abroad."

§ 481. Several important provisions have been introduced into the Common Law Procedure Act of 1854,<sup>8</sup> which authorise the judges to order, that any party to an action at law shall, prior to the trial, be examined by his opponent upon all matters relating to the question in dispute. The object of these enactments is to confer upon the courts of common law powers of enforcing preliminary discovery, and thus to save the suitors in those courts from the necessity of resorting to a court of equity to compel the disclosure of facts exclusively within the knowledge of their adversaries. The learned commissioners, at whose instance this change in the law has been effected, suggest, among other advantages which are likely to result from it, that it will tend to make more clearly manifest the matters which are alone in controversy;—that it will save the one party the trouble and expense of producing evidence of facts which the other party may be ready to admit;—that it will occasionally obviate the necessity of any trial, by compelling either the one party or the other to admit facts decisive of the case upon the merits;—that it will tend to expose the motives of groundless actions brought for vexation, and of unfounded defences set up and persisted in for delay;—that it will have a wholesome effect in preventing false pleas from being put on the record;—and, that it will aid the court in extirpating frivolous and improper litigation.<sup>1</sup>

§ 482. The machinery by which these salutary results are sought to be attained is as follows:—The statute enacts, in § 51, that “In all causes in any of the superior courts, by order of the court or a judge, the plaintiff may, with the declaration, and the defendant may, with the plea, or either of them by leave of the court or a judge may, at any other time, deliver to the opposite party or his attorney (provided such party, if not a body corporate, would be liable to be called and examined as a witness upon such matter) interrogatories in writing upon any matter as to which discovery may be sought, and require such party, or in the case of a body corporate, any of the officers<sup>1</sup> of such body corporate, within ten days to answer the questions in writing by affidavit, to be sworn and filed in the ordinary way; and any party or officer omitting, without just cause, sufficiently to answer all questions as to which a discovery may be sought within the above time, or such extended time as the court or a judge shall allow, shall be deemed to have committed a contempt of the court, and shall be liable to be proceeded against accordingly."

§ 482 A. When these provisions first came into operation, a very eminent judge appears to have suggested, that any question might be asked on interrogatories which could be put were the party a witness at the trial;<sup>2</sup> but this interpretation of the statute has since been considered too wide, and it is now properly held, that courts of law should be guided, though not fettered, by the rules and principles which courts of equity act upon with respect to bills of discovery,<sup>3</sup> and that the interrogatories should be confined to matters which might be discovered by a bill in equity.<sup>4</sup> In an action of ejectment, therefore, a defendant will not be compelled to answer interrogatories, where the answer would tend to show that he had incurred a forfeiture of his lease by reason of his having underlet the premises.<sup>5</sup> Neither can a party inquire into facts which relate exclusively to the case of his adversary, although he may ask any questions the answers to which will advance his own case, even though they may also disclose his opponent's case.<sup>6</sup> For instance, in an action on a policy of insurance on a cargo, claiming for a total loss, if the pleas be only such as deny the policy, the interest, and the loading, the plaintiff cannot be interrogated as to the several matters which these pleas will require him to prove; but if there be also a plea denying the loss, interrogatories may be tendered with respect to the amount of damage; and if the defendant were further to plead that the sailing of the vessel had been unreasonably delayed, the plaintiff might be questioned with respect to this fact.<sup>1</sup> On the same ground, if an action for negligence be brought against a surveyor or an attorney, the defendant may be asked what steps he took to perform his duty.<sup>2</sup> So, where a plaintiff had brought an action for money had and received, and his right to recover rested on the assumption that the defendant had, in selling certain property to him, falsely professed to act as broker for a third party, the court allowed interrogatories to be delivered to the defendant, requiring him to answer whether he had acted in the transaction as principal or as agent, and, if as agent, to name his principal.<sup>3</sup>

§ 482 B. Where a party, on being interrogated as to whether he had in his possession any deeds relating to the lands in dispute, answered on oath that he had, but that such deeds were exclusively the evidences of his own title to the property, and did not show any title in his opponent, the court held that he could not be compelled to state the contents of the documents, or to describe them, but that his oath as to their effect must be deemed conclusive.<sup>4</sup> If prima facie evidence of the loss of a deed be made out by affidavit, the party supposed to have executed the instrument may be interrogated de bene esse as to its contents.<sup>5</sup> Again, a plaintiff in ejectment may interrogate the defendant as to whether he is not really defending the action on behalf of a third person; for an affirmative answer to such a question would go far towards making the declarations of such third person admissible in evidence.<sup>6</sup>

§ 482 c. It appears now to be determined,<sup>1</sup> notwithstanding some decisions which "look the other way,"<sup>2</sup> that a defendant in ejectment is entitled to interrogate the plaintiff, not only as to the character in which he sues, but as to the nature of the pedigree on which he relies; but the affidavit in support of such an application should, as it seems, disclose special circumstances,<sup>3</sup> and the ruling can only be upheld on the ground that the court has a general power to require any person, who seeks to disturb the possession of another, to say by what right he does so.<sup>4</sup> A plaintiff, therefore, in ejectment, who claims as heir-at-law, will not be permitted to interrogate the person in possession of the property as to the nature of his title.<sup>5</sup> Neither, as a general rule, will any party be suffered to expose his adversary to fishing interrogatories, or to require him to declare on oath how he intends to shape his case.<sup>6</sup> For example, in an action of trover by the trustee of a bankrupt, the defendant will not be permitted to administer interrogatories to the plaintiff for the purpose of discovering what case he intends to set up at the trial.<sup>7</sup> The plaintiff, too, in an action of slander will not,—except under very special circumstances precluding redress by other means,<sup>8</sup>—be allowed to interrogate the defendant with respect to the precise words he uttered, and when, where, and to whom he spoke them.<sup>9</sup> Neither can the defendant, in an action for negligence, interrogate the plaintiff as to how the accident happened, or what was the extent of the injury, or what was the amount of the medical charges.<sup>1</sup> Still less will a judge, except under very special circumstances, permit a defendant, who admits a breach of contract, to interrogate the plaintiff respecting the damage he has sustained, with the view of paying money into court.<sup>2</sup> Nor, as it seems, will interrogatories be allowed, when the interrogator has ample means of obtaining from his own agents the information which he professes to seek from his opponent,<sup>3</sup> or when the object is to contradict a written instrument,<sup>4</sup> or to gain some tricky advantage not dependent on real information, or to heap up needless costs.<sup>5</sup>

§ 482 D. The judges have also, on the subject of interrogatories, laid down the following practical rules: <sup>6</sup> first, that on a motion to allow the exhibition of interrogatories, the court will simply determine the principle on which they are to be allowed or refused, and will leave their form, in case of dispute, to be settled at chambers; <sup>7</sup> secondly, that, as the Legislature has fixed the time of proceeding, the court, except under special circumstances amounting almost to a case of urgent necessity,<sup>8</sup> will not permit the delivery of interrogatories by a plaintiff before he has declared, or by a defendant before he has pleaded;<sup>9</sup> thirdly, that a plaintiff

§ 483. § 52 enacts, that "The application for such order shall be made upon an affidavit<sup>1</sup> of the party proposing to interrogate, and his attorney or agent, or, in the case of a body corporate, of their attorney or agent, stating that the deponents or deponent believe or believes that the party proposing to interrogate, whether plaintiff or defendant, will derive material benefit in the cause from the discovery which he seeks, that there is a good cause of action or defence upon the merits, and, if the application be made on the part of the defendant, that the discovery is not sought for the purpose of delay; provided that where it shall happen from unavoidable circumstances, that the plaintiff or defendant cannot join in such affidavit, the court or judge may, if they or he think fit, upon affidavit of such circumstances by which the party is prevented from so joining therein, allow and order that the interrogatories may be delivered without such affidavit."

§ 483 A. Upon this section of the Act it has been held that a plaintiff must, as well as a defendant, support his application by an affidavit of merits; and, consequently, where an ejectment was brought for forfeiture for not insuring, the plaintiff was not allowed to exhibit interrogatories to the defendant respecting the subject matter of the action, his affidavit being silent as to real merits, and merely stating that the breach of the covenant in question constituted a good cause of action.<sup>2</sup> An affidavit, too, which simply states that the applicant would derive material benefit from the discovery, omitting the words "in this cause," would be rejected as insufficient.<sup>3</sup> Where a party sues or defends in person, the affidavit of an attorney or agent, notwithstanding the language of the Legislature, will not be required.<sup>4</sup>

be lawful for the court or a judge, at their or his discretion, to direct an oral examination of the interrogated party, as to such points as they or he may direct, before a judge or master; and the court or judge may by such rule or order, or any subsequent rule or order, command the attendance of such party or parties before the person appointed to take such examination, for the purpose of being orally examined as aforesaid, or the production of any writings or other documents to be mentioned in such rule or order, and may impose therein such terms as to such examination, and the costs of the application, and of the proceedings thereon, and otherwise, as to such court or judge shall seem just." It appears that, in general, the answers to interrogatories will be deemed insufficient, if not made categorically to each specific question;<sup>1</sup> but the party who complains of the insufficiency must apply promptly to the court, for otherwise the judges will decline to exercise their discretion in his favour.<sup>2</sup> It is also desirable, if not necessary, that at least in every case involving doubt, the application should be supported by affidavit, for the judges seem inclined to administer this novel branch of their jurisdiction with considerable caution.<sup>3</sup> When the answers are formally, but, as far as can be seen, not intentionally, defective, the proper course to pursue is to apply at chambers to have them amended; for the court is reluctant to make absolute a rule for oral examination, provided that the answers be substantially sufficient.<sup>4</sup> When a party neglects, without just cause, to answer interrogatories at all, his opponent, as it seems, may either proceed by way of attachment for contempt, under § 51 of the Act,<sup>5</sup> or he may apply, under the above enactment, for a rule to show cause why the court should not direct the interrogated party to be orally examined. But whichever course be adopted, the judges are loth to interfere, or to impose costs, unless a case of wilful disobedience can first be established.<sup>7</sup>

§ 485. By virtue of § 54, the rule or order is to have the same force and effect, and may be proceeded upon in like manner, as an order made under the Act of 1 W. 4, c. 22; while § 55 enacts, that, "Whenever, by virtue of this Act, an examination of any witness or witnesses has been taken before a judge of one of the said superior courts, or before a master, the depositions taken down by such examiner shall be returned to and kept in the master's office of the court in which the proceedings are pending; and office copies of such depositions may be given out, and the depositions may be otherwise used, in the same manner as in the case of depositions taken under" the Act of William the Fourth.<sup>1</sup>

§ 486. The language just cited has not been judiciously chosen, and may give rise to some embarrassment. To state that depositions, taken by virtue of the Act, "may be used in the same manner as in the case of depositions taken under" the statute of William, would seem to amount to no more than an enactment, that they may be given in evidence, when the opposite party, who has been examined, either consents to such a course, or is out of the jurisdiction, or is unable from sickness to attend the trial.<sup>2</sup> But this obviously was not the intention of the Legislature. These depositions have been substituted for proceedings in Chancery to compel discovery, and ought to be equally admissible in evidence with those proceedings. The party, at whose instance they are taken, should be empowered to use them, either as primary evidence of admissions

<sup>1</sup> § 56 enacts, that "it shall be lawful for every judge or master named in any such rule or order as aforesaid for taking examinations under this Act, and he is hereby required to make, if need be, a special report to the court in which such proceedings are pending, touching such examination, and the conduct or absence of any witness or other person thereon or relating thereto; and the court is hereby authorised to institute such proceedings and make such order and orders upon such report as justice may require, and as may be instituted and made in any case of contempt of the court." § 57 enacts, that "the costs of every application for any rule or order to be made for the examination of witnesses by virtue of this Act, and of the rule or order and proceedings thereon, shall be in the discretion of the court or judge by whom such rule of order is made." made by his opponent, or as furnishing matter for cross-examination, and, if necessary, for contradiction, should his opponent come forward as a witness on his own behalf, and make statements inconsistent with what he may have previously sworn before the examiner. Whether the judges will feel themselves at liberty to put this lax interpretation upon the Act remains to be seen; but remedial justice can only be attained in this instance by doing some violence to the language employed.

§ 487. It may here be convenient to notice a general rule which has been laid down by the Judges, and which provides that "all depositions of witnesses taken under an order of a judge, rule of court, or writ of commission, shall be returned to and filed in the office of the masters of the court in which the action or proceeding is pending."<sup>1</sup>

§ 488. Before courts of law were empowered to issue commissions for themselves, it was often necessary to institute proceedings in Chancery as auxiliary to an action at law; and even now, it is occasionally expedient to do so with respect to matters which cannot immediately be investigated in a court of law, when the testimony of a material witness is likely to be lost by his death or departure from the realm. In such cases as these, recourse is had to what is called "a bill for perpetuating testimony," courts of equity having for centuries enjoyed the right of entertaining suits for the purpose of preserving evidence in perpetuum rei memoriam.<sup>2</sup> As the object of this jurisdiction is to prevent litigation by preserving evidence, the equity courts will seldom decline to exercise it.<sup>3</sup>

§ 489. The Legislature, considering that the benefits derivable from this mode of proceeding might with advantage be extended, enacted, in the year 1842,<sup>4</sup> that "any person who would, under the circumstances alleged by him to exist, become entitled, upon the happening of any future event, to any honour, title, dignity, or office, or to any estate or interest in any property real or personal, the right or claim to which cannot by him be brought to trial before the happening of such event, shall be entitled to file a bill in the High Court of Chancery to perpetuate any testimony which may be material for establishing such claim or right." In 1858, Parliament again interposed; and by "The Legitimacy Declaration Act"<sup>1</sup> of that year, empowered the Court for Divorce and Matrimonial Causes, on the petition of certain persons specially interested, to make decrees declaratory of the legitimacy or illegitimacy of any such petitioner, or of the validity or invalidity of the marriage of his parents, or grandparents, or of his own marriage, or of his right to be deemed a natural-born subject.

§ 490. In entertaining suits to perpetuate testimony, courts of equity will compel the defendant to appear and answer,<sup>2</sup> provided he be shown by the bill to have an interest in contesting the plaintiff's claim in the subject of the proposed evidence;<sup>3</sup> and the cause being brought to issue, the witnesses will be examined orally before one of the examiners of the court, not, indeed, ex parte, in accordance with the practice established for ordinary suits by the General Order in Chancery of the 5th February, 1861,<sup>4</sup> but according to the practice existing prior to that order;<sup>5</sup> that is, they will be examined "in the presence of the parties, their counsel, solicitors, or agents;" they will be subject to cross-examination and re-examination; and the whole proceeding will be conducted in the mode in use in courts of law, with respect to a witness about to go abroad.<sup>6</sup> The depositions will then be taken down, signed, authenticated, and transmitted to the Record Office, in the same manner as in other cases,<sup>1</sup> though, no relief being prayed, the suit is never brought to a hearing.<sup>2</sup> The court will not, in general, permit the publication of the depositions, except in support of a suit or action, nor then, unless it be proved that the witnesses are dead, or otherwise incapable of attending to be examined.<sup>3</sup> So, if a witness in imminent danger of death has been examined de bene esse, under the authority of the ecclesiastical courts, the deposition cannot be read, unless proof be given that the witness has since died, or is too ill to be again examined at the hearing of the cause.<sup>4</sup>

§ 491. It was stated in the last chapter, that if a witness, besides being examined on interrogatories, should testify at the trial of a cause, either party, on any subsequent trial respecting the same subject, provided the witness be then incapable of attending, may rely, at his option, either on the deposition, or on the previous vivâ voce testimony; <sup>5</sup> and it may be here observed,<sup>6</sup> that what such witness has orally testified may be proved, either by any person, who will swear from his own memory,<sup>7</sup> or by notes taken at the time by any person, who will swear to their accuracy,<sup>8</sup> or possibly, from the necessity of the case, by the judge's notes.<sup>9</sup> This last mode of proof, however, is open to very grave, if not insuperable, objections, as such notes form no part of the record, nor is it the duty of the judge to take them, nor have they the sanction of his oath to their accuracy or completeness.<sup>10</sup> How far it may be necessary to prove the precise words spoken, does not clearly appear. Lord Kenyon mentions a case, where the evidence of a witness was rejected, "as he could not undertake to give the words, but merely to swear to the effect of them ;”<sup>1</sup> and the same precision has, on several occasions, been deemed requisite in America ;<sup>2</sup> but on the other hand, it has been urged, with much force,<sup>3</sup> that to insist upon strict accuracy, goes, in effect, to exclude this sort of evidence altogether, or to admit it only in cases, where the particularity and minuteness of the witness’s narrative, and the exactness with which he undertakes to repeat every word of the deceased’s testimony, ought to excite just doubts of his own honesty, and of the truth of his evidence.<sup>4</sup>

§ 492. Perhaps, therefore, on occasions when nothing of importance turns on the precise expressions used, it will be considered sufficient if the witness can speak with certainty to the substance of what was sworn on the former trial. Even on indictments for perjury it is not necessary to state the entire examination, but it will suffice to narrate, with accuracy, the whole of that portion of the evidence which relates to the point on which the perjury is assigned, provided the witness can further swear that he heard the whole examination, and that nothing was subsequently said to qualify the original statement.<sup>5</sup> Unless he can do this his evidence cannot be received ;<sup>6</sup> and as the same rule must apply to the proof of the testimony of a deceased witness, it follows that if the person who heard him give his evidence can only state what was said on the examination in chief, without also giving the substance of his answers in cross-examination, or, at least, positively swearing that nothing escaped the witness which could vary or qualify the first statement, his evidence will be inadmissible.<sup>7</sup> objections which might have been raised, had the witness himself been personally present at the trial. Leading and other illegal questions are therefore constantly suppressed, together with the answers to them; and this, too, whether the testimony has been taken vivâ voce or by written interrogatories.<sup>1</sup> But a party cannot repudiate an answer which has been given to an illegal question put on his own side;<sup>2</sup> and in all cases where objections are taken to interrogatories on the ground of their being couched in a leading form, the judge is vested with a wide discretion as to how much, if any, of the depositions returned he will in consequence strike out.<sup>3</sup> Where a witness, on being examined upon interrogatories in a foreign country, stated in one of his answers the contents of a letter which was not produced, that part<sup>4</sup> of the deposition was suppressed at the trial, though it was urged, that as the witness was beyond the jurisdiction of the court, no means existed for compelling the production of the letter.<sup>5</sup> "We have no power," said Chief Justice Tindal, "to compel the witness to give any evidence at all; but if he does give an answer, that answer must be taken in relation to the rules of our law on the subject of evidence."<sup>6</sup>

§ 494. In another case, a witness, with the view of showing that the defendants had used due diligence to obtain the answer of a party to a bill in Chancery, stated on interrogatories, that, as their agent, he had written to the party; and he then went on to describe the contents of the letter and of the reply, though he produced neither. At a subsequent trial this deposition was tendered in evidence, and the court, while rejecting the answers which stated what the letters contained, admitted that part of the deposition which proved that the witness had written a letter to the party in question; for had the witness been himself present in court he might have been examined thus far, in order to prove that the defendants through him had used some exertion to procure the party's answer.<sup>1</sup> Again, depositions have been admitted, though the witness on his examination had refreshed his memory with some papers, which he alleged were partly in his handwriting and partly not, but which he refused to allow the commissioners to see upon the ground that they were private memoranda; for, as it was a matter for the discretion of the commissioners, whether they would permit the witness to refer to papers during his examination, the learned judge, at the trial, presumed that they had exercised their discretion with propriety.<sup>2</sup>

§ 495. Another general rule, which governs the production of secondary evidence, whether of documents or of oral testimony, is, that the law recognises no degrees in the various kinds of such evidence.<sup>3</sup> If, therefore, a deed be lost, or be in the hands of the adversary, who after due notice refuses to produce it, the party seeking to give evidence of its contents may at once have recourse to parol testimony, though it be proved that he has in his possession a counterpart, a copy, or an abstract of the document.<sup>4</sup> So, if it be necessary to prove the former testimony of a deceased witness, any person who heard him examined may be called, though a clerk or a shorthand writer may have taken down his evidence word for word.<sup>5</sup> This rule, of course, does not mean that the mere memory of a witness, who has read a deed, is entitled to equal weight with an authenticated copy of the same instrument; for in many cases a jury would properly regard such evidence with distrust, and if it should appear that more satisfactory proof was intentionally withheld, their distrust might amount to absolute incredulity; but the rule simply applies to the legal admissibility of the evidence, and is founded on the inconvenience that could not fail to arise in the administration of justice, if the degrees of secondary evidence were strictly marshalled according to their intrinsic weight, and if parties were consequently driven, before they could have recourse to parol testimony, to account for all secondary evidence of superior value, the very existence of which they might have no means of ascertaining.

§ 496. In considering the practical effect of this rule, care must be taken to exclude from its operation those cases in which the law has expressly substituted, in the place of primary proof, some particular species of secondary evidence. Thus, for instance, where the contents of public records and documents are to be proved, examined copies are, on grounds of general convenience, considered admissible;<sup>1</sup> and such copies, though in strictness secondary evidence, partake so much of the character of primary proof, that so long as it is possible to produce them, other inferior degrees of secondary evidence cannot be received.<sup>2</sup> Parol testimony, therefore, can only be admitted, on proof, first, that the public record or document has itself been lost or destroyed, for otherwise an examined copy might be obtained; and, secondly, that such copy, if any has been taken, is no longer under the control of the party relying upon less satisfactory evidence.<sup>3</sup> In like manner, if a witness has been examined before a magistrate or coroner under such circumstances, that these officers respectively have, in pursuance of their duty, taken down his statement in writing, parol evidence of his examination cannot be given in the event of his death, so long as the deposition itself can be produced; for the law having constituted the deposition as the authentic medium of proof, will not permit the admission of any inferior species of evidence. If, indeed, it can be shown that the deposition is lost or destroyed, or is in the possession of the opposite party, who after notice refuses to produce it, the statement of a witness who was present at the examination will then be admissible, as well as a copy of the deposition.<sup>1</sup>

§ 497. The rule which includes in one legal category every species of secondary proof, by no means opens a door to all sorts of evidence, however loose, which a party chooses to tender.<sup>2</sup> The contents, therefore, of a written instrument which is lost cannot be proved by means of a copy, until it be shown that such copy is accurate; and if, as frequently happens, a party to the suit has himself made a copy of a letter which he has sent to his adversary, this copy, should the adversary refuse to produce the letter after notice, cannot be read in evidence, unless the party who made it can swear to its accuracy, or some other witness can be called who has compared it with the original.<sup>3</sup> Neither can a document be proved by the production of the copy of a copy,<sup>4</sup> for such evidence would be rejected on the broad ground which renders hearsay evidence inadmissible. The opponent would have a right to object that, assuming the second copy to correspond exactly with the first, the first must be produced and proved to have been compared with the original, or otherwise there would be nothing to show that the second copy and the original were identical. Such evidence would in fact be but the shadow of a shade.

CHAPTER VI.

EVIDENCE ADDRESSED TO THE SENSES.

§ 498. THE first degree of evidence, and that which, though open to error and misconception, is obviously most satisfactory to the mind, is afforded by our own senses.<sup>1</sup> “Believe half what you see, and a twentieth part of what you hear,” is a maxim, which reflects severely upon human intelligence and veracity, but which, nevertheless, is founded in the main upon the experience of life, and marks the vast distinction that obtains between a knowledge of facts derived from actual perception, and the belief of the existence of facts resting on the information of others. In judicial proceedings, the judge or jury can seldom act entirely upon evidence of this description, though, when pregnancy is pleaded, a jury of matrons is empowered to decide the issue upon examination of the person of the prisoner;<sup>2</sup> but in a vast number of instances, especially where the fact in dispute is sought to be proved by circumstantial evidence, the verdict will be found to rest materially upon matter submitted to the ocular inspection of the jury. Thus, if a prisoner be indicted for stealing corn, and one of the circumstances tending to establish his guilt be his possession of wheat apparently resembling a quantity from which a portion has been recently taken, it is evident that a comparison by the jury of the wheat found upon the prisoner with a sample of that belonging to the prosecutor, will be more satisfactory than if its identity be sworn to by a witness, who, out of court, has examined the two lots. It is true that the jury may come to an erroneous conclusion in such a case ; for either the witnesses, who state that the two parcels of wheat produced were respectively taken from the prisoner and the prosecutor, may intentionally or accidentally assert what is not true, or the jurors themselves may be mistaken in assuming the identity of the grain. Still, both these sources of error will equally exist, in the event of a witness being called to state the result of his previous examination of the two samples. And this last course will be further open to the objection, that such a witness may with little danger tell a fabricated story, since examination as to mere matters of opinion is almost necessarily inconclusive, and consequently the jury run the additional risk of being misled by his fraudulent testimony.

§ 499. These observations apply to all cases, in which the guilt or innocence of a prisoner depends upon the identity or comparison of two articles found in different places ; as, for example, the wadding of a pistol with portions of a torn letter found on the person of the accused, or the fractured bone of a sheep with mutton found in his house, or fragments of dress with his rent garment, or damaged property with the instrument by which the damage is supposed to have been effected. In all these, and the like cases, it is highly expedient, if possible, to produce to the court the articles sought to be compared ; and although the law, in demanding the production of the best evidence, does not expressly require that this course should be adopted, but permits a witness to testify as to his having made the comparison, without first proving that the articles cannot be produced at the trial, their non-production, when unexplained, may often generate a suspicion of unfairness, and will always furnish an occasion for serious comment.<sup>1</sup> In illustration of this subject, reference may be made to an old case. A boy having found a diamond, took it to a jeweller, who refused to return it to him. An action of trover was brought, and as the jeweller declined to produce the diamond at the trial, the judge directed the jury to presume that it was of the finest water, and they found accordingly.<sup>2</sup> So, in the case of

Wood v. Peel,<sup>1</sup> where the point at issue was whether the plaintiff's horse Running Rein, who had won the Derby in 1844, was foaled by Mab in 1841, the production of the horse, in order to test the accuracy and credit of the witnesses who had sworn to its identity, was considered so material, that the plaintiff, being unable to comply with an order of the court to produce it, submitted very prudently to a nonsuit, rather than run the almost inevitable risk of a verdict in favour of the defendant.

§ 500. In many cases of this nature it will be advisable, in order to guide the jury to a right decision, that persons conversant with the articles produced should be examined as to their opinion respecting the proof of identity. For instance, if the question be whether two samples of wine be drawn from the same bin, or two pieces of cloth be the produce of the same loom, or two coins be struck in the same die, it is important that a wine-merchant, a clothier, or an officer of the Mint,<sup>2</sup> should respectively be called, in order to furnish the court with suggestions founded on practical experience; because, in such inquiries, a jury, composed of persons perhaps but little acquainted with these matters, can scarcely, without some extrinsic aid, be enabled to form a correct judgment respecting them. Still, even here the articles should be produced, that the jury may test the accuracy of the opinions expressed by the witnesses, and may perceive that the reasons, upon which those opinions are founded, correspond with the actual state and condition of the articles themselves.

§ 501. Though evidence addressed to the senses, if judiciously employed, is obviously entitled to the greatest weight, care must be taken not to push it beyond its legitimate extent. The minds of jurymen, especially in the remote provinces, are grievously open to prejudices, and the production of a bloody knife, a bludgeon, or a burnt piece of rag, may sometimes, by exciting the passions, or enlisting the sympathies of the jury, lead them to overlook the necessity of proving in what manner these articles are connected with the criminal or the crime; and they consequently run no slight risk of arriving at conclusions, which, for want of some link in the evidence, are by no means warranted by the facts proved. The abuse of this kind of evidence has been a fruitful theme for the satirist; and many amusing illustrations of its effect might be cited from our best authors. Shakespeare makes Jack Cade's nobility rest on this foundation; for Jack Cade having asserted, that the eldest son of Edmund Mortimer, Earl of March, "was by a beggar woman stolen away," "became a bricklayer when he came to age," and was his father, one of the rioters confirms the story, by saying, "Sir, he made a chimney in my father's house, and the bricks are alive at this day to testify it; therefore deny it not."<sup>1</sup> Archbishop Whately, who makes use of the above anecdote in his diverting "Historic Doubts relative to Napoleon Buonaparte," adds, "Truly this evidence is such as countrypeople give one for a story of apparitions; if you discover any signs of incredulity, they triumphantly show the very house which the ghost haunted, the identical dark corner where it used to vanish, and perhaps even the tombstone of the person whose death it foretold."<sup>2</sup> So, in the interesting story of "The Amber Witch," the poor girl charged with witchcraft, after complaining that she was the victim of the sheriff, who wished to do "wantonness with her," added, that he had come to her dungeon the night before for that purpose, and had struggled with her, "whereupon she had screamed aloud, and had scratched him across the nose, as might yet be seen, whereupon he had left her." To this the sheriff replied, "that it was his little lap-dog, called Below, which had scratched him, while he played with it that very morning," and having produced the dog, the court were satisfied with the truth of his explanation.<sup>3</sup>

§ 502. Turning once more to matters of graver import, it may be observed that in causes, either relating to disputed rights of way, or involving some question which depends on the relative position of places, it is often desirable that the jury should have an opportunity of viewing the spot in controversy;<sup>1</sup> since the knowledge derived by these means is far more satisfactory than any obtainable by the mere examination of maps or plans, which are often inaccurate and obscure, and may perhaps have been prepared with an express view to mislead. The attention of the Legislature having been drawn to this subject, a clause was inserted in the Jury Act of 1825,<sup>2</sup> which enacts in substance, that when in any case, either civil or criminal, or on any penal statute, depending in one of the superior courts of law at Westminster, or in the counties palatine, it shall appear proper that some of the jurors shall have a view of the place in question, in order to their better understanding the evidence that may be given at the trial, the court or a judge may order that a writ shall be drawn up for such purpose. As the machinery under this statute was needlessly cumbrous, a provision was introduced into the Common Law Procedure Act of 1852,<sup>3</sup> to simplify the practice by substituting a rule for a view in the place of the old writ; and the judges, in order further to facilitate the mode of procedure, subsequently passed a resolution, that "the rule for a view may, in all cases, be drawn up by the officer of the court, on the application of the party, without a motion for that purpose."<sup>4</sup>

<sup>3</sup> 15 & 16 V., c. 76, § 114, enacts, that "a writ of view shall not be necessary or used; but whether the view is to be had by a common or special jury, it shall be sufficient to obtain a rule of the court or judge's order, directing the view to be had; and the proceedings upon the rule for a view shall be the same as the proceedings heretofore had under a writ of view; and the sheriff, upon request, shall deliver to either party the names of the viewers, and also shall return their names to the associate for the purpose of their being called as jurymen upon the trial." place in question," a view could seldom be granted by the court, except in actions of a local nature, such as trespass quare clausum fregit, waste, and nuisance; and Mr. Baron Parke even held that the enactment was inapplicable to a case, where an action was brought to recover the value of work done to the defendant's house, and the defence rested on the alleged bad quality of the work.<sup>1</sup> The construction thus put upon the Act proved very clearly that the Superior Courts possessed no adequate powers for ordering a view even in the case of a house; and the Common Law Commissioners were not slow to perceive, that in numerous other cases an inspection of chattels before trial, either by the party, his witnesses, or the jury, might be of great advantage,—as, for example, when the quality or construction of machinery, or the condition, or value, or identity of goods was in dispute.<sup>2</sup> Accordingly, they recommended in their second Report, that the Superior Courts of Common Law should be intrusted with additional powers for ordering the inspection of premises and chattels, and their recommendation was carried out by § 58 of the Common Law Procedure Act, 1854.<sup>3</sup>

§ 504. This section enacts, that "Either party shall be at liberty to apply to the court or a judge for a rule or order for the inspection by the jury, or by himself, or by his witnesses, of any real or personal property, the inspection of which may be material to the proper determination of the question in dispute;<sup>4</sup> and it shall be lawful for the court, or a judge, if they or he think fit, to make such rule or order, upon such terms as to costs and otherwise as such court or judge may direct: provided always, that nothing herein contained shall affect the provisions of the 'Common Law Procedure Act, 1852,' or any previous Act, as to obtaining a view by a jury: provided also, that all rules and regulations now in force and applicable to the proceedings by view under the said last-mentioned Act, shall be held to apply to proceedings for inspection by a jury under the provisions of this Act, or as near thereto as may be."

§ 504 A. The Irish Act of 16 & 17 V., c. 113, contains a clause, which, though differently worded, is the same in effect as that just cited; for § 47 provides, that “in any case in which it shall appear to the court or a judge, that it would be necessary, for the purpose of ascertaining the truth of any matter in dispute between the parties in the action, that an inspection or examination of any premises or chattels in the possession or power of either party, and in respect of which, or some right or injury connected with which, the said action shall be brought, should be had by the opposite party, his attorney, agent, witnesses, or by the jury, it shall be lawful for such court or judge to order that the party, in whose possession or power the same shall be, shall permit an inspection and examination of the said premises or chattels by the jury, or by such person or persons on behalf of the party applying, and at such times and under such regulations, as to the said court or judge shall seem fit.” The Patent Law Amendment Act, 1852,<sup>1</sup> which extends equally to England and Ireland, recognises the same principle; and under § 42 of that statute, either party may, in an action for the infringement of letters patent, obtain such an order for an inspection<sup>2</sup> as the court or a judge may think fit to grant.

§ 505. All these statutory powers to order the inspection of property, give to the courts and judges, by implication, authority to order all things ancillary to the inspection required. Where, therefore, a wall had recently been erected in a mine, so as to obstruct a complete inspection of the workings, the court, on a question of encroachment, ordered the removal of such obstruction.<sup>3</sup>

§ 505 A. Again, under the “Chancery Amendment Act, 1858,”<sup>4</sup> which enables courts of equity to call in the assistance of juries for the purpose of assessing damages, and trying questions of fact, certain orders have been promulgated, which authorise either party "to apply by summons to an equity judge at chambers for a view by the jury,"—regulate the mode in which the view is to be conducted,—and fix the scale of fees for remunerating respectively the under-sheriff, the showers, and the jurymen.<sup>1</sup>

§ 505 B. The Admiralty Court Act, 1861,<sup>2</sup> contains in § 18 an enactment on the same subject, which enables any party to apply to that court "for an order for the inspection by the Trinity Masters or others appointed for the trial of the cause, or by the party himself or his witnesses, of any ship or other personal or real property, the inspection of which may be material to the issue of the cause; and the court may make such order in respect of the costs arising thereout as to it shall seem fit."<sup>3</sup>

§ 506. These are admirable provisions so far as they extend, but as a question of policy it will scarcely admit of a doubt, that the power of granting a view, which is at present confined, both in England and in Ireland, to the judges of the Superior Courts, and to proceedings in those courts, might with great advantage be extended to every court of record. One practical result of thus enlarging the sphere of its operation would be to obviate, in a great measure, the necessity which now obtains, of adopting the costly and uncertain course of removing proceedings from the Central Criminal Court, the Crown Courts at the Assizes, and the Sessions, into the Queen's Bench by certiorari, whenever it is essential to the ends of justice that a view should be granted. It also deserves consideration, whether it be not expedient to empower the presiding judge at any trial to order a view, even after the evidence had been heard, if in his opinion such a step is necessary for the purposes of justice.

CHAPTER VII.

HEARSAY.

§ 507.<sup>1</sup> As evidence afforded by our own senses is seldom attainable in judicial trials, the law is satisfied with requiring the next best evidence, namely, the testimony of those who can speak from their own personal knowledge. It is not requisite that the witness should have personal knowledge of the main fact in controversy; for this may not be provable by direct testimony, but only by inference from other facts shown to exist. But it is requisite that, whatever facts the witness may speak to, he should be confined to those lying within his own knowledge, whether they be things said or done, and should not testify from information given by others, however worthy of credit they may be. For it is deemed indispensable to the proper administration of justice,—first, that every witness should give his testimony under the sanction of an oath, or its equivalent, a solemn affirmation,—and secondly, that he should be subject to the ordeal of a cross-examination by the party against whom he is called, so that it may appear, if necessary, what were his powers of perception, his opportunities for observation, his attentiveness in observing, the strength of his recollection, and his disposition to speak the truth. But testimony from the relation of third persons, even where the informant is known, cannot be subjected to these tests; for, as Mr. Justice Buller observes, “If the first speech were without oath, another oath that there was such speech makes it no more than a mere speaking, and so of no value in a court of justice;”<sup>2</sup> besides, it is often impossible to ascertain through whom, or how many persons, the narrative has been transmitted, from the original witness of the fact. It is this, which constitutes that sort of second-hand evidence, termed hearsay; a species of proof which, with a few exceptions that will be presently noticed, cannot be received in judicial investigations.<sup>1</sup>

§ 508. This rule of exclusion has been recognised as a fundamental principle of the law of evidence ever since the time of Charles the Second;<sup>2</sup> and so strictly is it enforced that it is even held applicable to cases, in which, if the declaration be rejected, no other evidence can possibly be obtained; as, for example, where the declaration purports to be that of the only eye-witness of the transaction, and he is since dead.<sup>3</sup> So, it has several times been held, where prisoners have been indicted for ravishing children, who were too young to be admissible witnesses, that statements made by the children to their mothers shortly after the

<sup>1</sup> The rule excluding hearsay evidence, or rather the mode in which that rule is frequently misunderstood in courts of justice, is amusingly caricatured by Mr. Dickens in his report of the case of Bardell v. Pickwick, p. 367:

“ ‘I believe you are in the service of Mr. Pickwick, the defendant in this case. Speak up if you please, Mr. Weller.’

“ ‘I mean to speak up, sir,’ replied Sam. ‘I am in the service o’ that ’ere gen’l’mán, and wery good service it is.’

“ ‘Little to do, and plenty to get, I suppose?’ said Serjeant Buzfuz, with jocularly.

“ ‘Oh quite enough to get, sir, as the soldier said ven they ordered him three hundred and fifty lashes,’ replied Sam.

“ ‘You must not tell us what the soldier, or any other man, said, sir,’ interposed the judge, ‘it’s not evidence.’

<sup>3</sup> 1 Ph. Ev. 209. In Scotland the rule is otherwise; evidence on the relation of others being admitted, where the relator is since dead, and would, if living, have been a competent witness.—1 Dickson, Ev. 66, 67. And if the relation has been handed down to the witness at second hand, and through several successive relators, each only stating what he received from the intermediate relator, it seems to be still admissible, if the original and intermediate relators are all dead, and would have been competent witnesses if living. Tait, Ev. 430, 431; but see 1 Dickson, Ev. 70. The reason for receiving hearsay evidence in cases, where, as is often the case in Scotland, the judges determine upon the facts in dispute, as well as upon the law, is stated and vindicated by Sir J. Mansfield, in the Berkeley Peer., 4 Camp. 415. It is observable, that, according to the practice of the English courts, hearsay evidence is often admitted and acted upon in affidavits, which are submitted to the judges only.

offence was committed, could not be received in evidence.<sup>1</sup> So, also, a declaration, though made on oath, and in the course of a judicial proceeding, cannot be received, if the litigating parties are not the same; because, in such case, the party against whom the evidence is offered, has had no opportunity of cross-examining the declarant. The deposition therefore of a pauper as to the place of his settlement, taken ex parte before a magistrate, will be rejected, though the pauper himself has since absconded or died.<sup>2</sup>

§ 509. The rule will even exclude declarations of a deceased subscribing witness to a deed or will, in disparagement of the evidence afforded by his signature. In the case of Stobart v. Dryden,<sup>3</sup> the admissibility of such declarations was strenuously urged on two grounds; first, that since the party offering the deed used the declaration of the witness, as evidenced by his signature, to prove the execution, the other party might well be permitted to use any other declaration of the same witness, to disprove it; and, secondly, that such declaration was in the nature of a substitute for the loss of the benefit of a cross-examination of the subscribing witness; by which either the fact confessed would have been proved, or the witness might have been contradicted, and his credit impeached. Both these grounds were overruled by the Court of Exchequer; the first, because the evidence of the handwriting in the attestation is not used as a declaration by the witness, but is offered merely to show the fact that he put his name there, in the manner in which attestations are usually placed to genuine signatures; and the second, chiefly because of the mischiefs which would ensue, if the general rule excluding hearsay were thus broken in upon. For the security of solemn instruments would thereby become much impaired, and the rights of parties under them would be liable to be affected at remote periods by loose declarations of the attesting witnesses, which could neither be explained, nor contradicted, by the testimony of the witnesses themselves. In admitting such declarations, too, there would be no reciprocity; for although the party impeaching the instrument would thereby have an equivalent for the loss of his power of cross-examination of the living witness, the other party would have none for the loss of his power of re-examination.

§ 510.<sup>1</sup> The term hearsay is used with reference to what is done or written, as well as to what is spoken; and, in its legal sense, it denotes that kind of evidence which does not derive its value solely from the credit given to the witness himself, but which rests also, in part, on the veracity and competence of some other person.<sup>2</sup> That this species of evidence is not given upon oath, that it cannot be tested by cross-examination, and that it supposes some better testimony, which might be adduced in the particular case, are not the sole grounds for its exclusion. Its tendency to protract legal investigations to an embarrassing and dangerous length, its intrinsic weakness,<sup>3</sup> its incompetency to satisfy the mind as to the existence of the fact, and the frauds which may be practised with impunity under its cover, combine to support the rule that hearsay evidence is inadmissible.<sup>4</sup>

§ 511. It cannot, however, be denied, that the rule excluding hearsay evidence, though in general admirably calculated for trials before popular tribunals, may in many instances work considerable injustice. For example, on a question respecting the competency of a testator, the conduct of his family or relations taking the same precautions in his absence as if he were a lunatic, or his election in his absence to some high and responsible office, or the conduct of a physician who permitted him to execute a will,—all these, when considered with reference to the matter in issue, are mere instances of hearsay evidence, mere statements expressed in the language of conduct instead of the language of words; and, consequently, they are inadmissible in a court of justice, although in the ordinary transactions of life they would deservedly be considered as cogent moral proof.<sup>1</sup> So, on a question of seaworthiness, the fact that a deceased captain, after examining every part of the vessel, embarked in it with his family,—and, on a question respecting the loss of insured property, the fact that other underwriters have paid on the same policy,<sup>2</sup>—cannot be received in evidence. On the same ground the fact, that, after the issuing of a fiat, certain creditors of the bankrupt returned to his assignees goods which they had received from the bankrupt before he delivered other goods to the defendant, was, in an action of trover brought by the assignees, held inadmissible, as proof that an act of bankruptcy had been committed prior to the time when the goods came into the hands of the defendant;<sup>3</sup> and, not to multiply instances,<sup>4</sup> where a servant was indicted for perjury, in saying that her deceased mistress had never had a child, declarations of the mistress were rejected as evidence for the Crown,<sup>5</sup> although, in an action of ejectment, where the same question was in issue, and the words charged as perjury were uttered, such evidence was admitted, as relating to a matter of pedigree.<sup>6</sup>

§ 512. In most of the instances given above, as illustrating the occasional inconvenience of the rule, the evidence rejected amounted to something more than the mere declarations of parties not examined on oath, nor subjected to cross-examination; for these declarations were accompanied by acts done in confirmation of their sincerity, and as such, the evidence was, morally speaking, entitled to great weight. The law, however, will not on this account allow any exception to be made in favour of hearsay; for

although, if an act done be evidence per se, any declarations accompanying that act are, as we shall presently see,<sup>1</sup> admissible for the purpose of illustrating, qualifying, or completing it; yet if the act be in its own nature irrelevant to the issue, and the declaration be inadmissible, the union of the two cannot render them evidence.<sup>2</sup>

§ 513. This question was much discussed in the great case of Doe d. Tatham v. Wright,<sup>3</sup> where the title to the property in dispute depended upon the competency of Mr. Marsden to make a will. The cause was tried four times, and as often debated in the Superior Courts, till at length in the House of Lords it was decided by all the judges, that letters addressed to a person, whose sanity is the fact in question, unless connected in evidence with some act done by him in relation thereto, are inadmissible to show that he was sane, though the writers were since dead, and the party addressed was treated in the letters as an intelligent man. A great majority of the learned judges also held upon that occasion, that the mere fact of finding such letters, many years after they were written, with the seals broken, in company with other papers bearing indorsements in the testator's handwriting, in a cupboard under his bookcase in his private room, was insufficient to raise an inference that they had been read, understood, or acted upon by him; since, although letters, found in such a situation, would no doubt be evidence against a party criminally accused or civilly charged, because, on the tacit supposition that he was a man of sound mind, it would be presumed that he was cognisant of their contents;<sup>4</sup> yet to make such a supposition, where the capacity of the party was the matter in controversy, would be to argue in a circle. The reasoning, in fact, would proceed thus:—because the testator had sufficient ability to transact business, therefore the inference arises that he read and understood the letters ; and because he read and understood the letters, therefore the inference arises that he had sufficient ability to transact business.<sup>1</sup>

§ 514. Had the testator, in the case just put, indorsed these letters himself, or could any direct and positive evidence have been given to show that he had, whether by act, speech, or writing, manifested a knowledge of their contents, it is clear that the letters could not have been rejected, or in any way withdrawn from the consideration of the jury ; for although they would then have been admitted solely on the technical ground that they explained and illustrated his conduct, no rule of law could have prevented them from operating with full effect upon the minds of the jury, as showing the unbiassed opinions of the writers, and in what manner the testator had been treated by them.<sup>2</sup>

§ 515. When the ecclesiastical tribunals were courts of probate, they adopted a different rule from that established by the case of Doe d. Tatham v. Wright ; and in questions respecting the mental capacity of a testator, they admitted, as evidence of treatment, letters written to him by his friends, without proof of any recognition on his part,<sup>3</sup>—and, as evidence of opinion, letters written by his relatives even to other parties.<sup>4</sup> These decisions, however, are

A letter of friendship from a relative, with whom the testator was proved to have corresponded three years afterwards ; 3rd. A letter advising the testator to direct his attorney to take steps in a transaction with a certain parish. This letter was indorsed by the attorney, who was long since deceased. Three of the judges considered that all the letters were admissible, six thought that the last was. The remaining judges, including Lds. Brougham, Lyndhurst, and Cottenham, held that all the letters were alike inadmissible.

now, it is feared, of no importance, as the new Court of Probate is bound to recognise the rules of evidence observed in the courts of common law.<sup>1</sup>

§ 516.<sup>2</sup> In considering this branch of the law of evidence, care must be taken to distinguish clearly between hearsay evidence and that which is deemed original. For it does not follow that, because the writings or words in question are those of a third person not under oath, they are therefore to be considered as hearsay. On the contrary, it often happens that the very fact in controversy is, whether certain things were written, or spoken, and not whether they were true; and at other times the oral or written statements tendered in evidence may prove to be the natural or inseparable concomitants of the principal fact in controversy.<sup>3</sup> In either of these cases it is obvious that the writings or words are not within the meaning of hearsay, but are original and independent facts, admissible in proof of the issue. Thus, if the question be whether a party has acted prudently, wisely, or in good faith, the information on which he acted, whether true or false, is original and material evidence. This<sup>4</sup> is often illustrated in actions for malicious prosecution,<sup>5</sup> or libel;<sup>6</sup> as also in cases of agency, and of trusts. For example, in an action for malicious prosecution, the plaintiff, in order to show that the magistrate's leniency in admitting him to bail had been occasioned, not by the intercession of the defendant, but by the receipt of a letter said to have come from a judge, tendered such letter in evidence, and it was held to be admissible, without proof that it was written by the judge's authority; and, in the same case, an affidavit sworn by a clerk of the prosecutor's attorney, which stated that means had been taken on the part of the prosecutor to prevent a person from becoming bail for the plaintiff, was likewise admitted as original evidence, without the clerk's being called to prove by whose instructions he had made the affidavit.<sup>1</sup> So, the replies given to inquiries made at the residence, either of an absent witness, or of a bankrupt, denying that he was at home, are original evidence, without examining the persons to whom the inquiries were addressed; because the testimony of the parties inquiring is sufficient to establish the denial, which is the only material fact.<sup>2</sup>

§ 517.<sup>3</sup> Not only does this doctrine apply, whenever the fact that a certain communication was made, and not its truth or falsehood, is the point in controversy;<sup>4</sup> but it extends also to those cases, where the truth of the fact in dispute will be inferred from the existence of another fact which is under investigation. Upon these grounds it is considered that evidence of general reputation, reputed ownership, public rumour, general character, general notoriety, and the like, though composed of the speech of third persons not under oath, is original evidence and not hearsay; the immediate subject of inquiry being the concurrence of many voices, which raises a presumption that the fact in which they concur is true.<sup>5</sup> Thus, it has frequently been decided that, except in petitions for damages by reason of adultery, and in indictments for bigamy, where strict proof of marriage is required,<sup>6</sup> general reputation is admissible to establish the fact of parties being married. In most of the cases, the marriage has been proved by evidence of certain specific facts, such as the parties being received into society as man and wife, being visited by respectable families in the neighbourhood, attending church and public places together, and otherwise demeaning themselves in public, and addressing each other, as persons actually married.<sup>1</sup> Still, though some of these circumstances are receivable, as amounting to acts of admission by the parties themselves, those, which are merely evidence of the treatment of the parties by third persons, cannot be admissible on any principle that would not equally include the declarations of strangers. The acts, like the words, merely show the opinion entertained by persons not called as witnesses; and though it may be said, that what a person does is usually better evidence of his opinion than what he says, yet this is an observation which goes rather to the weight than to the admissibility of the evidence. Accordingly, general evidence of reputation in the neighbourhood, even when unsupported by facts, will be receivable in proof of marriage; and in one case it was decided, after verdict, that the uncorroborated statement of a single witness, who did not appear to be related to the parties, or to live near them, or to know them intimately, but who asserted that he had heard they were married, was sufficient, primâ facie, to warrant the jury in finding the marriage, the adverse party not having cross-examined the witness, nor controverted the fact by proof.<sup>2</sup> Upon somewhat similar grounds, it has been held, that, on a prosecution for conspiring to procure large meetings to assemble for the purpose of inspiring terror in the community, a witness might be called to prove that several persons, who were not examined at the trial, had complained to him that they were alarmed at these meetings, and had requested him to send for military assistance;<sup>3</sup> and, on a question whether a libellous painting was made to represent a certain individual, the declarations of spectators, while looking at the picture in the exhibition, have been admitted in evidence.<sup>4</sup>

are material to be proved, the usual expressions of such feelings, made at the time in question, are also original evidence. If they were the natural language of the affection, whether of body or mind, they furnish satisfactory evidence, and often the only proof, of its existence. And the question whether they were real, or feigned, is for the jury to determine. Thus, the representations by a sick person of the nature and effects of the malady under which he is labouring, are receivable as original evidence, whether they be made to the medical attendant, or to any other person, though the former are naturally entitled to greater weight than the latter, inasmuch as a physician is far more capable than a man unacquainted with the symptoms of diseases, of forming a correct judgment respecting the accuracy of the statements.<sup>1</sup> This doctrine has been carried to such an extent that, in an action by the husband upon a policy of insurance on the life of his wife, where the question related to the state of her health at the time when the policy was effected, a witness for the defendants was allowed to state the result of a conversation she had had with the deceased, shortly after the surgeon who was consulted in effecting the insurance had given a certificate of her health, in which conversation the deceased had expressed an apprehension that she should only live a few days, and had added that she had not been well from a time preceding her being examined by the surgeon. The court held that the conversation was admissible, notwithstanding the general rule which at that time excluded the declaration of a wife as against her husband;<sup>2</sup> and the more especially so, as the surgeon had been first called by the plaintiff, and had admitted that he had formed his opinion respecting her health, principally from the satisfactory answers which she had given to his inquiries.<sup>3</sup>

by the deceased in conversation shortly before he took the poison, have been received in evidence for the purpose of proving the state of his health at that time;<sup>1</sup> and, on the same ground, it has frequently been held, in actions or indictments for assault, that what a man has said about himself to his surgeon was evidence to show what he suffered by reason of the assault.<sup>2</sup> So, on an indictment for highway robbery, the fact that the prosecutor, a few hours after the attack made upon him, complained to a constable that he had been robbed, will perhaps be admissible; though the witness cannot be further asked whether, on making the complaint, the prosecutor mentioned the name of the prisoner.<sup>3</sup> It would seem, also, that, in prosecutions for rape, proof that the woman shortly after the injury complained that a dreadful outrage had been perpetrated upon her, would, in the event of her death, be receivable as independent evidence;<sup>4</sup> and if the prosecutrix were called as a witness, such complaints would à fortiori be admissible as tending to confirm her credit.<sup>5</sup> In no case, however, can the particulars of the complaint be disclosed by witnesses for the Crown, either as original, or as confirmatory evidence, but the details of the statement can only be elicited by the prisoner's counsel on cross-examination.<sup>6</sup> It is difficult to see upon what principle this rule is founded, where the complaint is offered as confirmatory evidence; because, if witnesses were permitted to relate all that the prosecutrix had said in making her original complaint, such evidence would furnish the best test of the accu-

§ 520. Again, in petitions for damages on the ground of adultery,<sup>2</sup> if it be material, with the view of increasing or diminishing the damages, to ascertain upon what terms the husband and wife lived together before the seduction, their language and deportment towards each other, their correspondence together, and their conversations and correspondence with third persons, are original evidence.<sup>3</sup> But, to guard against the abuse of this rule, it must be proved by some evidence independent of the date appearing on the face of the letters,<sup>4</sup> that they were written by the wife to the husband prior to any suspicion of misconduct on her part, and when, consequently, no grounds existed for imputing collusion.<sup>5</sup> It is not, however, necessary, in the absence of other suspicious circumstances, to explain why the husband and wife were living apart at the time when the letters were written,<sup>6</sup> though of course it is expedient that such explanation should, if possible, be given.

interwoven as to be hardly separable from each other. Each owes its birth to some preceding circumstance, and in its turn becomes the prolific parent of others ; and each, during its existence, has its inseparable attributes, and its kindred facts, materially affecting its character, and essential to be known, in order to a right understanding of its nature. These surrounding circumstances may always be shown to the jury along with the principal fact, provided they constitute parts of what are termed the res gestæ ; and whether they do so or not must in each particular case be determined by the judge in the exercise of his sound discretion, according to the degree of relationship which they bear to that fact.<sup>1</sup> Thus, on the trial of Lord George Gordon for treason, the cry of the mob, who accompanied the prisoner on his enterprise, was received in evidence, as forming part of the res gestæ, and showing the character of the principal fact.<sup>2</sup> So, on an indictment for manslaughter, a statement, made by the deceased immediately after he was knocked down, as to how the accident happened, has been held admissible ;<sup>3</sup> and similar evidence has been received by Lord Holt, in an action brought by a husband and wife against a defendant for wounding the wife.<sup>4</sup> So, also, where a person enters upon land in order to take advantage of a forfeiture, to foreclose a mortgage, to defeat a disseisin,<sup>5</sup> or the like ; or changes his actual residence, or domicile,<sup>6</sup> or is upon a journey, or leaves his home, or returns thither, or remains abroad, or secretes himself ; or, in fine, does any other act material to be understood ; his declarations made at the time of the transaction, and expressive of its character, motive, or object, are regarded as “ verbal acts, indicating a present purpose and intention,” and are therefore admitted in proof, like any other material facts.<sup>7</sup>

So, upon an inquiry as to the state of mind, sentiments, or opinions of a person at any particular period, his contemporaneous declarations are admissible as parts of the res gestæ.<sup>1</sup> Again, in a suit for enticing away a servant, his statement at the time of leaving his master will be received, as tending to show the motive of his departure;<sup>2</sup> and where an action of trover was brought against the assignees of a bankrupt, and it appeared that the plaintiff, at the recommendation of the bankrupt, had sent some goods to a dyer, and had told him that the bankrupt would call and give directions about them, it was held that these directions should have been submitted to the jury on behalf of the assignees, as affording some evidence of a dealing with the goods, if not of the consent of the true owner to such dealing.<sup>3</sup>

§ 522. So extensive is this rule in its operation, that to a certain degree it even overrides the general provision of law, which precludes a party's declarations from being evidence for himself; and therefore, in an action for falsely representing the solvency of a stranger, whereby the plaintiffs were induced to trust him with goods, statements by them at the time when the goods were supplied, that they trusted him in consequence of the representation, were received as evidence on their behalf;<sup>4</sup> and where a bailee was sued for loss by negligence, his declarations, contemporaneous with the loss, have been held in America to be admissible in his favour, as tending to show the nature of the loss.<sup>5</sup> In Lord George Gordon's trial, his counsel strove to carry this doctrine one step further; and witnesses having been called by the Crown to speak to a meeting that was held on the 29th of

May, and to what fell from the defendant on that occasion, one of them was asked on cross-examination, what Lord George had said on the preceding night relative to the meeting, the object being to show thereby that his motives in convening and attending it were not criminal. The Court, however, held that though the witness might be questioned as to the whole conversation that passed at the meeting, the private declaration of the defendant, whether subsequent or precedent to that meeting, could not be given in evidence as explanatory of his intentions or conduct.<sup>1</sup>

§ 523. In the practical application of this rule, two points deserve especial attention. The first is, that declarations, though admissible as evidence of the declarant's knowledge or belief of the facts to which they relate, and of his intentions respecting them, are no proof of the facts themselves; and, therefore, if it be necessary to show the existence of such facts, proof aliundè must be laid before the jury; and it seems that, in strict practice, this proof should be given in the first instance, before the court be called upon to receive evidence of the declarations. For example, the fact of insolvency must be established, before statements of the insolvent will be admitted to show that he was aware of his embarrassed circumstances.<sup>2</sup> Sometimes, under the law relating to bankrupts, the truth of the facts need not be proved, but it will suffice to show the bankrupt's belief. Thus, if the act of bankruptcy relied upon be an absenting with intent to delay creditors, a declaration by the bankrupt that he left home to avoid a writ will be admissible, though no evidence be given that any writ was actually out against him, because, in order to constitute this act of bankruptcy, neither writ nor pressure is in fact necessary.<sup>3</sup> Still, even in this case, the departure from home is a substantive act, which must be proved by evidence independent of the declaration ; and being an act in itself equivocal, the statement of the bankrupt made during its continuance, is admissible to show the intention with which it was done.<sup>1</sup>

§ 524. The second point deserving consideration is, that, although acts, by whomsoever done, are res gestæ, if relevant to the matter in issue,<sup>2</sup> yet if they be irrelevant, declarations qualifying or explaining them will, together with the acts themselves, be rejected. Thus, in an action against a town for injuries sustained through a defect in a highway, the declarations of a surgeon, since deceased, which were made at the time of his examining the plaintiff's wounds, have been rejected as evidence of the nature and extent of the injuries ; for, in such a case as this, the fact of the surgical examination would itself have been immaterial, and the declarations were no more than the mere hearsay expression of a professional opinion.<sup>3</sup> On the non-attention to this rule was founded one of the main fallacies in Wright v. Doe d. Tatham. There, on an issue respecting the sanity of a testator, letters written to him, and found among his papers after his death, were offered in evidence ; and it was contended that the writing of a letter was an act done, that the contents of the letter were declarations accompanying that act, and that an opinion, though not evidence per se, was yet evidence when embodied in an act. To this it was answered by Mr. Justice Coltman, that, if the letter was admissible on this ground, it must be either because the act done is evidence by itself, or because the opinion was evidence. Where an act done is evidence per se, a declaration accompanying that act may well be evidence, if it reflects light upon or qualifies the act. But where the act is in its own nature irrelevant to the issue, and where the declaration per se cannot be received, no case has yet established that the union of the two will render them admissible.<sup>4</sup>

whether the circumstances and declarations offered in proof were so connected with the main fact under consideration, as to illustrate its character, to further its object, or to form, in conjunction with it, one continuous transaction. It was at one time thought necessary that they should be contemporaneous with it;<sup>1</sup> but this doctrine has of late years been rejected, and it seems now to be decided, that, although concurrence of time must always be considered as material evidence to show the connection, it is by no means essential.<sup>2</sup> Thus, what a bankrupt said immediately on his return home, as to the place where he had been, and his motive in going, has been held admissible;<sup>3</sup> and in Ridley v. Gyde,<sup>4</sup> where the disputed act of bankruptcy was a fraudulent transfer, a declaration by the bankrupt, in which he gave a false account of the matter, was received in evidence, though made nearly a month after the transfer had taken place. In that case, the creditor, with whom the conversation was held, had pressed for payment of his debt immediately before the transfer, and had been promised security for the following day; but, instead of keeping his word, the bankrupt had transferred his property to a relative, and had absconded. Under these circumstances the court, considering that the statement was a mere resumption of the conversation which was had at the first interview, adopted the rule which Mr. Justice Park had laid down in Rawson v. Haigh,<sup>5</sup> "that it is impossible to tie down to time the rule as to the declarations," and that, if connecting circumstances exist, a declaration may, even at a month's interval, form part of the whole res gestæ. So, where a trader had absented himself from home

<sup>1</sup> This seems still to be the law in America. Thus, in Enos v. Tuttle, 3 Conn. R. 250, Hosmer, C. J., observed, that declarations, to become part of the res gestæ, "must have been made at the time of the act done, which they are supposed to characterise, and have been well calculated to unfold the nature and quality of the facts they were intended to explain, and so to harmonise with them, as obviously to constitute one transaction."

during the latter half of February and the commencement of March, two letters written by him on the 16th of January, in which he had asked for time on some bills of exchange payable in February, were admitted in evidence, as tending to throw light on the cause of his absence.<sup>1</sup>

§ 526.<sup>2</sup> Still, an act cannot be varied, qualified, or explained, either by a declaration which amounts to no more than a mere narrative of a past occurrence, or by an isolated conversation held, or an isolated act done, at a later period.<sup>3</sup> Thus, the schedule of an insolvent, delivered four months after his execution of a deed of assignment, has been rejected, when tendered by the assignees as evidence that the indenture was executed with intent to petition; <sup>4</sup> and where a creditor called upon a bankrupt in the morning, and being told that he was out, paid a second visit in the evening of the same day, when the bankrupt made a statement respecting his absence in the morning, Mr. Baron Parke held that this statement was inadmissible, for the purpose of showing that the bankrupt had intentionally denied himself to his creditors, it being too remote in point of time from the absence which it purposed to explain.<sup>5</sup> This last case can scarcely be reconciled with Bateman v. Bailey,<sup>6</sup> and possibly it would now be considered as laying down the rule somewhat too strictly; but whatever may be the precise limits of the rule, if any can be assigned, it is perfectly clear that declarations made, or letters written, during absence from home, explanatory of the motive of departure, are admissible as original evidence, since the departure and absence are very properly regarded as one continuing act.<sup>7</sup>

of one of a company of conspirators, in regard to the common design as affecting his fellows. Here a foundation should first be laid by proof, sufficient, in the opinion of the judge, to establish prima facie the fact of conspiracy between the parties, or, at least, proper to be laid before the jury, as tending to establish such fact. The connexion of the individuals in the unlawful enterprise being thus shown, every act and declaration of each member of the confederacy, in pursuance of the original concerted plan, and with reference to the common object, is, in contemplation of law, the act and declaration of them all; and is, therefore, original evidence against each of them.<sup>1</sup>

§ 528. Sometimes, for the sake of convenience, the acts or declarations of one are admitted in evidence before sufficient proof is given of the conspiracy; the prosecutor undertaking to furnish such proof in a subsequent stage of the cause. But this mode of proceeding rests in the discretion of the judge, and in seditious or other general conspiracies is seldom permitted, except under particular and urgent circumstances; for, otherwise, the jury might be misled to infer the fact itself of the conspiracy from the declarations of strangers. Still, as a conspiracy need not be established by proof which actually brings the parties together, but may be shown, like any other fact, by circumstantial evidence, the detached acts of the different persons accused, including their written correspondence, entries made by them, and other documents in their possession relative to the main design, will sometimes from necessity be admitted, as steps to establish the conspiracy itself. On this subject it is difficult to establish a general inflexible rule, but each case must, in some measure, be governed by its own peculiar circumstances.<sup>1</sup>

§ 529.<sup>2</sup> It makes no difference at what time the party accused is proved to have entered into the conspiracy or combination; because every one, who agrees with others to effect a common illegal purpose, is generally considered in law as a party to every act, which either had before been done, or may afterwards be done, by the confederates, in furtherance of the common design.<sup>3</sup> One or two individuals may have concocted the scheme, but all who afterwards join in carrying it out are equally guilty with the originators;<sup>4</sup> at least, if any evidence be forthcoming from which their adoption of the previous acts of the association can reasonably be inferred.<sup>5</sup> Neither does it matter whether the acts were done, or the declaration made, in the presence or in the absence of the accused, but everything said or done by any one of the conspirators or accomplices in furtherance of the common object, is evidence against each and all the parties concerned, whether they were present or absent, and whether or not they were individually aware of what was taking place.<sup>6</sup> Thus, the cries of a mob, with whose proceedings the prisoner is connected, though made in his absence, are admissible against him, as explanatory of the objects which he, in common with the multitude, had in view;<sup>7</sup> and expressions used by persons going to a meeting convened by the defendant, are receivable on similar grounds.<sup>8</sup> In O'Connell's case, where the defendants were charged with summoning monster meetings for illegal purposes, papers publicly sold at these meetings, and supporting the views of the defendants, were received in evidence, though no proof was given connecting the defendants with the persons selling the papers.<sup>9</sup>

530. Care, however, must be taken to distinguish between declarations, which are either acts in themselves purporting to advance the objects of the criminal enterprise, or which accompany and explain such acts, and those statements, whether written or oral, which, although made during the continuance of the plot, are in fact a mere narrative of the measures that have already been taken. These last statements are, as before explained,<sup>1</sup> inadmissible. The distinction here referred to may be well illustrated by the case of Hardy, who was prosecuted for high treason. There, a letter, written by a co-conspirator to a private friend unconnected with the plot, which gave an account of the proceedings of a society to which the writer and the defendant were proved to have belonged, and which enclosed several seditious songs stated to have been composed by the writer, and sung by him at a meeting of the society, was rejected, on the ground that it was not a transaction in support of the conspiracy, but merely a relation of the part which the writer had taken in the plot, and, as such, only admissible against himself.<sup>2</sup> A second letter was then offered in evidence, which was written by another co-conspirator to a delegate in the country, describing the events that had occurred in London, and encouraging him thereby to proceed in the criminal business in which he was engaged; and as this letter was considered by the court as an act done in furtherance of the plot, it was received against the defendant, though no evidence was given to show that it had ever reached the person for whose perusal it was intended.<sup>3</sup>

the duty of these persons respectively to make entries of the contents of cases imported, so as to be a check upon each other. It was shown that on thirteen occasions they had made false entries, in which they stated that certain packages contained smaller quantities than was really the fact. It was then proposed to put in evidence Tye's day-book, which contained entries in his handwriting relative to the thirteen transactions, and showed the amount of duty actually paid by him. This book was found in Tye's counting-house, and the court held that it was clearly admissible, as containing entries made in furtherance of the conspiracy. Tye's cheque-book was next produced, for the purpose of showing by the counter-foil that Blake had received from him part of the moneys of which the customs had been defrauded in these transactions; but the court rejected this evidence, on the ground that it was no act done in pursuance of the plot, but was a mere statement as to the mode of distributing the plunder, after the fraud had been completed. Again, a conversation between two men, apparently returning from a meeting, which had been held within an hour before, and about half a mile distant from the spot where the men were, has been rejected, though offered as evidence, not only of the general nature of the meeting, but of the effect that was likely to be produced by the language there employed.<sup>1</sup> In fine, the declarations of a conspirator or accomplice are receivable against his fellows, only when they are in themselves acts, or when they accompany and explain acts, for which the others are responsible; but not when they are in the nature of narratives, descriptions, or subsequent confessions.

§ 532. On a somewhat similar principle, papers found, after the apprehension of a prisoner, on the person or at the lodgings of a co-conspirator, will be admissible or not against him according as there is or is not evidence to show that they existed before he was taken into custody. If no such evidence can be given, the papers will be rejected, as the prisoner cannot be responsible for acts or writings, which possibly may not have existed until after the common enterprise was, so far as he was concerned, at an end ;<sup>1</sup> but if the previous existence of the papers be established, either by direct proof, or by strong presumptive evidence, the objection to their admissibility can no longer prevail.<sup>2</sup>

§ 533. The question how far unpublished writings upon abstract subjects, which, though of a kindred nature with the crime charged, have no direct relation to it, are admissible in evidence, may admit of some doubt. In the case of Algernon Sidney, a treatise containing speculative republican doctrines, which not only was unpublished and unconnected with the treasonable practices of which he was accused, but which appeared to have been composed several years before the trial, was, under the auspices of Judge Jefferies, admitted in evidence ;<sup>3</sup> but subsequent times have regarded this trial as a judicial murder, and such proof would assuredly be rejected at the present day. If, indeed, the papers were closely connected with the nature and object of the alleged crime, they would probably, though unpublished, be considered in strict law admissible, without any positive proof that they were intended to be used in furtherance of the design ; and if such proof could be given, they would doubtless be received.<sup>4</sup> Where conversations of co-conspirators or accomplices are proved, the effect of the evidence will of course depend upon the surrounding circumstances, such as the fact and degree of the prisoner's attention to what was said, and his approval or disapproval thereof.<sup>5</sup>

are admissible against all;<sup>1</sup> while those which amount to mere admissions, or narratives of past events, can only be received against the party making them.<sup>2</sup> In one case,<sup>3</sup> which was an action for false imprisonment, Mr. Baron Garrow admitted the declarations of a co-defendant, showing personal<sup>4</sup> malice, as evidence against the other defendants, though made in their absence, and several weeks after the act complained of; but the attention of the learned judge does not appear to have been drawn to the time when the words were spoken, and probably this case would not now be sanctioned. Where no common object or motive is imputed, as in actions for negligence, the declaration of each defendant is admissible against himself alone.<sup>4</sup>

§ 535.<sup>5</sup> This doctrine extends to all cases of partnership. Whenever any number of persons are associated together in the joint prosecution of a common enterprise or design, as in commercial partnerships, and similar cases, the act or declaration of each member, in furtherance of the common object of the association, is the act or declaration of all. By the very act of association each partner is constituted the agent of the others, for all purposes within the scope of the partnership concern;<sup>6</sup> unless, under the special circumstances of the case, an intention can be inferred by the jury, that a particular act should not be binding without the direct concurrence of each individual partner.<sup>7</sup> While the firm thus created exists, it speaks and acts only by the several members; but when that existence ceases by dissolution, the subsequent acts of the individual members are binding on themselves alone,<sup>1</sup> except so far as may have been otherwise agreed upon by the articles of association or of dissolution,<sup>2</sup> or as the acts relate to the previous business of the firm.<sup>3</sup> This last exception may be illustrated by the case of Pritchard v. Draper,<sup>4</sup> where Lord Brougham held, that the admission of one partner, as to the payment, subsequently to a dissolution, of a debt due to the firm, was admissible against the other partners.

§ 536. In the case just cited, the party making the admission was at the time, so far as the debt in question was concerned, jointly interested with the parties against whom his statement was tendered in evidence.<sup>5</sup> Had not such been the case, the decision would probably have been the other way; for where a bill was filed to set aside a bond given to a banking firm on the ground of fraud, and it appeared that before the commencement of the suit, the partner, who originally managed the transaction, had retired from the firm, had become a certificated bankrupt, and, according to his own admission, had long ceased to have any interest in the bond, the court held that the answer of this man, who had been made a defendant as executor of another partner, and who admitted the fraud, was not receivable in evidence against his co-defendants, the continuing partners.<sup>6</sup>

§ 537. It deserves notice, that neither a written acknowledgment of a partnership debt by one member of a firm, nor a written promise by him to pay it, nor even actual payment by him of the interest, or part payment of the principal due, whether made during the partnership, or after the dissolution,<sup>1</sup> will take the case out of the Statute of Limitations, as against the other members;<sup>2</sup> but this, as will hereafter appear,<sup>3</sup> is owing to the salutary operation of Lord Tenterden's Act of 1828,<sup>4</sup> as extended by the Mercantile Law Amendment Act of 1856.<sup>5</sup>

§ 538. It is true that Lord Tenterden's Act, in the enactment just referred to, speaks merely of joint contractors, and does not in terms mention partners; and consequently here, as in other cases where the language of the Legislature is in the remotest degree doubtful, a distinction has been attempted to be drawn between these two classes of persons, and it has been contended that a signature by one of several partners, using the name of the firm, will take the case out of the statute as to all the partners, in a transaction in which all are interested, because a partnership name is the name of each and every member of the firm. In the case where this subtle and forlorn point was raised, the court found it unnecessary to express an opinion upon it;<sup>6</sup> but as a ruling in its favour would manifestly fritter away the provisions of a very beneficial enactment, it is presumed that, if the objection should again be taken, the judges would not hesitate to negative its validity.<sup>7</sup>

§ 539.<sup>8</sup> The declarations of agents are admissible against their principals on grounds very similar to those which govern the declarations of co-partners. The principal constitutes the agent as his representative in the transaction of certain business. Whatever, therefore, the agent does in the lawful prosecution of that business, is the act of the principal; and as Mr. Justice Story observes, "where the acts of the agent will bind the principal, there his representations, declarations, and admissions, respecting the subject-matter, will also bind him, if made at the same time, and constituting part of the res gestæ.”<sup>1</sup> They are original evidence and not hearsay; and, being regarded as verbal acts, they are receivable in evidence without calling the agent himself to prove them.<sup>2</sup> Still the admission of the agent cannot always be assimilated to the admission of the principal. The party’s own admission, whenever made, may be given in evidence against him: but the admission or declaration of his agent binds him only when it is made during the continuance of the agency, in regard to a transaction then depending, et dum fervet opus. When the agent’s right to interfere in the particular matter has ceased, the principal can no longer be affected by his declarations, any more than by his acts, but they will be rejected in such case as mere hearsay.<sup>3</sup> Thus, when a horse-dealer, or livery-stable keeper, employs a servant to sell a horse, any statement made by him respecting the horse at the time of sale, even though it amount to a warranty of soundness,<sup>4</sup> which the servant has been really ordered not to give, will, as it seems, bind the master;<sup>5</sup> but the servant’s declarations or acknowledgments at any other time, whether made to the purchaser or to a stranger, will not be received.<sup>6</sup>

So, if a letter written by an agent form the whole or part of an agreement, which by the course of his business he was authorised to make, it will be admissible against the principal; but if it be offered as proof of the contents of a pre-existing contract, or if it contain an account of transactions already performed, it will properly be rejected, though addressed to the principal himself;<sup>1</sup> unless the principal has replied to it, or has otherwise adopted and acted upon it, in which case the agent's letter will be received as explanatory of the principal's conduct.<sup>2</sup>

§ 540. The law upon this subject has been well explained by Sir William Grant, in the case of Fairlie v. Hastings.<sup>3</sup> "As a general proposition," said he, "what one man says, not upon oath, cannot be evidence against another man. The exception must arise out of some peculiarity of situation, coupled with the declarations made by one. An agent may undoubtedly, within the scope of his authority, bind his principal by his agreement; and in many cases by his acts. What the agent has said may be what constitutes the agreement of the principal; or the representations or statements made may be the foundation of, or the inducement to, the agreement. Therefore, if writing is not necessary by law, evidence must be admitted to prove that the agent did make the statement or representation. So, with regard to acts done, the words with which those acts are accompanied frequently tend to determine their quality. The party, therefore, to be bound by the act, must be affected by the words. But, except in one or the other of those ways, I do not know how what is said by an agent can be evidence against his principal. The mere assertion of a fact cannot amount to proof of it; though it may have some relation to the business, in which the person making that assertion was employed as agent. * * * The admission of an agent cannot be assimilated to the admission of the principal. A party is bound by his own admission; and is not permitted to contradict it. But it is impossible to say a man is precluded from questioning or contradicting anything any person has asserted as to him, respecting his conduct or his agreement, merely because that person has been an agent of his. If any fact, material to the interest of either party, rests in the knowledge of an agent, it is to be proved by his testimony, not by his mere assertion."

§ 541. As the rule admitting the declarations of the agent is founded upon his legal identity with the principal, they bind only so far as the agent had authority to make them.<sup>1</sup> The declarations, therefore, and acts of an agent cannot bind an infant, because an infant cannot appoint an agent; and, consequently, if an infant, even by letter of attorney, appoints a person to make a lease, he will not be bound thereby, neither will his ratification bind him; but the lease of an infant to be good, must be his own personal act.<sup>2</sup> When, however, the principal is of full age, and the authority is express, he will be bound by the declarations and acts of his agent, and no difficulty can well arise in applying this rule; but questions of much nicety will often occur, where power to make an admission is sought to be inferred by implication from an authority to do a certain act. A few examples may furnish some guide upon this subject. Thus, where a wife is authorised, in her husband's absence, to carry on the business of his shop, her admissions, made on application to pay for goods previously delivered at the shop, will be received in evidence against the husband;<sup>3</sup> but her acknowledgments of an antecedent contract for the hire of the shop, or her agreement to make a new contract for the future occupation of it, will be rejected, as it cannot be necessary that the wife should have this extensive power of binding her husband, for the mere purpose of conducting the business of the shop.<sup>4</sup> So, if goods were deposited with a pawnbroker in the ordinary course of his business, a declaration of the shopman that his master had received the goods, would probably be admis-

sible against the master, because it might well be assumed that the shopman was authorised to answer any inquiries respecting the goods, made by persons interested in them; but if the admission related to a transaction unconnected with the immediate business of the shop, as, for instance, if it referred to the loan of several hundred pounds on a single pledge at five per cent. interest, it would not be received.<sup>1</sup>

§ 542.<sup>2</sup> The foregoing observations will have shown that there are three classes of declarations, which, though usually treated under the head of hearsay, are, in truth, original evidence; the first class consisting of cases where the fact that the declaration was made, and not its truth or falsity, is the point in question; the second including expressions of bodily or mental feelings, where the existence or nature of such feelings is the subject of inquiry; and the third embracing all other cases, where the declaration offered in evidence may be regarded as part of the res gestæ. All these classes are involved in the principle of the last, and have been separately treated merely for the sake of greater distinctness.

CHAPTER VIII.

MATTERS OF PUBLIC AND GENERAL INTEREST.

§ 543.<sup>1</sup> HAVING illustrated the nature of hearsay evidence, shown the reasons on which it is generally excluded, and explained the distinction between such evidence and that which is original, it will next be convenient to consider the cases in which the rule rejecting hearsay has been relaxed. These cases may be conveniently divided into six classes:—first, those relating to matters of public and general interest;—secondly, those relating to pedigree;—thirdly, those relating to ancient possession;—fourthly, declarations against interest;—fifthly, declarations in the course of office or business; and lastly, dying declarations. It will be observed, that these exceptions, which are allowed only on the ground of the assumed absence of better evidence, and, as it were, from necessity, embrace most of the inconveniences that would result from a stern and universal application of the rule, and thus remove the principal objections which have been urged against it. The exceptions will now be discussed in their order.

§ 544. And first, the admissibility of hearsay evidence respecting matters of public and general interest, appears to rest mainly on the following grounds:—that the origin of the rights claimed is usually of so ancient a date, and the rights themselves are of so undefined and general a character, that direct proof of their existence and nature can seldom be obtained, and ought not to be required; that in matters, in which the community are interested, all persons must be deemed conversant; that as common rights are naturally talked of in public, and as the nature of such rights excludes the possibility of individual bias, what is dropped in conversation respecting them may be presumed to be true; that the general interest which belongs to the subject would lead to immediate contradiction from others, if the statements proved were false ; that reputation can hardly exist without the concurrence of many parties unconnected with each other, who are all alike interested in investigating the subject ; that such concurrence furnishes strong presumptive evidence of truth ; and that it is this prevailing current of assertion which is resorted to as evidence, for to this every member of the community is supposed to be privy, and to contribute his share.<sup>1</sup>

§ 545.<sup>2</sup> In speaking of matters of public and general interest, the terms “public” and “general” are sometimes used as synonymes, meaning merely what concerns a multitude of persons.<sup>3</sup> But, in regard to the admissibility of hearsay testimony, a distinction has been taken between them ; the term public being strictly applied to that which concerns every member of the state ; and the term general being confined to a lesser, though still a considerable, portion of the community. This distinction should be carefully attended to, because in matters strictly public, such, for example, as a claim of highway or a right of ferry, reputation from any one appears to be receivable ; and although declarations would be almost worthless, unless made by persons who, by living in the neighbourhood, or by frequently using the road or ferry, or the like, are shown to have had some means of knowledge ; yet the want of such proof of their connexion with the subject in question seems to affect the value only, and not the admissibility, of the evidence. If, however, the right in dispute be simply general ; that is, if those only who live in a particular district, or adventure in a particular enterprise, are interested in it, hearsay from persons wholly unconnected with the place or business would be not only valueless, but probably altogether inadmissible.<sup>4</sup>

§ 546. Thus, if a dispute were to arise respecting the existence of a local custom, in which all the tenants of a manor were interested, evidence of reputation would be admissible, not only from any deceased tenant, but from any deceased resident within the manor; for it might fairly be presumed that the residents, being persons conversant with the neighbourhood, would be acquainted with the local customs.<sup>1</sup> So,<sup>2</sup> where the question was whether Nottingham Castle was within the hundred of Broxtowe, certain ancient orders, which were made by the Justices at the Quarter Sessions for the county, and in which the castle was described as being within that hundred, were held admissible evidence of reputation; the justices, though not proved to have been residents within the county or hundred, being presumed, from the nature and character of their offices alone, to have had sufficient acquaintance with the subject in dispute, to make the statements in their order admissible.<sup>3</sup> Again, where the question related to

But Mascardus deems it not sufficient, in cases of pedigree within the memory of man, which he limits to fifty-six years, unless aided by other evidence—tunc nempe non sufficeret publica vox et fama, sed una cum ipso deberet tractatus et nominatio probari, vel alia adminicula urgentia adhiberi. 1 Masc. de Prob., Concl. 411, n. 1, 2, 6, 7.

The actual discussion of the subject in the neighbourhood, was a fact also relied on, in the Roman law, in cases of proof by common fame. “Quando testis vult probare aliquem scivisse, non videtur sufficere, quod dicat ille scivit quia erat vicinus; sed debet addere, in vicinia hoc erat cognitum per famam, vel alio modo; et ideò iste, qui erat vicinus, potuit id scire.” 2 Menoch. de Præs. lib. 6, Præs. 24, n. 17, p. 772. See, also, 1 Masc. de Prob. 389, 390, Concl. 395, n. 1, 2, 19, 9, where the law is thus laid down:—“Confines probantur per testes. Verum scias velim, testes in hac materiâ, qui vicini, et circum ibi habitant, esse magis idoneos quam alios. Si testes non sentiant commodum vel incommodum immediatum, possint pro suâ communitate deponere. the custom of mining in a particular district, persons, under whose estates the minerals lay, with respect to which the custom was said to exist, were held to be sufficiently connected with the subject to make their declarations evidence, as they were more likely than others living at a distance to become adventurers, and consequently to be subjected to the operation of the custom.<sup>1</sup> But where the point at issue was, whether the City of Chester anciently formed part of the County Palatine, an old document, purporting to be a decree of certain law officers and dignitaries of the Crown, not having authority as a Court, was held inadmissible as evidence of reputation, because those personages had no peculiar knowledge of the subject, excepting what they derived in the course of that unauthorised proceeding.<sup>2</sup> Hence it appears that competent knowledge in the declarant is an essential pre-requisite to the admission of his testimony; and although all the Queen's subjects are presumed to have that knowledge, in some degree, where the matter is of public concernment, yet, in other matters, which are not strictly public, though they are interesting to many persons, some particular evidence of such knowledge is generally required.

§ 547. If the quality of the hearsay itself raises a natural inference that it was derived from persons acquainted with the subject, the courts will not require independent proof of that fact; and therefore, where the question turned on a manorial custom, depositions, purporting to have been made by copyholders in an ancient suit between a former lord and a person claiming admission to a copyhold, were admitted in evidence without proof that the persons making them were either copyholders, or were otherwise acquainted with the customs of the manor; for the court assumed that such persons would not have been brought forward as witnesses, had they been ignorant of the subject.<sup>3</sup> So, an ancient unsigned customary of a manor, which purported to be ex assensu omnium tenentium, and which had been handed down with the court rolls from steward to steward, was received as evidence to prove the course of descent within the manor.<sup>1</sup> But where, in order to prove the boundaries of a manor, an ancient survey was produced from the proper custody, which purported to have been made in the time of Queen Elizabeth by a deputy surveyor appointed by the Crown, and to have been founded on the presentments of certain tenants of the manor, whose names were appended to it, the court rejected the document, on the ground that no proof had been given that the deputy surveyor had any authority to institute the inquiry; and, stripped of this authority, he not only had no right to make any kind of return, but the presumption that he did make one fell to the ground. The paper might have been written by any clerk idling in the office where it was found, from his own imagination, or compiled, possibly, by some interested person in furtherance of a sinister object of his own.<sup>2</sup>

§ 548. It may be here expedient to enumerate a few of the principal questions, which have been deemed to involve matters of public or general interest, and to contrast these with some others, which the courts have considered to be of too private a nature, to allow of their being illustrated by evidence of reputation. Thus, on the one hand, hearsay, or, in other words, evidence of reputation, has been admitted, where the question related to a right of common existing by immemorial custom,<sup>3</sup> a feeding per cause de vicinage resting on a similar foundation,<sup>4</sup> a parochial<sup>5</sup> or other district modus,<sup>6</sup> a manorial custom,<sup>7</sup> a custom of mining field,<sup>1</sup> whether the tenants of a particular manor had the right of cutting and selling wood,<sup>2</sup> and what were the boundaries between two private estates.<sup>3</sup> Where, however, it was shown by direct testimony, the admission of which was unopposed, that the boundaries of the farm in question were identical with those of a hamlet, evidence of reputation as to the hamlet boundaries was let in for the purpose of proving those of the farm; for though it was objected that evidence should not be thus indirectly admitted in a dispute between private individuals, the court overruled the objection, Mr. Justice Coleridge observing, that "he never heard that a fact was not to be proved in the same manner when subsidiary, as when it was the very matter in issue."<sup>4</sup>

§ 550. The question, whether evidence of reputation is admissible to prove or disprove a private prescriptive right or liability, is involved in some doubt.<sup>5</sup> In the case of Morewood v. Wood, where a prescriptive right of digging stones on the lord's waste was claimed by the defendant, as annexed to his estate, and the lord offered evidence of reputation to prove that no such right existed, the Judges of the Court of King's Bench were equally divided on its admissibility;<sup>6</sup> but since in that case it is difficult to see how the public could have been interested in the matter, unless it had been shown, which it was not, that the rights of the commoners were infringed by the defendant's claim, such evidence would probably at the present day be rejected.<sup>7</sup> It has, however, been determined by the Court of Queen's Bench, that, on the trial of an indictment against the inhabitants of a county for the non-repair of a public bridge, to which the defendants had pleaded that certain persons named were liable to repair the bridge ratione

tenuræ, evidence of reputation was admissible to support the plea.<sup>1</sup> It this case it was very properly considered that the fixing an individual with, or the relieving him from, such a liability as the one in question, had a necessary tendency to abridge or increase the liability of the whole neighbourhood,<sup>2</sup>—and, moreover, that the admissibility of evidence of reputation, when tendered to disprove a public liability or right, could not be governed by a different principle from that which prevails, when such evidence is offered to establish the liability or right.<sup>3</sup>

or with any other subject of general interest, it falls within the ordinary rule by which hearsay evidence is excluded.

§ 552.<sup>1</sup> The necessity for competent knowledge in the declarant may serve to explain and reconcile what is said in the books respecting the inadmissibility of reputation in regard to particular facts. Upon general points, as we have seen, such evidence is receivable, because of the general interest which the community have in them; but particular facts, not being equally notorious, may be misrepresented, or misunderstood, and may have been connected with other facts, by which, if known, their effect might be limited or explained. Reputation as to the existence of such particular facts is therefore rejected. Thus, if the question is whether a road be public or private, declarations by old persons since dead, that they have seen repairs done upon it, will not be admissible;<sup>2</sup> neither can evidence be received that a deceased person planted a tree near the road, and stated at the time of planting it that his object was to show where the boundary of the road was when he was a boy.<sup>3</sup> So, proof of old persons having been heard to say that a stone was erected, or boys whipped, or cakes distributed, at a particular place, will not be admissible as evidence of boundary;<sup>4</sup> and where the question was whether a turnpike stood within the limits of a town, though evidence of reputation was received to show that the town extended to a certain point, yet declarations by old people, since dead, that formerly houses stood where none any longer remained, was rejected, on the ground that these statements were evidence of a particular fact.<sup>5</sup> So, also, if the existence and amount of a parochial modus be in issue, hearsay evidence of the payment of a specific sum in lieu of tithes by a deceased occupier will be inadmissible; though general evidence of reputation, that it has always been customary to pay that sum for all the lands in the parish, will be received.<sup>6</sup>

§ 553. Again, where the question was whether a certain place was parcel of a particular parish, an old book containing entries by a deceased churchwarden, not charging himself, but relating to the repairs of a chapel alleged to belong to the place in question, was held to be inadmissible;<sup>1</sup> and the same ruling has prevailed, where entries in parish books, which recorded the fact that perambulations had taken a particular line, were tendered in evidence.<sup>2</sup> Still, it has been usual to admit evidence of what old persons, since deceased, who accompanied the perambulators, have been heard to say upon such occasions;<sup>3</sup> because the custom of perambulating parishes having long received high judicial sanction as a legitimate mode of recording boundaries,<sup>4</sup>—and the fact of a perambulation having taken place being considered in itself evidence of the exercise of a right,<sup>5</sup>—it follows that statements made by perambulators may be regarded as declarations accompanying acts, which, on grounds already explained,<sup>6</sup> will be admissible in evidence, provided they are not confined to particular circumstances.<sup>7</sup>

should appear to rest on reputation derived from others, or should have been expressed in the course of a transaction relating to a question of reputation ; and therefore, on an issue whether or not a lane in a certain hamlet was a common highway, a paper signed by several inhabitants of the hamlet, since dead, stating that the lane was not a highway, was received as slight evidence of reputation, although it had been drawn up at a public meeting, which had been convened for the sole purpose of considering the propriety of repairing the road, and although the opinions expressed in the document did not appear to have been founded on reputation received from others.<sup>1</sup>

§ 555.<sup>2</sup> It may further be observed, that reputation is evidence as well against a public right as in its favour ; and this, too, whether the evidence consist of declarations which expressly negative the right, or set up an inconsistent claim, or simply omit all mention of the right on some occasion, when a notice of it might be reasonably expected. Thus, where the question was whether a landing-place was public or private property, the declarations of ancient deceased persons, that it was the private landing-place of the party and his ancestors, were held admissible, the learned judge remarking, that no distinction could be drawn between the evidence of reputation to establish, and that to disparage, a public right.<sup>3</sup> So, where it became necessary to negative the existence of a particular manorial custom, the court was strongly inclined to hold, though it became unnecessary to decide the point, that an ancient deed, made between the lord of the manor and a great many of the copyholders, in which the latter claimed, and the former admitted and confirmed, what they mutually conceived to be the immemorial customs of the manor, but which deed omitted all mention of the particular custom in question, was strong evidence of reputation to show that it did

§ 556.<sup>2</sup> It will have been seen from several of the cases cited in this chapter, that oral declarations are not the sole medium of proving traditionary reputation in matters of public and general interest; and, indeed, the principle of the exception applies equally to documentary evidence, and to all other kinds of proof denominated hearsay. Thus deeds,<sup>3</sup> leases,<sup>4</sup> and other private documents have been admitted, as declaratory of the public matters recited in them. Even copies and abstracts of old deeds and wills<sup>5</sup> have occasionally been used for the same purpose, but these are not in themselves evidence of reputation, being merely admissible as secondary evidence of the original instruments. It follows, therefore, that no such document can in strictness be received at all, without some proof being furnished of the former existence and present loss of the originals.<sup>6</sup>

§ 557. How far maps, showing the boundaries of counties, towns, parishes, or manors, will be admissible, is a question respecting which some doubts exist. If such maps are not proved to have been prepared by persons, who were deputed to make them by some one interested in the question, or who themselves appear to have had some knowledge of their own on the subject, or who at least are shown to have been in some way connected with the district, so as to make it probable that they possessed the requisite information, they cannot be received, whatever their age or apparent accuracy may be.<sup>1</sup> If, however, proof be forthcoming that they have been either made or recognised by persons having adequate knowledge, they would seem, on principle, to be valid evidence of reputation. Accordingly, upon the trial of an indictment against a parish for the non-repair of a highway, where, in order to show that the road in question was not within the parish, a map was produced which had been made some thirty years before by a surveyor, from information derived from an old parishioner, who had pointed out to him the boundaries, Mr. Justice Erskine held, that, if proof could be given of the old man's death, the map would be admissible as evidence of reputation, though it came from the chest of the parish indicted.<sup>2</sup> On another occasion, also, maps appear to have been received as public documents;<sup>3</sup> but in an older case, where, in order to prove that the locus in quo was a highway, a copper-plate map, which purported on its face to have been taken by the direction of some former churchwardens, and which it was proposed to prove was generally received by the parish as authentic, was rejected by Lord Kenyon, who observed, that "it would be equally improper to admit it, as to admit a plan taken by the lord of the manor, who might thereby crush and destroy the estate of his tenants."<sup>4</sup> It does not appear in this case that the map was an ancient one, or that the churchwardens, by whose direction it was drawn, were dead, and consequently the decision is of the less authority.

§ 558. Again, copies of court rolls, and especially presentments in manor courts,<sup>5</sup> stating the customs or boundaries of a manor,—depositions of conventional tenants of a manor, taken in an authorised inquiry, and representing the rights of the lord,<sup>6</sup>—and other similar documents, have been admitted as evidence of reputation;<sup>1</sup> though, unless it can be satisfactorily proved, or at least reasonably inferred, that the proceedings were conducted in a legal and regular manner, it will seldom be prudent to run the risk of a new trial by tendering such evidence.<sup>2</sup>

§ 559. It has often been said that verdicts of juries, and judgments, decrees, and orders of courts of competent jurisdiction, are evidence of reputation; and possibly, when juries were summoned de vicineto, and were consequently assumed to be acquainted with the subject in controversy,<sup>3</sup> this may have been a correct mode of stating the ground on which verdicts were admitted; though it never could have been strictly accurate with respect to other judicial documents, and though it does not apply, at the present day, even to verdicts.<sup>4</sup> Still these documents, though not reputation, are as good evidence as reputation;<sup>5</sup> and whatever be the principle on which they are admitted, the rule has been established by too many authorities to be now questioned,<sup>6</sup> that, in all cases involving matters of public or general interest, wherein reputation is evidence, a verdict or a judgment upon the matter directly in issue, though pronounced in a cause litigated between strangers to the parties on the record, is also admissible; not as tending to prove any specific fact existing at the time, but as evidence of the most solemn kind, of an adjudication by a competent tribunal upon the state of facts and the question of usage at the time.<sup>7</sup> Thus, for example, where a public right of way was in question, the plaintiff was allowed to show a verdict, rendered in his own favour against a defendant in another suit, in which the same right of way was in issue;<sup>8</sup> and it matters not with respect to the admissibility, though it may as to the weight, of such evidence, that the judgment has been suffered by default, and, though of a very recent date, is not supported by any proof of execution or of the payment of damages;<sup>1</sup> or even that the verdict, where a verdict has been obtained, has not been followed up by any judgment or decree.<sup>2</sup> Neither is it material whether the verdict be pronounced at Nisi Prius, or be the finding of a jury summoned under a commission from a Duchy Court, or any other special commission; provided it can be proved, or can be inferred from the circumstances, that the inquiry was a lawful one.<sup>3</sup>

§ 560. If, when the record is produced, a direct issue appears to have been raised on the right or custom in controversy, the opponent will not be entitled to show that in fact no evidence was given on that issue; since the record is conclusive of the fact of such a finding, though not of its truth as between other parties.<sup>4</sup> If the record contains no direct issue on the custom, the party producing it must furnish some evidence to show that the custom was really in question; for, otherwise, the mere verdict would prove nothing.<sup>5</sup> In the case of the Earl of Carnarvon v. Villebois, which was an action by the lord of a manor against a copyholder for trespassing on his free warren, an ancient judgment on a quo warranto information filed by the Attorney-General against a former lord, in which the defendant pleaded, and the Attorney-General confessed, a prescriptive title to the free warren as appurtenant to the manor, was received in evidence for the plaintiff, as being the judgment of a competent court upon a matter of a public nature, which concerned the Crown and the subject. The court observed, that "it was admissible on the same footing as an allowance before the Justices of Eyre, an inquisition post mortem, or an inquisition issuing out of the Court of Exchequer to ascertain the extent of the Crown lands."<sup>6</sup>

§ 561. Decrees and orders of all competent tribunals stand upon the same footing as verdicts ;<sup>1</sup> and, therefore, orders of the commissioners of sewers requiring landowners to repair sea-walls, will, on an issue respecting the liability of a party to make such repairs, be evidence as adjudications by a court of competent jurisdiction ; and the fact that they have been duly executed and acted upon will be presumed, if they are of an ancient date.<sup>2</sup> To render decrees of a Court of Chancery admissible, it is unnecessary to put in the depositions to which they refer ; because, in equity, the judge must collect the questions in dispute from the bill and answer only.<sup>3</sup> Still, a decree, to be evidence, must be final ; and mere interlocutory orders, not involving any judgment upon the rights of the parties, cannot be received.<sup>4</sup> So anxious are the courts to confine this species of evidence within strict limits, that they have rejected an award in a suit inter alios, though the cause was referred by order of the judge at Nisi Prius.<sup>5</sup> It seems scarcely necessary to add, that no verdict, judgment, decree, or order, can be received, if it appear that the parties pronouncing it were acting without legal authority.<sup>6</sup>

§ 562. Although judgments and decrees, when tendered as evidence of reputation, must in general be proved either by producing the originals or by examined copies, yet occasionally a copy of a less authentic character will be received, provided it has been dealt with by the party against whom it is tendered, or by those through whom he claims, either as an authentic copy, in which case it will be admissible as secondary evidence, or as a paper containing a true statement of the custom or other subject-matter of reputation in dispute, in which case it will be received as primary proof. For instance, in Price v. Woodhouse,<sup>7</sup> which was an action of trespass by a copyholder against the lord of a manor, where the question at issue turned on the existence or non-existence of a particular manorial custom, two documents were tendered on behalf of the plaintiff. The first purported to be a copy of an old decree of the Court of Chancery in a suit between a copyholder and the lord, establishing the custom, and the court held that, inasmuch as the document had been found among the papers of a former deceased lord, that fact furnished some evidence of its having been recognised as a true copy, and they consequently allowed it to be read as secondary evidence of the decree, proof having been given of an ineffectual search for the original. They added, however, that it was inadmissible as primary evidence, since the mere circumstance of its having been deposited among the papers of the deceased lord was not such a dealing with it as to be equivalent to an admission, upon the lord's part, that it contained a true account of the customs of the manor. The second document tendered in evidence was an office copy of another decree, and as there was some evidence to show that this had been given to a witness by the lord as proof of the customs of the manor, the court regarded it in the light of an admission, and held that it was admissible as primary evidence of those customs.

§ 563.<sup>1</sup> It now becomes necessary to consider an important qualification of the exception under discussion, which is, that declarations, to be admissible as evidence of reputation, must have been made before any controversy arose touching the matter to which they relate; or, as it is usually expressed, ante litem motam. As this qualification is not confined to matters of public and general interest, but equally governs the admissibility of hearsay evidence in matters of pedigree, it will be convenient to illustrate its operation by referring indiscriminately to both these classes of cases. Now, the ground on which the declarations of deceased persons are admitted at all, is, that they are the natural effusions of a party who is presumed to know the truth, and to speak upon an occasion when his mind stands in an even position, without any temptation to exceed or fall short of the truth.<sup>1</sup> But no man is presumed to be thus indifferent in regard to matters in actual controversy; for when the contest has begun, people generally take part on the one side or the other; their minds are in a ferment; and, if they are disposed to speak the truth, facts are seen by them through a false medium. To avoid, therefore, the mischiefs which would otherwise result, all ex parte declarations, even those upon oath, are rejected, if they can be referred to a date subsequent to the beginning of the controversy.<sup>2</sup>

§ 564.<sup>3</sup> This rule of evidence was familiar in the Roman law; but the term lis mota was there applied strictly to the commencement of the action, and was not referred to any earlier period of the dispute.<sup>4</sup> But in our law, the term lis is taken in the classical<sup>5</sup> and larger sense of controversy; and by lis mota is understood the commencement of the controversy, and not the commencement of the suit.<sup>6</sup> The commencement of the controversy was, at one time, further defined by Mr. Baron Alderson to be "the arising of that state of facts, on which the claim is founded, without anything more;"<sup>7</sup> but this dictum, though afterwards upheld by Lord Cottenham,<sup>8</sup> has since been overruled,<sup>9</sup> and it is now decided, that "there must be, not merely facts which may lead to a dispute, but a lis mota, or suit, or controversy preparatory to a suit, actually commenced, or dispute arisen, and that upon the very same pedigree or subject-matter which constitutes the question in litigation."<sup>1</sup>

§ 565. It follows from the above explanation of lis mota, first, that declarations will not be rejected, in consequence of their having been made with the express view of preventing disputes; secondly, that they are admissible, if no dispute has arisen, though made in direct support of the title of the declarant; and, thirdly, that the mere fact of the declarant having stood, or having believed that he stood, in pari jure with the party relying on the declaration, will not render his statement inadmissible. In support of the first proposition, the Berkeley Peerage case may be referred to, where the judges unanimously held, in conformity with an earlier opinion expressed by Lord Mansfield,<sup>2</sup> that an entry made by a father in any book, for the express purpose of establishing the legitimacy of his son at the time of his birth, in case the same should be called in question, will be receivable in evidence, notwithstanding the professed view with which it was made.<sup>3</sup> This doctrine has since been sanctioned by Lords Brougham<sup>4</sup> and Cottenham in England,<sup>5</sup> and by Lord St. Leonards in Ireland,<sup>6</sup> and may now be considered as established law in both countries. One of the latest decisions in support of the second proposition is Doe v. Davies,<sup>7</sup> where the court observed, that although a feeling of interest will often cast suspicion on declarations, it has never been held to render them inadmissible. The third proposition is equally clear law; for although one peerage case appears at first sight to throw some doubt upon the subject,<sup>1</sup> yet it is highly probable that the pedigree was there rejected, not as having been made by a party while standing in the same situation as the claimant, but as having been concocted by such person in direct contemplation of himself laying claim to the dignity.

§ 566. But even if the case be not susceptible of this explanation, a single isolated decision can scarcely controvert a rule of law, which has been sanctioned and acted upon by numerous judges,<sup>2</sup> and which is so founded on reason, that a contrary doctrine would go far towards excluding all evidence of reputation. For instance, in cases of public and general interest, the rejection of such evidence would be wholly inconsistent with the rule, which requires the statement to have been made by some person having competent knowledge of the subject;<sup>3</sup> and in cases of pedigree, though the result of excluding declarations of persons in pari jure would not be equally mischievous, it would frequently have the effect of drying up sources of information, which would be highly valuable in the investigation of truth. In any one of the three classes of declarations just mentioned, it is very possible that the declarant may have had some secret wish or bias, which may have induced him to make a statement either partially or totally false; but the same observation might apply to all evidence of this nature, and its weight in each particular case must be determined by the jury.

§ 567.<sup>4</sup> That clause of the rule under consideration, which requires that the dispute should have related to the particular subject in issue, is based on sound sense; for, although the existence of such a controversy may reasonably be expected to render turbid the fountain of evidence, the mere discussion of other topics, however similar they may be in their general nature to the real matter in dispute, does not necessarily lead to the inference that that matter was controverted, and therefore is not deemed sufficient to exclude declarations made during that discussion as evidence of reputation. Thus, in a suit between a copyholder and the lord, where the point in issue was, whether a certain customary fine was to be assessed by the jury of the lord's court; depositions taken in an ancient suit against a former lord, where the controversy turned on the amount of such fine, in which depositions the fine was mentioned as assessible by the lord, were admitted as evidence to negative the existence of any custom for the jury to interfere.<sup>1</sup> In that case, one of the learned judges observed, that "the distinction had been correctly taken, that where the lis mota was on the very point, the declarations of persons would not be evidence; because you cannot be sure, that in admitting the depositions of witnesses, selected and brought forward on a particular side of the question, who embark to a certain degree with the feelings and prejudices belonging to that particular side, you are drawing evidence from perfectly unpolluted sources. But where the point in controversy is foreign to that which was before controverted, there never has been a lis mota, and, consequently, the objection does not apply."<sup>2</sup>

§ 568. It is not, however, necessary that the former controversy should have been between the same parties, or should have related to the same property or claim, provided it appears that the matters, respecting which the declarations offered in evidence on the second trial were made, were in the former dispute really under discussion; and, therefore, in the Berkeley Peerage case, where the question before the Committee of Privileges respected the legitimacy of the claimant, and this turned on the fact whether his parents, who had married after his birth, and had subsequently had several children, had likewise been privately married two years before he was born ; a deposition of the father, wherein he swore positively to the fact of the first marriage, was rejected, it having been taken some years before, in a suit instituted by the claimant and three of his brothers born before the second marriage against the other children born after that event, for the purpose of perpetuating the testimony of the legitimacy of the former, who claimed in that character to be entitled in remainder to an estate then held by the father.<sup>1</sup> So, in the Sussex Peerage case, where the claimant, Colonel d'Este, was required to prove that his parents, the Duke of Sussex and Lady Augusta Murray, were legally married, declarations contained in the Duke's will and affirming most solemnly the fact of marriage, as also statements to the same effect made by his Royal Highness in conversation, were rejected ; it appearing that some years previously to such declarations and statements being made, a suit had been instituted by the Crown to annul the Prince's marriage, and it not being shown, as in truth it could not be, that that marriage was not the very marriage on which the claimant relied.<sup>2</sup>

§ 569. It is now finally decided, that declarations, made after the controversy has originated, are in all events to be excluded, even though proof be offered that the existence of the controversy was not known to the declarant.<sup>3</sup> This rule may, no doubt, at times operate oppressively ; but its justification, if it can be justified, must rest on the ground, that, "If an inquiry were to be instituted in each instance, whether the existence of the controversy was or was not known at the time of the declaration, much time would be wasted, and great confusion would be produced."<sup>4</sup>

CHAPTER IX.

MATTERS OF PEDIGREE.

§ 571. QUESTIONS OF PEDIGREE form the second exception to the general rule rejecting hearsay evidence. This exception has been recognised on the ground of necessity; for as, in inquiries respecting relationship or descent, facts must often be proved which occurred many years before the trial, and were known but to few persons, it is obvious that the strict enforcement of the ordinary rules of evidence in cases of this nature would frequently occasion a grievous failure of justice. Courts of law have therefore so far relaxed these rules in matters of pedigree, as to allow parties to have recourse to traditional evidence; often the sole species of proof which can be obtained. Still, it is not considered safe to admit such evidence without qualification; and though it was long doubtful whether the declarations of servants, friends, and neighbours, might not be received, the settled rule of admission is now restricted to hearsay proceeding from persons who were de jure related by blood or marriage to the family in question, and who, consequently, may be supposed to have had the greatest interest in seeking, the best opportunities for obtaining, and the least reason for falsifying, information on the subject.<sup>1</sup>

relationship by affinity, some lawyers, till recently, imagined that the rule was confined to declarations by a husband respecting the state of his wife's family.<sup>1</sup> It is now however decided, that this view of the law is too narrow, and that no valid argument can be urged against the admissibility of a wife's declarations concerning her husband's relatives.<sup>2</sup> Still, the law will not be further relaxed, even in favour of statements made by the wife's father;<sup>3</sup> and so strictly has the limitation of the rule been enforced in modern times, that the declaration of an illegitimate member of a family, asserting that one of his natural brothers had died without issue, has been rejected.<sup>4</sup> So, also, the court has refused to admit a declaration by one brother that another brother has had an illegitimate son.<sup>5</sup> In an older case,<sup>6</sup> where the question was whether an elder son, who had taken possession of the paternal estates, and conveyed them to one of the litigants, was born in wedlock, his own declaration that he was a bastard, though made subsequently to the conveyance, was, after his death, received by Mr. Justice Le Blanc. The learned judge appears to have considered this statement admissible, "as the representation of one of the family of the degree of relationship he bore to it;" but if the case just cited be law, as it would probably be deemed at the present day, the decision can scarcely rest upon this ground, unless the special circumstances of the case be prayed in aid; and it be contended, that, since the defendant's claim rested on the legitimacy of the vendor, he could not object to the vendor's declaration, without relinquishing the only prop of his title. Should this refined argument be deemed inconclusive, perhaps the admissibility of the declaration might be sustained, on the ground that the cause turned, not only on the condition of the father's family, but on the actual status of the declarant himself; but here we are met by the difficulty, that the son could only have known the fact of his own illegitimacy by information received from others ; and, as a bastard has in the eye of the law no relatives, the hearsay must have been derived from strangers, and its admissibility might on that ground be questioned.

§ 573. On the whole, it may be considered as a point of great doubt, whether, under any circumstances, the declarations of a person deceased, asserting his own illegitimacy, can be received ; excepting as admissions against himself and those who claim under him by some title derived subsequently to the statements being made.<sup>1</sup> In the case referred to above,<sup>2</sup> evidence was received that the father had specified the time of his marriage, had declared his eldest son to have been born before that date, had heaped upon him opprobrious epithets implying illegitimacy, and had on his death-bed pointed to his younger son as his heir ; and these declarations would seem to have been clearly admissible, if not as directly proving the bastardy of a person, who, though de facto his son, was de jure a stranger to him, at least as showing the position of the legitimate portion of his family, through whom the plaintiff claimed his title.<sup>3</sup> It may be observed, by way of caution, that had the declarations of the father been confined to a general statement that his eldest son was illegitimate, they might possibly have been rejected ; for as such statements might have been made in consequence of non-access after marriage, they would seem to fall within the rule of law, which precludes parents from giving testimony to bastardise their issue born during wedlock.<sup>4</sup>

§ 574. If a man has once been connected with a family by marriage, the death of his wife will not dissolve that connexion, so as to render inadmissible declarations subsequently made by him ; and therefore where, in a case of pedigree, a witness was asked whether he had not heard a husband since deceased state, after his wife's death, that she was illegitimate, the answer was received, though the counsel declined to put the further question, whether the husband had derived his information from the wife during the coverture.<sup>1</sup> The court presumed in this case that the knowledge must have been obtained by the husband whilst he was a member of the family.<sup>2</sup>

§ 575. Again, no valid objection can be taken to evidence of this kind, on the ground that it is hearsay upon hearsay, provided all the declarations come from different members of the same family, or do not directly appear to have been derived from strangers.<sup>3</sup> Thus, the declarations of a deceased widow, respecting a statement which her husband had made to her, as to who his cousins were,—as also the declaration of a relative, in which he asserts generally that he has heard what he states,—have been received. If this were not so, the main object of relaxing the ordinary rules of evidence would be frustrated, since it seldom happens that the declarations of deceased relatives embrace matters within their own personal knowledge.<sup>4</sup> Even general repute in the family, proved by the testimony of a surviving member of it, has been considered as falling within the rule.<sup>5</sup> Moreover, it is not necessary to show that the declarations were contemporaneous with the events to which they relate; for, as Lord Brougham has well observed, such a restriction “would defeat the purpose for which hearsay in pedigree is let in, by preventing it from ever going back beyond the lifetime of the person whose declaration is to be adduced in evidence;” and, to use a homely illustration, it would even render inadmissible the statement of a deceased person as to the maiden name of his own grandmother.<sup>1</sup>

§ 576. Before a declaration can be admitted in evidence, the relationship of the declarant with the family must be established by some proof independent of the declaration itself; <sup>2</sup> and although, in tracing ancient pedigrees, the court would probably be satisfied with slight evidence on this head, since the connexion of the declarant with the family might be equally difficult of proof with the very fact in controversy; yet some evidence would certainly be required; for, otherwise, a stranger, by claiming alliance with a family, and then making statements respecting it, might assume to himself the power, after death, of materially altering the relative rights of its several branches.<sup>3</sup> It seems, however, unnecessary to show the exact degree of relationship that subsists between the declarant and the person respecting whom the declarations are tendered, but it will be sufficient to prove that they were in some manner connected by blood or marriage;<sup>4</sup> and if the question be whether any, or what, relationship subsists between two supposed branches of the same family, it is only necessary to establish the connexion of the declarant with either branch.<sup>5</sup> It has, indeed, been urged, that proof must be given connecting the declarant with both branches; but this proposition involves the absurdity, that if such a limitation were allowed, the declarations would be superfluous, as merely tending to prove a connexion, which, by showing that the declarant was related to both branches, had already been established.<sup>1</sup>

§ 577. Though hearsay evidence is admitted in cases of pedigree, on the assumption that no better evidence can be procured, yet the rule being once established, such evidence will not be rejected, though living witnesses might have been called to prove the very facts to which it relates.<sup>2</sup> Thus, the declarations of a deceased mother, as to the time of the birth of her son, have been received, though the father was living and was not called.<sup>3</sup> Still, if the declarant himself be alive, and capable of being examined, his declarations will be rejected; <sup>4</sup> and, consequently, it lies upon the party, who seeks to avail himself of this species of evidence, to prove the declarant's death. In a modern case of great interest in Ireland, where, in order to establish a Scotch marriage, a relative of the supposed husband had been asked at the trial what she had heard on the subject from members of the family, her answer was held by the Court of Error to have been rightly rejected, on the ground that the question had not been limited to statements made by deceased relatives.<sup>5</sup> Another qualification, restricting the admission of hearsay evidence in matters of pedigree, has already been pointed out and discussed in the last chapter; we allude to the rule rejecting all hearsay declarations which are made post litem motam.<sup>6</sup>

§ 578.<sup>7</sup> The term pedigree embraces not only general questions of descent and relationship, but also the particular facts of birth, marriage, and death, and the times <sup>8</sup> when, either absolutely or relatively, these events happened, provided such facts are required to be proved for some genealogical purpose.<sup>1</sup> All these facts, therefore, may, in any genealogical inquiry, be established by hearsay derived from relatives, though, with respect to specific dates, some doubts have been entertained as to the extent and application of the rule. Thus, on the trial of an issue out of Chancery, Chief Justice Tindal has rejected the declarations of deceased persons, which were tendered to prove the ages of their relatives, on the ground that, though admissible for the purpose of showing the relationship, they could not be received as proof of particular facts, such as the ages of parties.<sup>2</sup> The authority, however, of this decision has been much shaken; for when it was brought before Lord Brougham on a motion for a new trial, his lordship intimated a very strong opinion in favour of the admissibility of the evidence, and subsequently stated that Mr. Justice Parke and Mr. Justice Littledale, to whom he had submitted the point, entirely concurred in the view he had taken.<sup>3</sup> If to these high authorities be added several old and some modern decisions expressly in point,<sup>4</sup> the dicta of judges,<sup>5</sup> the opinions of text writers,<sup>6</sup> and the general practice of the profession, the student will probably be justified in concluding that the proposition contended for by Chief Justice Tindal is not law.

§ 579. It may be urged that, as hearsay evidence of particular facts is inadmissible in support of public rights,<sup>7</sup> the same rule should prevail in matters of pedigree; but, in the Berkeley Peerage case, Sir James Mansfield drew a distinction between these two subjects of inquiry, which appears to put the law in its proper light. "In cases of general right," said his lordship, "which depend upon immemorial usage, living witnesses can only speak of their own knowledge to what passed in their own time ; and to supply the deficiency, the law receives the declarations of persons who are dead. There, however, the witness is only allowed to speak to what he has heard the dead man say respecting the reputation of the right of way, or of common, or the like. A declaration with regard to a particular fact, which would support or negative the right, is inadmissible. In matters of pedigree, it being impossible to prove by living witnesses the relationships of past generations, the declarations of deceased members of the family are admitted ; but here, as the reputation must proceed on particular facts, such as marriages, births and the like, from the necessity of the thing, the hearsay of the family as to these particular facts is not excluded. General rights are naturally talked of in the neighbourhood ; and the family transactions among the relations of the parties. Therefore, what is thus dropped in conversation upon such subjects may be presumed to be true."<sup>1</sup>

§ 580. Still, the hearsay evidence must, it seems, be confined to such facts as are immediately connected with the question of pedigree ; and declarations as to independent facts, from which the date of a genealogical event may be inferred, will probably be rejected. It is not easy to express this limitation of the rule in intelligible language, but the following cases will explain its purport. In a question of legitimacy, turning upon the time of birth, a declaration by the deceased sister of the alleged bastard's mother, stating that she had suckled the child, was tendered in evidence ; and being coupled with the proof of the time when her own child was born, it tended to fix the alleged bastard's birth at a period subsequent to its parent's marriage. Mr. Baron Gurney admitted this evidence ; but Lord Cottenham expressed an opinion that he was wrong in so doing.<sup>2</sup> In another case,<sup>3</sup> where the question turned on the relative seniority of three sons, born at a birth, declarations by the father that he had christened them Stephanus, Fortunatus, and Achaicus, according to the order of the names in St. Paul's First Epistle to the Corinthians,<sup>1</sup> for the purpose of distinguishing their seniority, as also declarations by an aunt, who was present at the confinement, and who, with a similar object, had tied strings round the arms of the second and third child, were admitted. The distinction between these two cases is clear. In the former, the fact of suckling the child had no direct bearing on its age or legitimacy, but was only a species of circumstantial evidence from which these facts might be inferred; whereas in the latter, the christening and the tying strings round the arms of the children were intended from the first to afford the means of ascertaining their relative seniority.

§ 581. Although, as Mr. Phillipps justly observes, "there appears to be no foundation for any distinction between cases where a matter of pedigree is the direct subject of the suit, and other cases where it occurs incidentally,"<sup>2</sup> yet the declarations of relatives will not necessarily be admissible whenever the birth, marriage, or death of the party forms the subject of controversy; but such proof would seem to be confined to cases, which directly or indirectly involve some question of relationship, and in which the fact sought to be established by hearsay is required to be proved for some genealogical purpose.<sup>3</sup> For instance, if an action for use and occupation be brought by a reversioner against a tenant pur auter vie, who has held over after the death of his cestui que vie, the fact of the death must be proved by the plaintiff in the ordinary way, and the hearsay of relatives will be inadmissible.<sup>4</sup> So, in support of a plea of infancy, letters written by the deceased father of the defendant cannot be read as proof of the date of his son's birth.<sup>5</sup> So, in R. v. Erith,<sup>6</sup> it was distinctly held, that the declarations of a deceased father as to the place where his child was born, could not be received as evidence of the birth settlement of the child.<sup>1</sup>

§ 582. The case of R. v. Erith<sup>2</sup> has repeatedly been cited as an authority for the proposition, that, even in a strict question of pedigree, hearsay evidence of locality—or, in other words, the declarations of deceased persons respecting the places where their relatives were born, and where they married, resided, came from, went to, or died—cannot be received; but certainly, as was once pointed out by Vice-Chancellor Knight Bruce,<sup>3</sup> the case decides no such point, since Lord Ellenborough carefully rested his judgment on the fact, that no question whatsoever of relationship was involved in the inquiry. Had, therefore, the evidence tendered in that case been required for any genealogical purpose, it is very possible that the Court of King's Bench would have arrived at a different conclusion; and, indeed, this may be considered as a highly probable hypothesis, inasmuch as hearsay evidence of locality has on several occasions been admitted to elucidate matters of strict pedigree. Thus, in Hood v. Lady Beauchamp,<sup>4</sup> where the question was, whether A. B., an ancestor of the declarant C., was the same person as A. B., a blacksmith, who had resided at X., a declaration by C. that his ancestor was a blacksmith, and that he resided at X., was received in evidence by Vice-Chancellor Shadwell. So, in Shields v. Boucher,<sup>5</sup> Vice-Chancellor Knight Bruce, in a very elaborate judgment, intimated a strong opinion, that, in a controversy merely genealogical,

In this case an issue had been directed out of Chan. to ascertain the relationship of certain parties, and on the trial all the questions put in the text, except the last, had been rejected by Wilde, C. J. On a motion for a new trial, K. Bruce, V.-C., expressed his opinion that the Ch. Just. was wrong in rejecting the evidence, but it ultimately became unnecessary to decide the point. The V.-Chancellor's judgment is a very masterly production, and deserves an attentive perusal.

declarations made by a deceased person as to where he or his family came from, "of what place" his father was designated, and what occupation his father followed, would be admissible, and might be most material evidence for the purpose of identifying and individualising the person and family under discussion. Again, if it be necessary to show, that a family had relations who lived at a particular place, declarations by a deceased member of the family, that "he was going to visit his relatives at that place," will be evidence; not, indeed, that he went there, or that any person of his name lived in that neighbourhood; but as proving a tradition in the family, that they once had relations living in the place in question, which tradition, in the event of its being shown by other evidence that persons of the same name had resided there, might be important as a mode of identifying those persons with the branch of the family alluded to.<sup>1</sup> So, evidence has been received of a family tradition, that a particular individual died in India, for the purpose of connecting that individual with the family of the claimant.<sup>2</sup>

§ 583. The forms, under which hearsay evidence in matters of pedigree may be presented, are very numerous. First may be noticed the oral declarations of deceased relatives. These are clearly admissible if made ante litem motam, though they are seldom entitled to any great weight; for not only are they generally sought to be established by connexions of the family or other persons interested in the result of the litigation, but they are often recorded or remembered for the first time after the contest has arisen. In these cases the court necessarily runs considerable risk of being deceived by deliberate falsehood, for it is obviously difficult, not to say impossible, to convict a witness of perjury in narrating what he remembers to have heard in a conversation with a deceased person.<sup>3</sup> And, even assuming that the sincerity of the witness cannot reasonably be doubted, it often happens that little reliance can be placed on the accuracy of his testimony; for men, without deliberately intending to falsify facts, are extremely prone to believe what they wish, to confound what they believe with what they have heard, and to ascribe to memory what is merely the result of imagination.<sup>1</sup>

§ 584.<sup>2</sup> Again, family conduct, such as the tacit recognition of relationship, and the distribution and devolution of property, is frequently received as evidence from which the opinion and belief of the family may be inferred, and as resting ultimately on the same basis as evidence of family tradition. For, since the principal question in pedigree cases turns on the parentage or descent of an individual, it is obviously material, in order to resolve this question, to ascertain how he was treated and acknowledged by those who sustained towards him any relations of blood or of affinity. Thus, in the Berkeley Peerage case, Sir James Mansfield remarked, that, "if the father is proved to have brought up the party as his legitimate son, this amounts to a daily assertion that the son is legitimate."<sup>3</sup> So, the concealment of the birth of a child from the husband,<sup>4</sup>—the subsequent treatment of such child by the person who, at the time of its conception, was living in a state of adultery with the mother,—and the fact that the child and its descendants assumed the name of the adulterer, and had never been recognised in the family as the legitimate offspring of the husband,—are circumstances that will go far to rebut the presumption of legitimacy, which the law raises in favour of the issue of a married woman.<sup>5</sup> Again, if the question be whether a person, from whom the claimant traces his descent, was the son of a particular testator, the fact that all the members of the family appear to have been mentioned in the will, but that no notice is taken of such person, is strong evidence to show, either that he was not the son, or at least that he had died with-

Entries in a family bible or testament, will be admissible, even without proof that they have been made by a relative; for as this book is the ordinary register of families, and is usually accessible to all its members, the presumption is that the whole family have more or less adopted the entries contained in it, and have thereby given them authenticity.<sup>10</sup> This presumption, however, will not prevail in favour of an entry in any other book, however religious its character may be, but proof must be given, either that the entry was made by some member of the family,<sup>11</sup> or that it has been acknowledged or treated by a relative as a correct family memorial,<sup>1</sup> or, at least, if ancient, that it was made at the time when it purports to have been written. In order to establish this last fact, the evidence of skilled witnesses, conversant with manuscripts of different ages, is admissible, though, as before observed, such evidence is entitled to very little weight.<sup>2</sup>

§ 589. Though the publicity of a document or inscription is a strong fact from which a family recognition of its truth may be presumed, yet a similar presumption may arise from other circumstances; and, therefore, if a document, though privately kept, is clearly proved to have been preserved by members of the family as an authentic memorial of their pedigree, it will be receivable in evidence without proof of its origin.<sup>1</sup> The mere production, however, of a document from among the family archives,<sup>2</sup> and à fortiori, its production from a museum, or other public place of deposit,<sup>3</sup> will not be sufficient to render it admissible, without proof that it was made or recognised by some member of the family.

§ 590. The question how far a pedigree, purporting to have been compiled, either wholly or in part, from registers and other documents which are not shown to have been lost, is admissible, has been much discussed. The point arose in the case of Davies v. Lowndes,<sup>4</sup> where a Welch pedigree, which was proved to be in the handwriting of one of the ancestors of the defendant, was offered in evidence, it being produced from the proper custody. The document traced the genealogy of the family from a remote and almost fabulous antiquity, and brought down the descent to the immediate contemporary relatives of the writer. At the foot of it was a memorandum in these words: "Collected from parish registers, wills, monumental inscriptions, family records, and history. This account is now presented as correct, and as confirming the tradition handed down from one generation to another, to Thomas Lloyd, Esq., of Cwm Gloyne, this 4th day of July, A.D. 1733, by his loving kinsman, Wm. Lloyd." The counsel for the demandant contended that the entire document was admis-

sible, or at least such parts of it as showed the relationship of those persons who were described by the framer as then living, and who might therefore be presumed to be personally known to him; but the Court of Common Pleas rejected the whole, apparently on the ground that the memorandum bore upon the face of it a sort of certificate, that the statement in the pedigree was merely secondary evidence of existing originals from which it was compiled, and that the absence of those originals was not accounted for; and that if any part of the pedigree was derived from legitimate sources, viz., personal knowledge or family tradition, it did not appear distinctly which was such part, and therefore the whole was inadmissible.<sup>1</sup>

§ 591. The case was then brought before the Exchequer Chamber, and the conclusion at which that court arrived, after much doubt and full consideration, was that part, if not all, of the pedigree was receivable in evidence. Lord Denman, in pronouncing the judgment of the court, observes, that "a pedigree, whether in the shape of a genealogical tree or map, or contained in a book, or mural or monumental inscription, if recognised by a deceased member of the same family, is admissible, however early the period from which it purports to have been deduced. On what ground is this admitted? It may be that the simple act of recognition of the document, and consequent acknowledgment of the relationship stated in it, by a member of the family, is some evidence of that relationship, from whatever sources his information may have been derived, because he was likely, from his situation, to inquire into the truth of such matters, and from his means of knowledge, to ascertain it."<sup>2</sup> His lordship, after referring to the language of Lords Brougham<sup>3</sup> and Cottenham,<sup>4</sup> and of the Vice-Chancellor of England,<sup>5</sup> as giving great countenance to the opinion, that the recognition by a relative of a statement of relationship is evidence of the truth of that statement, adds, "if this be a correct view of the law, the pedigree in question was admissible, because it was certainly acknowledged by Wm. Lloyd to be correct." The judgment then continues thus: "But the reason why a pedigree, when made or recognised by a member of a family, is admissible, may be, that it is presumably made or recognised by him in consequence of his personal knowledge of the individuals therein stated to be relations, or of information received by him from some deceased member of what the latter knew, or heard from other members who lived before his time. And if so, it may well be contended, that, if the facts rebut that presumption, and show that no part of the pedigree was derived from proper sources of information, then the whole of it ought to be rejected; and so also if there be some, but an uncertain and undefined part, derived from improper sources. But when the framer speaks of individuals, whom he describes as living, we think the reasonable presumption is that he knew them, and spoke of his own personal knowledge, and not from reference to registers, wills, monumental inscriptions, and family records, or history; and, consequently, to that extent, the statements in the pedigree are derived from a proper source, and are good evidence of the relationship of those persons."<sup>1</sup>

§ 592. Armorial bearings, whether carved on wood, painted on glass, engraved on monuments or seals, or otherwise emblazoned, are also admissible in cases of pedigree; not only as tending to prove that the person who assumed them was of the family to which they of right belonged, but as illustrating the particular branch from which the descent was claimed, or as showing, by the impalings or quarterings, the nature of the blazonry, or the shape of the shield, what families were allied by marriage, or what members of the family were descended from an illegitimate stock, or were maidens, widows, or heiresses.<sup>2</sup> The value of this evidence depends almost wholly upon its antiquity; and as, since the Revolution,<sup>1</sup> the heralds have exercised no authority in correcting usurpation, the use of armorial bearings subsequently to that date is entitled to but little, if any, weight as evidence of genealogy.<sup>2</sup> When proof of this nature is offered, some officer of the Heralds' College should be in attendance, to explain the meaning of the occult science.<sup>3</sup>

Chap. iv. See De Roos Peer., 2 Coop. 545—552.

CHAPTER X.

ANCIENT POSSESSION.

§ 593. A THIRD EXCEPTION to the rule rejecting hearsay evidence is allowed in favour of ancient documents when tendered in support of ancient possession. By the term “ancient documents,” are meant documents more than thirty years old; and as these often furnish the only attainable evidence of ancient possession, the law, on the principle of necessity, allows them to be read in courts of justice on behalf of persons claiming under them, and against persons in no way privy to them, provided that they are not mere narratives of past events, but that they purport to have formed a part of the act of ownership, exercise of right, or other transaction to which they relate. No doubt this species of proof deserves to be scrutinised with care; for, first, its effect is to benefit those who are connected in interest with the original parties to the documents, and from whose custody they have been produced; and next, the documents are not proved, but are only presumed to have constituted part of the res gestæ. Still, as forgery and fraud are, comparatively speaking, of rare occurrence, and as a fabricated deed will, generally, from some anachronism or other inconsistency, afford internal evidence of its real character, the danger of admitting these documents is less than might be supposed; and, at any rate, it is deemed more expedient to run some risk of occasional deception, than to permit injustice to be done by strict exclusion of what, in many cases, would turn out to be highly material evidence. On a balance, therefore, of evils, this kind of proof has for many years past been admitted, subject to certain qualifications, which will now be stated.<sup>1</sup>

§ 594. And first, care is especially taken to ascertain the genuineness of the ancient documents produced; and this may in general

be shown, primâ facie, by proof that they come from the proper custody.<sup>1</sup> As this proof is by no means confined to documents tendered in support of ancient possession, but is required in most cases where deeds, papers, or writings are rendered admissible by any rule of law without strict proof of their authenticity, it becomes highly important to explain, with as much precision as possible, the legal meaning of the words "proper custody." The subject, therefore, will be illustrated in this place once for all, by a reference to the leading decisions which bear upon it; and attention will first be drawn to the language used by Chief Justice Tindal in the House of Lords, while pronouncing the opinion of the judges in the important case of the Bishop of Meath v. The Marquis of Winchester.<sup>2</sup> § 595. "Documents," said his lordship, "found in a place in which, and under the care of persons with whom, such papers might naturally and reasonably be expected to be found, are precisely in the custody which gives authenticity to documents found within it; for it is not necessary that they should be found in the best and most proper place of deposit. If documents continue in such custody, there never would be any question as to their authenticity; but it is when documents are found in other than their proper place of deposit that the investigation commences, whether it was reasonable and natural, under the circumstances in the particular case, to expect that they should have been in the place where they are actually found; for it is obvious, that, while there can be only one place of deposit strictly and absolutely proper, there may be many and various, that are reasonable and probable, though differing in degree; some being more so, some less; and in those cases the proposition to be determined is, whether the actual custody is so reasonably and probably to be accounted for, that it impresses the mind with the conviction that the instrument found in such custody must be genuine. That such is the character and description of the custody, which is held

§ 596. Thus, on the one hand, old grants to abbeys have been rejected as evidence of private rights, where the possession of them has appeared altogether unconnected with the persons who had any interest in the estate.<sup>2</sup> So, a manuscript found in the Heralds’ Office, enumerating the possessions of a dissolved monastery,<sup>3</sup>—a curious manuscript book, entitled the “Secretum Abbatis,” preserved in the Bodleian Library at Oxford, and containing a grant to an abbey,<sup>4</sup>—an old grant to a priory, brought from the Cottonian MSS. in the British Museum,<sup>5</sup>—and two ancient writings, purporting respectively to be an endowment of a vicarage and an inspeximus of the endowment under the seal of a bishop, both of which had been purchased at a sale as part of a private collection of manuscripts,<sup>6</sup>—have been held to be inadmissible, the possession of the documents being unconnected with the interest in the property.<sup>7</sup> So, also, as the registers of burials and baptisms are required by the Act of 52 G. 3, c. 146, §§ 1 & 5, to be kept by the clergyman of the parish either at his own residence or in the church, such registers, when produced from the house of the parish clerk, have, in the absence of all explanation on the subject, been rejected, as not coming from the proper custody.<sup>8</sup> So, the courts have on several occasions refused to admit terriers, which have been found among the papers of a mere landholder in the parish,<sup>9</sup> because the legitimate repository for such documents would be either the registry of the bishop, the registry of the archdeacon, or the church chest.<sup>1</sup> In the case of Randolph v. Gordon<sup>2</sup> this doctrine was carried to its extreme limit. There; the defendant, who was grandson of a former rector, produced a book, which purported to be the book of such rector; but as he did not show that he had found it among his grandfather's papers, or that it had come into his possession in a legitimate manner, it was rejected.

§ 597. On the other hand, the poor-house of a union has been considered not an improper repository for the documents of any parish within the union;<sup>3</sup> and an old chartulary of a dissolved abbey has been admitted, when found in the possession of the owner of part of the abbey lands, though not of the principal proprietor.<sup>4</sup> The strictly proper custody for such a document as this last would have been the Augmentation Office;<sup>5</sup> and as between the different proprietors of the abbey lands, it might naturally be supposed to have been deposited with the largest; still the court held, that its actual place of custody was one, where it might reasonably be expected to be found.<sup>6</sup> So, an old book of a collector of tithes would be equally well authenticated, whether produced from the custody of the successor, or executor, of the incumbent, or from the hands of the successor of the collector.<sup>7</sup> So, also, an unproved will, more than thirty years old, disposing of real and personal estate, and produced from the custody of a younger son of the testator, who, in common with his brothers, derived a benefit under it, has been admitted, though it was contended that it should have been deposited in the ecclesiastical court of the diocese.<sup>8</sup> When an expired lease was produced from the custody of the lessor, and proof was given that he had received it from a former occupier of the demised premises, who had paid for several years the precise rent reserved by it, and who, subsequently to the expiration of the term, had procured it from two strangers who claimed no interest in it, the court held the deed to be admissible, without proof in what manner it had come into the hands of these strangers; because, by the act of giving it up to the occupier, they admitted his right to the possession of it, and were consequently presumed to have held it on his account.<sup>1</sup> Again, a case stated for counsel's opinion by a deceased bishop, respecting his right of presentation to a living, has been admitted against a subsequent bishop of the same see, on a question touching the same right, though the paper was not found in the public registry of the diocese, but among the private family documents of the descendants of the former bishop.<sup>2</sup> So, where a mortgagee in fee brought an action of ejectment, and the defendant's case was, that the mortgagor, his father, had, previously to the mortgage, conveyed the estate to trustees in settlement, reserving to himself only a life interest, the court permitted the son to put in the deed of settlement, it being more than thirty years old, though it was produced from among the papers of his late father, against whom its provisions were intended to operate; and though it was strongly urged that the trustees or their representatives were the parties entitled to its custody; and the more especially so, as by the deed having been permitted to remain with the settlor, he had been enabled to practise a fraud on the mortgagee.<sup>3</sup>

§ 598. Some doubt exists whether the custody of a document must be proved by a sworn witness, when it purports on its face to belong to the party who tenders it in evidence. In one or two settlement cases, the respondents have been permitted to produce old certificates, which purported to have been granted to them by the appellants, without giving any account respecting their custody ;<sup>1</sup> but in the case of Evans v. Rees, where, on a question of boundary, the plaintiff's counsel proposed to read certain manor-books without proving the custody whence they came, on the ground that they belonged to the lord, who was admitted to be the real plaintiff, the court held that they could not be read ; Mr. Justice Coleridge observing, that unless some one was sworn for the purpose of proving their custody, they might have been procured from a grocer's shop.<sup>2</sup> If, however, the witness producing the document can swear that he received it from the representative of the person originally entitled to it, as a paper which had belonged to such person, it seems that this evidence will in ordinary cases be sufficient, without calling the representative himself to explain how he became possessed of the document.<sup>3</sup>

§ 599. An able writer on the law of evidence has urged, that in order to render ancient documents admissible, proof, if possible, must be given of some act done with reference to them, and that where the nature of the case does not admit of such proof, acts of modern enjoyment must at least be shown.<sup>4</sup> This doctrine, however, would seem to be advanced in somewhat too bold a manner, and to be unsupported by the current of modern decisions ; for although it is perfectly true that the mere production of an ancient document, unless supported by some corroborative evidence of acting under it, or of modern possession, would be entitled to little, if any, weight, still there appears to be no strict rule of law, which would authorise the judge in withdrawing the deed altogether from the consideration of the jury :—in other words, the absence of proof of possession affects merely the weight, and not the admissibility, of the instrument.<sup>5</sup>

§ 600. Thus, in Rogers v. Allen, where, in order to prove a prescriptive right of fishery as appurtenant to a manor, ancient licences to fish in the locus in quo, which appeared on the court-rolls, and were granted by former lords in consideration of certain rents, were tendered in evidence, Mr. Justice Heath, after argument, held that they were admissible without any proof of the rents having been paid; but he added that, "to give them any weight, it must be shown that in latter times payments had been made under licences of the same kind, or that the lords of the manor had exercised other acts of ownership over the fishery, which had been acquiesced in."<sup>1</sup> So, in the case of the Duke of Bedford v. Lopes, Bart., which was an action brought to try the title to the bed of a river, after proof of a grant from Henry VIII., two counterparts of leases were produced from the Duke's muniment room, comprehending the soil in question. No payment by a tenant was proved, nor any modern act of ownership; but Lord Denman admitted the instruments as coming from the right custody, observing that no circumstance in the case threw suspicion upon them, and that "the absence of other kinds of proof was mere matter of observation."<sup>2</sup> Again, in one of the numerous ejectments brought by Lord Egremont,<sup>3</sup> it became necessary to show that the land in question had been part of the estate of the lessor's ancestor, Sir William Wyndham; and in order to establish this fact, a document was produced from the muniment room of the property inherited from Sir William, which appeared to be a counterpart of a lease of this land made by him; but it purported to be executed only by the lessee, and no proof was given of actual possession under it. The Court of Queen's Bench, after consulting with some of the other judges, held that this deed was admissible in evidence.

receivable as evidence that the transactions to which they relate actually occurred. And though they are usually spoken of as hearsay evidence of ancient possession, and, as such, are said to be admitted in exception to the general rule; yet they seem rather to be parts of the res gestæ, and therefore admissible as original evidence, on the principle already discussed.<sup>1</sup> An ancient deed, which has nothing suspicious about it, is presumed to be genuine without express proof, the witnesses being presumed dead; <sup>2</sup> and, if found in the proper custody, and corroborated by evidence of ancient or modern corresponding enjoyment, or by other equivalent or explanatory proof, it will be presumed to have constituted part of the actual transfer of property therein mentioned; because this is the usual course of such transactions. ## CHAPTER XI.

DECLARATIONS AGAINST INTEREST.

§ 602.<sup>1</sup> A FOURTH EXCEPTION to the rule rejecting hearsay evidence is allowed in favour of declarations made by persons since deceased against their pecuniary or proprietary interest.<sup>2</sup> The ground upon which this evidence is received, is the extreme improbability of its falsehood. The regard which men usually pay to their own interests is considered a sufficient security against any wilful misstatement, and affords also a reasonable inference that the declarations or entries were not made under any mistake of fact, or want of information on the part of the declarant. The danger of any fraud in the statement will be still less dreaded, if it be borne in mind, that the evidence is not receivable till after the death of the declarant, and that if the opponent can show that the statement was made with any sinister motive, it will at once be rejected. The ordinary tests of truth, afforded by the administration of an oath and by cross-examination, are certainly here wanting; but their place is in some measure supplied by the circumstances of the declarant; and the inconveniences that would result from the exclusion of evidence, having such guarantees for its accuracy in fact and its freedom from fraud, are rightly considered much greater in general, than any which are likely to be experienced from its admission.<sup>3</sup>

§ 603. In order to render declarations against interest admissible as such, it must appear, either by proof or by presumption,<sup>4</sup> that the declarant is dead;<sup>5</sup> and the mere fact that he has absconded abroad in consequence of a criminal charge, or that he is otherwise out of the power of the party to produce as a witness, will not be sufficient.<sup>1</sup> It would seem, also, from many of the cases, that the declarant must be shown to have had a competent, if not a peculiar, knowledge of the facts, which form the subject matter of the declaration;<sup>2</sup> and, indeed, in the Sussex Peerage claim, the rule was so laid down.<sup>3</sup> In all these cases, however, the "law" was "taken for granted;"<sup>4</sup> and in Crease v. Barrett, where the question was expressly raised, the Court of Exchequer after argument held, "that it was not necessary that the deceased person should have his own knowledge of the fact stated,—that, if the entry charged himself, the whole of it became admissible against all persons,—and that the absence of such knowledge went to the weight, and not to the admissibility, of the evidence."<sup>5</sup>

§ 604. It was long a matter of doubt in Westminster Hall, whether the absence of all interest to misrepresent, coupled with peculiar knowledge in the declarant, would not render his declarations admissible after his death:<sup>6</sup> but it is now fully determined, first, that the statement or entry must be against the interest of the person making it;<sup>7</sup> and, secondly, that the interest must be of a pecuniary or proprietary nature.<sup>8</sup> These points were decided in the Sussex Peerage case, where, in order to prove the marriage of the Duke of Sussex and Lady Augusta Murray, statements made by the clergyman, since deceased, who had married them at Rome, were tendered in evidence, on the ground that they were clearly against his interest, inasmuch as they related to an act which rendered him liable to prosecution while living, or which, at least, he believed to be illegal. Lord Chancellor Lyndhurst, in declaring his opinion that this evidence should be rejected, observed, "It is not true that the declarations of deceased persons are in all circumstances receivable in evidence, when in some way or other they might injuriously affect the interest of the party making them. Nor is it true, that because, while living, a party would be excused from answering as to certain facts, his declarations as to those facts become evidence after his death. These are not correlative nor corresponding propositions."<sup>1</sup> Lord Brougham also added, "To say, if a man should confess a felony for which he would be liable to prosecution, that, therefore, the instant the grave closes over him, all that was said by him is to be taken as evidence in every action and prosecution against another person, is one of the most monstrous and untenable propositions that can be advanced."<sup>2</sup>

605. The courts will not weigh with nice scales the amount of the pecuniary interest, but will admit every entry which, at the time when it was made, completely charged the maker to any extent.<sup>3</sup> But an incomplete charge will not be sufficient; and, therefore, an entry in the following form, "April 4th.—A. came as a servant, to have for the half year 2*l.*," was held to be inadmissible as a declaration against interest, the court considering it merely as a memorandum of an agreement, which must be supposed to have been made on fair terms, and was, consequently, as much in favour of the maker's interest as against it. If the master had to pay for the services, the servant had to perform

§ 606. It is now determined both with reference to this exception, and also to that which relates to declarations made in the course of duty or business, that the term “declaration” includes a mere oral statement, as well as a written memorandum.<sup>2</sup> The former may indeed be entitled to less weight with the jury than the latter, but the law of England recognises no distinction between statements made by word of mouth and those made in writing, except where the writing is by deed.

§ 607. It is further clear that the term “declaration,” as applied to the exception under discussion, embraces all written statements, whether made at the time of the fact declared, or on a subsequent day,<sup>3</sup> though the exception is most frequently exemplified by entries in books of account. Where<sup>4</sup> these are books of collectors of taxes, stewards, bailiffs, or receivers, which are subject to the inspection of others, and in which the entries are generally of money received, charging the party making them, the exception clearly applies.<sup>5</sup> But private books, though exclusively retained within the custody of their owners, are also admissible on the same principle; for their liability to be produced in courts of law on notice, and the possible chance of their contents becoming known through accident, are deemed sufficient security against fraud;<sup>1</sup> and as the entry is not admissible, unless it either charges the party making it with the receipt of money on account of a third person, or acknowledges the payment of money due to himself, it is considered, in either of these events, as sufficiently against his interest to be brought within the exception.<sup>2</sup>

is a question of more difficulty, and the authorities on the subject are highly conflicting. On the one hand, two Nisi Prius decisions may be cited,—namely, Doe v. Vowles,<sup>1</sup> and Doe v. Burton,<sup>2</sup> which seem distinctly to negative the admissibility of such evidence. In the first case it became necessary to show that a mortgagee, through whom the plaintiff claimed, had repaired the premises in dispute; and for this purpose, the plaintiff produced a receipted bill for the repairs, in the handwriting of a deceased carpenter, which had been found among the mortgagee's papers. An objection was raised to the reception of this paper as not containing any statement against the interest of the carpenter; since, though it showed that his demand had been paid, it furnished the only evidence that such a demand had ever existed. Mr. Justice Littledale rejected the evidence, observing, that "the cases had gone quite far enough." In the other case the evidence tendered was of a similar nature, excepting only that, instead of being a bill and receipt, it was an entry in a deceased tradesman's book, showing that he had done certain work, and been paid for it. Mr. Baron Gurney refused to admit this evidence, apparently relying on the authority of Doe v. Vowles.

§ 610. On the other hand, Lord Denman<sup>3</sup> and Lord Wensleydale<sup>4</sup> appear, on separate occasions, to have admitted such entries, and the latter very learned judge is stated to have expressly disapproved of Doe v. Vowles, saying that he thought it contrary in principle to Higham v. Ridgway.<sup>5</sup> On examining, however, the case of Higham v. Ridgway, it scarcely seems to furnish a safe guide on the subject; for there it was proved by evidence abundè, that the service charged for in the account had in fact been performed; and although Lord Ellenborough first lays down the general doctrine, that "the evidence was admissible upon the broad principle on which receiver's books have been admitted,—namely, that the entry made was in prejudice of the party making it,"<sup>6</sup>—he afterwards, in two different parts of his judgment, advert to the fact, that the work, for which the charge was made, was proved to have been done by other evidence.<sup>1</sup> But still, independent of this case, the view of the law taken by Lord Denman and Lord Wensleydale will probably be upheld ; for, although it may be urged that, while that part of an entry which is in the writer's own favour stands unconfirmed, suspicions may be entertained that the whole statement is a fiction ;<sup>2</sup> an answer to this argument is found in the improbability that any tradesman would, without an assignable motive, first enter a false claim on one side of his book, and then admit its having been satisfied on the other. Moreover, as the requiring corroborative proof of the claim must tend to embarrass the trial by raising collateral issues, and as the very impossibility of obtaining such proof is often the sole cause, which renders it necessary to have recourse to the entry at all ; it seems naturally to follow, that the admission of such entries ought on every ground, whether of justice or expediency, to be regarded as a less evil than their rejection.

§ 611. The case of Higham v. Ridgway,<sup>3</sup> though it throws but little light on the subject discussed in the preceding section, is highly important, as showing that entries may be received in evidence of collateral and independent matters, which, though forming part of the declaration, are not in themselves against the interest of the declarant. In that case, to prove on what day a child was born, the book of the accoucheur, who had attended the mother in her confinement, was produced, and as his charge for such attendance on a day specified was marked in the book as paid, this entry was admitted as evidence of the date of the birth. Lord Ellenborough, in pronouncing judgment, observes, "It is idle to say that the word paid only shall be admitted in evidence without the context, which explains to what it refers : we must therefore look to the rest of the entry, to see what the demand was, which he thereby admitted to be discharged."<sup>4</sup> So, in Doe v. Robson,<sup>5</sup> the entry in a book of a deceased attorney of charges paid for a lease as drawn on a certain day, was held to be evidence that the lease was drawn on that day. In<sup>1</sup> a later case,<sup>2</sup> while the judges intimated an opinion, that, if the point were res nova, it would be more reasonable to hold, that the memorandum of a receipt of payment was admissible only to the extent of proving that a payment had been made, and on what account,—thus giving it the effect only of verbal proof of the same payment; yet, they acknowledged that the authorities had gone beyond that limit, and that the entry of a payment against the interest of the party making it, had been held to have the effect of proving the truth of other statements contained in the same entry, and connected with it. In that case, A. B. and C. had made a joint and several promissory note for 300*l.*, and a partial payment had been made by A., which was indorsed by the payee upon the note in these terms,—“Received of A. the sum of 280*l.* on account of the within note, *the 300*l.* having been originally advanced to C.*” An action having been brought by A. to recover contribution from B. “as a co-surety,” the court held that, as the payee was dead, the indorsement was admissible evidence of the whole statement contained in it, and was consequently evidence, not only of the payment of the money, but of the fact that C. was the principal debtor; leaving the effect of such proof to be determined by the jury.

§ 612. Again, in the case of Marks v. Laheè,<sup>3</sup> the plaintiff, in order to prove a tender and refusal, offered in evidence two entries, which had been made by a deceased clerk of his attorney in the day-book of the office. By the first, the clerk acknowledged the receipt of 100*l.* from his employer, for the purpose of making a tender to the defendant. The second entry was as follows: “Re Colnaghi, attending Mr. Laheè; tendering him 100*l.* for each of the plates, and the etching of the Queen separately; when he declined to let me have same, and said he had no objection to deliver up the impressions, upon payment of the expenses of making them.” An objection was taken to the admissibility of the second entry, on the ground that it did not charge the party making it, but rather discharged him, as showing that he had fulfilled his duty; that the second entry must be taken by itself, because the first did not prove the tender; and being so taken, there was nothing to show that the clerk did not tender his own money; in which case the entry contained nothing to charge him. The objection, however, was overruled, and Chief Justice Tindal observed, that if an action had been brought by the employer against the clerk for money had and received, the entry would have been material evidence to show that he had received 100%, and had not disposed of it according to his instructions; so that it remained in his hands to be accounted for to the employer. In such an action the employer could not have relied on the first entry alone; but must have further shown that the object, for which the money was placed in the clerk's hands, had not been attained.<sup>1</sup> The case of Stead v. Heaton<sup>2</sup> carries this doctrine to the extreme verge of the law.<sup>3</sup> There, in order to establish the existence of a customary payment, two entries in a parish book were put in. The first stated the custom, and the second, which was written on the same page, was as follows: "Received of Haworth, who this year disputed this our ancient custom, but afterwards paid it, 8*l*." The court held that both entries were admissible, the latter as charging the parish officers with the receipt of the money, the former as immediately preceding the latter, and being referred to in it.<sup>4</sup>

§ 613. It must not be supposed from the preceding cases, that because a document contains entries against interest, it will be admissible in proof of independent matters, which appear as separate items unconnected with such entries, and which, consequently, need not be read in order to explain them.<sup>5</sup> Such is not the law; and whatever doubts might once have been entertained on the subject,<sup>6</sup> it is now finally determined, that if an account be rendered by a steward containing on one side items charging himself with the receipt of moneys, and on the other side items discharging him by showing how the moneys received had been disbursed, the discharging entries will not be admissible in evidence, unless they are necessary to explain the charging entries, or are expressly referred to by them.<sup>1</sup> For instance, in the case of Knight v. The Marquis of Waterford,<sup>2</sup> the accounts of a deceased steward were tendered in evidence, with the view of showing that former lords of the manor had been liable to pay poor-rates on the tithes. On one side of these accounts the steward acknowledged the receipt of rent for tithes from a tenant; and on the other side was an entry in discharge of the former item, by allowing the tenant a certain sum for poor-rates on the tithes. Mr. Baron Alderson rejected the second entry, on the ground that it was not directly connected with the first item, though made about the same time; but his lordship added that, if the amount charged had been stated to be a sum less by the deduction of the opposite side of the account, it might then possibly have been admissible, on the authority of Stead v. Heaton.

§ 614.<sup>3</sup> In order that declarations against interest should be received in evidence, it is not necessary, as was formerly thought,<sup>4</sup> that the declarant should have been competent, if living, to testify to the facts contained in the declaration.<sup>5</sup> Neither is it material, so far at least as regards the admissibility of declarations, whether the matters stated therein are or are not provable by living witnesses who might have been called.<sup>6</sup> Moreover, no objection can be taken to an account, in which a deceased agent charges himself with the receipt of money, on the ground that it does not appear by the account itself for whom the sums were received; provided it can be shown aliundè that they were in fact collected for a third person.<sup>1</sup>

§ 615. To render accounts admissible as the declarations of a deceased person charging himself, it is not necessary that they should be in his handwriting, and should bear his signature; but they will be received in evidence, if they were written by him either wholly<sup>2</sup> or in part,<sup>3</sup> though they were not signed; or if they were signed by him, though they were written by a stranger.<sup>4</sup> Neither can any objection be raised to their admission, though they were neither written nor signed by the deceased, if either direct proof can be furnished that they were written by his authorised agent,<sup>5</sup> or if that fact can be indirectly established, as, for instance, by showing that the deceased subsequently adopted the accounts as his own, and delivered them in at an audit;<sup>6</sup> nor does it signify in such a case, whether the party who actually wrote the accounts be alive or dead at the time of the trial, though, in the former event, his non-production may be matter of observation to the jury.<sup>7</sup> But if no proof can be given that the account was either written, or signed, or authorised, or adopted, by the deceased person made chargeable thereby, it cannot be received; and, therefore, where a rental, in which a deceased steward was debited with the receipt of certain payments, was written by a party since dead, styling himself clerk to such steward, the court refused to receive it as a declaration against the interest of the steward, as no parol evidence had been given to show that he ever employed the writer to make the entries; and it was equally inadmissible as made against the interest of the clerk, because it did not purport to charge him.<sup>8</sup> After the lapse of thirty years, the handwriting of the account need not be proved, provided the book containing it be produced from the proper custody.<sup>1</sup>

§ 616.<sup>2</sup> Where the evidence consists of entries made by persons acting for others in the capacity of agents, stewards, or receivers, some proof of such agency is generally required, previous to their admission; but here a distinction has been taken, to the effect that, where the office is public and must exist, the law will presume that a person who acts in it has been regularly appointed; but that where it is merely private, some preliminary and independent evidence must in general be adduced of the existence of the office, and of the appointment of the particular agent or incumbent.<sup>3</sup> It seems that the mere antiquity of the book containing the entry affords no sufficient ground for dispensing with this preliminary proof, and therefore entries have been rejected for want of it, though apparently made as much as fifty, seventy, and even one hundred and sixty years before the trial.<sup>4</sup> In Davies v. Morgan, where the entry bore date 1673, Mr. Baron Bayley, in rejecting it, observed, "The character of the evidence must be established before the entry is read; you cannot read it to show the position of the party making it; that must be proved aliundè."<sup>5</sup> So, in Short v. Lee, Sir Thomas Plumer said, with reference to a book seventy years old, which purported to have been kept by a tithe-collector named Beale, "If the writings of persons not invested with the proper characters were received, nothing could be more dangerous to property. Suppose that Beale was not the person authorised to collect the tithes, but nevertheless had for some purpose made these entries; then, if after his death the book purporting to be a collector's book was to be evidence to prove that he was collector, and his being collector was to prove the entries to be correct, the consequence would be, that the rights of the rector on the one hand, or those of the parishioners on the other, would be exposed to the greatest danger, and perhaps from the writings of a person having a contrary interest."<sup>1</sup> Still, if ancient books come from the proper repository, slight proof of the official character of the writer will usually be sufficient to warrant their admission; and if they contain strong internal evidence of their actually being what they purport to be, they may, it seems, on that ground alone be submitted to the jury.<sup>2</sup>

§ 617. Under the head of declarations against proprietary interest, may be classed the statements made by persons while in possession of land, explanatory of the character of their possession; and it is now well settled that such declarations, if made in disparagement of the declarant's title, are receivable, not only as original admissions against himself and all persons who claim title through him,<sup>3</sup> but also as evidence for or against strangers.<sup>4</sup> Whether in this latter event they are admissible in the lifetime of the declarant, or only in cases where his death can be proved, is a point which does not appear to have been distinctly decided. In most of the cases where the evidence has been received, the declarant was dead;<sup>5</sup> but on two occasions, at least, the evidence was admitted, though the declarant was living.<sup>1</sup> The only ground on which it can be contended that these declarations are receivable during the declarant's lifetime appears to be that they are statements accompanying the acts of possession, and as such constituting part of the res gestæ; but this argument proves too much, as the effect of it would be to let in all declarations of the occupier, whether in disparagement or in support of his title; an extension of the rule which, however consistent it may be with principle, is certainly not warranted by judicial decisions.<sup>2</sup> The safest course therefore is to regard these declarations as merely receivable when the declarant is dead, in which case they become good primary evidence;<sup>3</sup> and further to consider that their admissibility depends on the simple ground that they are made against the interest of the declarant.<sup>4</sup>

§ 618. It should here be remembered that possession is prima facie evidence of seisin in fee simple;<sup>5</sup> and consequently any declaration by the possessor that he is tenant in tail, or for life, or for years, or by sufferance, as it makes strongly against his own interest, may safely be received in evidence, on account of its probable truth.<sup>6</sup> It matters not whether the declaration be made verbally,<sup>7</sup> or in writing,<sup>8</sup> or by deed,<sup>9</sup> or in answer to a bill in

Chancery,<sup>1</sup> for the same principle applies in all these cases ; but it must relate to matters, either within the declarant's own knowledge, or on which he has himself formed an opinion ; and therefore an answer to a bill in Chancery, narrating what the declarant has heard another person state respecting his title, is not admissible to defeat his estate, at least if he does not add that he believes such statement to be true.<sup>2</sup>

§ 619. It is difficult to fix with precision how far these declarations are admissible as evidence of the facts contained in them. They have been received to show the name of the landlord under whom the declarant held,<sup>3</sup> the amount of rent that was paid,<sup>4</sup> the fact of the payment of rent,<sup>5</sup> the extent of the tenement that was occupied,<sup>6</sup> and the fact that it was freehold and not copyhold ;<sup>7</sup> and the courts seem now inclined to admit them, not only as proof of the interest which the declarant enjoyed in the premises, but as evidence of any fact which is not foreign to the statement against interest, and which forms substantially a part of it.<sup>8</sup> It appears that, in all these cases, it must be proved that the declarant was actually in possession of the land in question ; since otherwise his declaration that he has a limited interest therein, may be regarded in the light rather of a statement in his own favour than of one against his interest.<sup>9</sup> Still, slight evidence on this head will, it seems, suffice ; and therefore where a person was seen felling timber in a wood, this was held to be a sufficient act of ownership, though probably he was in fact a mere labourer, to raise a presumption that he was possessed of the fee, and consequently to let in any statement made by him as to who was the actual proprietor.<sup>1</sup>

§ 620. In applying this rule, care must be taken to distinguish between statements made by an occupier of land in disparagement of his own title, and such declarations as merely go to abridge or encumber the estate itself; since, though the former are receivable, the latter will be rejected. For instance, if an occupier state that he is only tenant for life, this after his death will be admissible evidence against a stranger: but if he admit that the property was intersected by a public highway, or that a neighbour had an easement in the land in question, or that he himself was not entitled to common of pasture in respect of it, such admission will only bind himself and those who claim under him, and will be inadmissible to establish the highway or the easement as against his landlord or a stranger.<sup>2</sup> The grounds for this distinction are obvious; for though it is scarcely possible to imagine any inducement, which will lead a person possessed of premises in fee to admit that he is only a tenant, many causes might induce a tenant to acknowledge the existence of an easement or a highway, which might be either not inconvenient, or even absolutely beneficial, to him.<sup>3</sup> So, a tenant, who was about to remove from one farm to another, might readily feel an interest in denying the existence of rights attached to the former, with the view of increasing the value of those which belonged to the latter.<sup>4</sup>

§ 621. Entries contained in the books of deceased rectors or vicars have long been admitted as evidence in favour of their successors.<sup>5</sup> The admissibility of this class of entries is regarded by some persons as anomalous;<sup>1</sup> by some, as governed by the rule which admits old leases, rent-rolls, surveys, &c.;<sup>2</sup> and by others, as falling within the principle of the present exception.<sup>3</sup> Sir Thomas Plumer, in the case of Short v. Lee,<sup>4</sup> observed, that it was too late to argue upon the rule, or upon what gave rise to it; whether it was the cursus Scaccarii, the protection of the clergy, or the peculiar nature of property in tithes. "It is now," said he, "the settled law of the land. It is not to be presumed, that a person, having a temporary interest only, will insert a falsehood in his book, from which he can derive no advantage. Lord Kenyon has said, that the rule is an exception; and it is so; for no other proprietor can make evidence for those who claim under him, or for those who claim in the same right and stand in the same predicament. But it has been the settled law as to tithes, as far back as our research can reach. We must therefore set out from this as a datum; and we must not make comparisons between this and other corporations. No corporation sole, except a rector or vicar, can make evidence for his successor." The rule, however, extends to admit the books of ecclesiastical corporations aggregate,<sup>5</sup> and, as it would seem, those also of lay impropiators in fee; though these last would certainly be open to considerable suspicion, since a lay impropiator in fee, having a permanent interest to advance, might possibly be induced to make evidence for his heirs.<sup>6</sup>

§ 622. With respect to all these books, though the law admits them as evidence, juries will do well not to place implicit reliance on the statements they contain; for, in point of fact, the clergy, like members of all other professions, are, or at least have been, occasionally actuated by a strong esprit de corps, and the entries in their books evince not unfrequently what in some quarters would be considered as a commendable leaning in favour of the rights of the church. General observations have sometimes been made respecting these books, which may seem to authorise the admission of any kind of statement contained in them. But such books will be rejected unless the entries contain receipts of money or ecclesiastical dues, or are, in other respects, apparently prejudicial to the pecuniary or proprietary interests of the makers.<sup>1</sup> And proof will be required, as in other cases, that the writer was authorised to receive the money stated, and that he is actually dead; and further, that the document came from the proper custody.<sup>2</sup>

§ 623. It remains only to notice a class of cases, which seems to fall within the principle now under consideration more naturally than any other, though one eminent writer on the law of evidence has treated it in connexion with entries made in the course of business;<sup>3</sup> we allude to those cases, where the indorsement by the payee of the payment of interest, or of part payment of the principal, on a bond, bill of exchange, or other negotiable security, used to be tendered in evidence by his representatives after his death, in order to bar the Statute of Limitations, or to rebut the presumption of payment that would otherwise have arisen from lapse of time. Now, it is obvious, that, although such indorsements, if made before the demand became stale or was affected by the Statute of Limitations, would be against the interest of the payee, inasmuch as they would prevent him from recovering the amount of the sums so indorsed; yet, if they were made at a subsequent period, the creditor would be under the influence of a far stronger countervailing interest; because, by admitting a partial payment, he would keep alive his right to recover the remainder of the debt. Hence, it became necessary to show at what time the indorsement was really made; for if it were made before the creditor's remedy was impaired by lapse of time, it was received;<sup>4</sup> if after that period, it was rejected.<sup>5</sup> Still the question remained, how was the time to be proved? Might it be inferred from the instrument itself, or was it necessary to establish the fact by extrinsic evidence? And on this difficult point much contrariety of opinion prevailed.<sup>1</sup>

§ 624. Having thus stated briefly the old law relative to this subject, it remains to be shown how it has been affected by statutable enactments. So far as notes, bills, and other writings subject to the operation of the Statute of Limitations,<sup>2</sup> are concerned, the matter has been set at rest by Lord Tenterden's Act,<sup>3</sup> which enacts in § 3, that "no indorsement or memorandum of any payment written or made after" the 1st of January, 1829,<sup>4</sup> "upon any promissory note, bill of exchange, or other writing, by or on behalf of the party to whom such payment shall be made, shall be deemed sufficient proof of such payment, so as to take the case out of the operation of the said statute."<sup>5</sup> An attempt was made a few years back to extend this salutary provision beyond its legitimate limits. An action was brought by the executor of the payee of a note against the maker, and the plaintiff, in order to defeat the Statute of Limitations, tendered in evidence a book, in which he himself, by the direction of the testator, had entered two payments of interest, as having been made to the testator by the defendant within the last six years. These entries were objected to, on one ground, among others, that their receipt in evidence would violate the spirit, if not the words, of the enactment just cited; but Sir John Jervis overruled the objection, and the Court of Common Pleas upheld his ruling.<sup>6</sup>

§ 625. With respect to bonds and other specialties, the old doctrine of presumption of payment from lapse of time has been rendered nugatory by § 3 of 3 & 4 W. 4, c. 42, which enacts, that all actions of debt for rent upon an indenture of demise, all actions of covenant or debt upon any bond or other specialty, and all actions of debt or scire facias upon any recognisance, &c., shall be commenced and sued within twenty years after the cause of such actions or suits; while § 5<sup>1</sup> contains a proviso, that, if any acknowledgment shall have been made, either by writing signed by the party liable by virtue of such indenture, specialty, or recognisance, or his agent, or by part payment or part satisfaction on account of any principal or interest being then due thereon,<sup>2</sup> the person entitled to such action may bring it for the money remaining unpaid and so acknowledged to be due, within twenty years after such acknowledgment by writing, or part payment or part satisfaction as aforesaid; and the plaintiff may, by way of replication, state such acknowledgment, and that such action was brought within the time aforesaid in answer to a plea of the statute.<sup>3</sup> As this Act contains no clause corresponding with § 3 of Lord Tenterden's Act, it seems clear that, provided the point be properly raised by the pleading, the acknowledgment of the debt afforded by the payment of interest or part payment of principal may, in the case of bonds and other specialties, be still proved in the same manner as formerly; that is, by producing the document and showing that it bears indorsements of such payments, even though these indorsements were written or adopted by the creditor himself, through whom the plaintiff claims. The only difference between the old and new law is, that, whereas this evidence was formerly admissible in answer to a plea of payment, it is now received in support of a replication of acknowledgment by the defendant, where the original demand has been met by a plea of the statute.

<sup>2</sup> In Roddam v. Morley, 26 L. J., Ch. 438; 1 De Gex & J. 1, S. C., it was held that payment of interest on a bond by the tenant for life for certain land under the will of the obligor, prevented this statute from barring the action against the heirs and devisees in remainder, after the expiration of twenty years from the time of the bond becoming due. See Pears v. Laing, 4 L. J., Ch. 225; per Bacon, V.-C.; 12 Law Rep., Eq. 41, S. C. But see Coope v. Cresswell, 2 Law Rep., Ch. App. 112; 36 L. J., Ch. 114, S. C., overruling S. <sup>3</sup> As to the Irish Law, see 16 & 17 V., c. 113, §§ 20—24.

§ 626. It becomes then important to solve the question whether it be, or be not, necessary to prove by evidence dehors the instrument itself, that the indorsement, which is put in for the purpose of establishing payment of interest, or part payment of principal, was written at a time when it was against the interest of the creditor to make it; or, in other words, that it was written before his right of action was barred by the statute; and here, notwithstanding some apparent authorities to the contrary, it is submitted that this question must be answered in the affirmative. The principle of admitting such indorsements in favour of parties in privity with the persons making them, is an anomaly in the law, which cannot be supported by any of the reasons whereon the admissibility of rectors' books is made to rest,<sup>1</sup> and which, so far as regards parol instruments, has been expressly reprobated by the Legislature.<sup>2</sup> It is therefore not unreasonable to contend that the courts should require strict proof of the time when the indorsements were really made, before they consent to admit them in evidence. In ordinary cases, the law may safely presume that a document was written at the time it bears date; but an exception to this rule has been recognised,<sup>3</sup> where, under the old law of bankruptcy, a note signed by a bankrupt was put in by his assignees to support the petitioning creditor's debt. Now, why was this exception allowed? Clearly, because it was so much to the interest of the petitioning creditor to support the fiat, that he might collusively induce the bankrupt to ante-date the instrument, by means of which his debt was to be established. Then, does not this reasoning apply equally to the indorsements under discussion,<sup>4</sup> which, if really made within twenty years from the date of the bond, are received, because, being in such case entries against the interest of the obligee, they are presumed to be true; but, if made beyond the twenty years, are rejected, because, after the lapse of that time, it would be so obviously to the advantage of the obligee to revive, by their means, the remedy barred by the statute, that the law presumes they are false? But surely it is as easy to fabricate a date, as to fabricate an indorsement, of which the date forms part, and it seems a strange mode of checking such fraudulent practices to say to an obligee, "Your remedy on the bond is barred by the statute, and therefore if you now indorse upon it any admission that you have received some interest from the obligor, no credit, after your death, will be given to such admission; but carry on your deceit one step further, and add to your indorsement a date, which will give it the semblance of having been made while your remedy was unimpaired, and then, at your death, your representatives may recover against the obligor."

§ 627. The authorities on this subject lay down no decisive rule. In the case of Searle v. Lord Barrington, extrinsic evidence was given of the time when the indorsements were made,<sup>1</sup> though that fact is only mentioned loosely by Mr. Brown,<sup>2</sup> and is not noticed at all by the other reporters.<sup>3</sup> In Bosworth v. Cotchett<sup>4</sup> it seems, indeed, to have been unsuccessfully contended before the House of Lords, that unless evidence were given, independent of the note, to show when the indorsements were made, they could not be received;<sup>5</sup> but as that case is not reported, and is noticed so shortly by our text writers<sup>6</sup> that the grounds of the decision cannot be ascertained, it will scarcely be considered as a binding authority. In Sanders v. Meredith, in addition to an indorsement signed by the obligee, a witness was called, who proved actual payment of the interest.<sup>7</sup> The case of Gleadow v. Atkin<sup>8</sup> throws but little light upon the subject. There the payment of interest by the obligor to a stranger was proved; and in order to show that this payment had been made on account of the bond, the executors of the obligee relied on an indorsement in his handwriting, whereby he acknowledged that the principal sum due on the bond was trust-money, to which the stranger was entitled. This indorsement bore the same date as the bond itself, and was countersigned by the attesting witness of the bond. The court held that it was admissible in evidence, and rightly so; because, in the first place, many circumstances concurred to show that the indorsement was written on or about the day of the date, and next, it signified little when it was written, as it was equally against the interest of the obligee at all times.<sup>1</sup>

§ 628. The only modern case which directly supports the presumption in question is that of Smith v. Battens.<sup>2</sup> There the point was, whether an indorsement of interest on a promissory note, which bore date before the 1st of January, 1829, when Lord Tenterden's Act came into operation, could be admitted in evidence for the purpose of taking the case out of the statute, without some extrinsic proof of the time when it was actually written; and Mr. Justice Taunton, apparently on the authority of Bosworth v. Crotchett,<sup>3</sup> received it, observing, that, "in the absence of all evidence to the contrary, he should assume that it was written at the time it bore date." Now, although this case was subsequently cited with approbation by the Court of Common Pleas,<sup>4</sup> and by Lord Justice Turner, on a more recent occasion,<sup>5</sup> as supporting the general doctrine that documents are presumed to have been written at the time they bear date, it may be doubted whether, with respect to the particular question before the court, the case be law. To throw on the defendant the burthen of proving negatively that the indorsement was not written on the day of the date, was in fact to shut the door upon all inquiry into the matter; because, as the note continued in the hands of the payee or his representatives, it was scarcely possible for the maker to ascertain at what time any indorsement was written upon it.

§ 629. This view of the subject is much confirmed by the language of Lord Ellenborough in Rose v. Bryant,<sup>1</sup> where the administrator of an obligee of a bond, for the purpose of meeting certain direct evidence of payment in the year 1794, proposed to read an indorsement, which appeared to have been made on the bond in the following year, and which acknowledged the receipt of interest and of part of the principal. In refusing to admit this evidence, his lordship said, "I think you must prove that these indorsements were on the bond at or recently after the times when they bear date, before you are entitled to read them. Although it may seem at first sight against the interest of the obligee to admit part payment, he may thereby in many cases set up the bond for the residue of the sum secured. If such indorsements were receivable whensoever they may have been written, this would be allowing the obligee to manufacture evidence for himself to contradict the fact of payment. I have been at a loss to see the principle on which these receipts, in the handwriting of the creditor, have sometimes been admitted as evidence against the debtor; and I am of opinion they cannot be properly admitted, unless they are proved to have been written at a time when the effect of them was clearly in contradiction to the writer's interest." Perhaps the safest rule that can be laid down on this subject is, that if the indorsement appear by its date to have been written within the twenty years, the question may be left to the jury, under all the circumstances of the case, whether it were really so written; <sup>2</sup> the law raising no presumption either way.

CHAPTER XII.

DECLARATIONS IN THE COURSE OF OFFICE OR BUSINESS.

§ 630. IN many of the cases cited in the preceding chapter, the admissibility of the statements and entries tendered in evidence rested on the ground, not only of their being prejudicial to the pecuniary or proprietary interests of the parties making them, but of their having been made in the ordinary course of business or professional employment. The class of cases, therefore, which forms the FIFTH EXCEPTION to the rule rejecting hearsay evidence, consists of such declarations as fall within this last category. The considerations which have induced the courts to recognise this exception appear to be principally these;—that, in the absence of all suspicion of sinister motives, a fair presumption arises that entries made in the ordinary routine of business are correct, since, the process of invention implying trouble, it is easier to state what is true than what is false; that such entries usually form a link in a chain of circumstances, which mutually corroborate each other; that false entries would be likely to bring clerks into disgrace with their employers; that as most entries made in the course of business are subject to the inspection of several persons, an error would be exposed to speedy discovery; and that as the facts to which they relate are generally known but to few persons, a relaxation of the strict rules of evidence in favour of such entries may often prove convenient, if not necessary, for the due investigation of truth.<sup>1</sup>

brewer. In order to prove the delivery, it was first shown that, in the usual course of the plaintiff's business, the draymen came every night to the clerk of the brewhouse, and gave him an account of the beer delivered during the day, which he entered in a book kept for that purpose, to which the draymen set their hands. An entry in this book, which stated the delivery of the beer in question, and was signed by a drayman, whose signature and death were proved, was then put in, and Lord Holt held that it was sufficient evidence to maintain the action. So, where the question was whether a notice to quit had been served upon a tenant, the indorsement of service upon a copy of the notice, made by the attorney who served it, was held after his death to be admissible in proof of that fact; it being shown to be the ordinary course of business in his office to preserve copies of such notices, and to indorse the service thereon.<sup>1</sup> So, an entry by a deceased solicitor in his diary, noting the fact of his having attended a client on a certain day on her executing a deed of appointment, has been held sufficient evidence of the due execution of the deed.<sup>2</sup> So, an entry of the receipt of rates by a deceased clerk of a collector, who was duly appointed, has been received as evidence of the payment of the rates.<sup>3</sup> So, also, the books of the messenger of a bank, and of the clerk of a notary, have been held admissible to prove the dishonour of a bill of exchange by the acceptor, and notice to the indorser, upon proof that the entries were made in the usual routine of business;<sup>4</sup> and, upon like proof, the letter-book of the plaintiff, who was a merchant, in which a deceased clerk had inserted what purported to be the

§ 632. Though the cases cited above have established beyond dispute the existence of the exception now under discussion, several of the judges have, of late years, evinced great disinclination to extend its principle beyond the limits strictly warranted by antecedent decisions.<sup>2</sup> Thus, in an action for the price of coals, which had been sold at the pit's mouth, an entry was rejected, which appeared to have been made in the following manner. In the ordinary course of business, it was the duty of one of the workmen at the pit, named Harvey, to give notice to the foreman of the coal sold; and the foreman, who was not present when the coal was delivered, and who was unable to write, used to employ a man named Baldwin to make entries in the books from his dictation. Baldwin read over these entries every evening to the foreman. At the time of the trial, Harvey and the foreman were dead, and Baldwin was called to produce this book, with the view of proving thereby the delivery of the coal in question; but the court held that it was inadmissible.<sup>3</sup> The ground of this decision appears to have been, that, although the entries, being made under the foreman's direction, might be regarded as made by him, yet, inasmuch as he had no personal knowledge of the facts stated in them, but derived his information at second-hand from the workman, there was not the same guarantee for the truth of the entries as might be found in Price v. Torrington, Doe v. Turford, and Poole v. Dicas; in all of which cases the party making the entry had himself done the business, a memorandum of which he had inserted in his book.

§ 633. It seems more difficult to reconcile the case of Davis v. Lloyd<sup>1</sup> with sound principle, or with previous decisions. There, in order to show that a Jew was of age, it was proved that Jewish children were circumcised on the eighth day from their birth, and that it was the duty of the chief rabbi to perform this rite, and to make an entry thereof in a book kept at the synagogue. Upon proof that the rabbi was dead, this book was tendered in evidence; but Lord Denman, after consulting Mr. Justice Patteson, rejected it, though it does not appear on what grounds. In another case,<sup>2</sup> where it was necessary to show that a contract of service had been for less than a year, proof was given that the employer, who was dead, had in the course of his business been in the habit of hiring farm servants, and that his practice was to enter the time and terms of such hiring in a book kept by him for that purpose. This book, which contained entries of the service in question, and showed that the servant had been engaged for half a year only, was tendered in evidence; but the court held that it was inadmissible, on the ground that, although it might be the practice, it was not the duty, of the master to make such entries.

§ 634. The Legislature has in one instance recognised and acted upon the exception under discussion; for the statute, which now regulates the Civil Bill Courts in Ireland,<sup>3</sup> enacts in § 19, that "a book or books shall be kept by every officer appointed for the service of process, in such form as shall be directed or approved by the chairman or assistant barrister; in which shall be entered the names of the plaintiff and defendant by or against whom any process shall be issued, the cause of action, the day on which such process shall be received to be served, the day on which such process shall be served or executed, the place where, and the name or description of the person on or with whom such process shall be served or left, and in case any such process shall not have been duly served or left, then the cause of such service not having been effected shall be stated; and each and every process-officer shall attend, and produce such book or books to the chairman or assistant barrister, at each and every sessions of the peace, or shall cause such book or books to be produced to such chairman or barrister in case of the unavoidable absence of such process-officer; and in case of the death, illness, or such absence as aforesaid of any such process-officer, the book or books of such process-officer, kept by him as aforesaid, verified on oath as to his handwriting by some credible person, shall be produced at the sessions, and shall there be prima facie evidence of the truth of the several matters entered therein as aforesaid."

§ 635. In many respects the rules which regulate the reception of this species of evidence, are the same as those which prevail with respect to declarations against interest. For instance, the death,<sup>1</sup> the handwriting, and the official character,<sup>2</sup> of the person who made the entry must be proved; and it should further appear that he had no motive to misstate. In some particulars, however, a marked distinction exists between the two classes of cases.

§ 636. First, in order to render admissible entries made in the course of office or business, they must—unlike declarations against interest—be proved to have been made contemporaneously with the acts which they relate.<sup>3</sup> This distinction was expressly pointed out by Mr. Baron Parke in Doe v. Turford. "It is to be observed," said the learned judge, "that in the case of an entry against interest, proof of the handwriting of the party, and of his death, is enough to authorise its reception; at whatever time it was made it is admissible: but in the other case [of an entry made in the course of business], it is essential to prove that it was made at the time it purports to bear date; it must be a contemporaneous entry."<sup>4</sup> In using the word "contemporaneous," it is not meant that the entry must have been made at the immediate time of the occurrence; but it will be sufficient if made within so short a time after, as reasonably to be considered part of the transaction. Thus, if the business be done in the morning, and the entry be made in the evening of the same day,<sup>1</sup> or perhaps even on the following morning,<sup>2</sup> it will be sufficient; though, where several intermediate days had elapsed between the date of the transaction and the time of inserting an entry of it in the book, the evidence has been rejected;<sup>3</sup> and in one American case, the interval of a single day was held to constitute a valid objection.<sup>4</sup> The fact that the entry was made contemporaneously may, like any other fact, be established either by direct testimony, or by proof of any circumstances sufficient to raise a reasonable inference that such was the case.<sup>5</sup>

§ 637. Secondly, it has been shown in the last chapter, that declarations against interest are often admissible to prove independent matters, which, though forming part of the entry, are not in themselves against the interest of the declarant.<sup>6</sup> A stricter rule, however, prevails with respect to official or business entries, and it has been held that, "whatever effect may be due to an entry made in the course of office, reporting facts necessary to the performance of a duty, the statement of other circumstances, however naturally they may be thought to find a place in the narrative, is no proof of those circumstances."<sup>7</sup> In the case which called forth these observations, it became necessary to show in what place the plaintiff had been arrested; and in order to do this, a certificate of a deceased sheriff's officer, which had been returned by him to the office in the ordinary routine of his duty, and which specified, among other circumstances connected with the arrest, the spot where it took place, was tendered in evidence; but the judges of the Exchequer

Chamber, before whom the question was argued on a bill of exceptions,—while they admitted, for the sake of argument, that the certificate was evidence of the arrest itself, as also of the day when it was made, since it might be necessary for the officer to make known these facts to his principal,—were all clearly of opinion that it could not be received to show the particular spot where the caption took place, that circumstance being merely collateral to the duty done.<sup>1</sup> “This decision,” as was afterwards observed by Mr. Justice Park, “turned on the circumstance that the sheriff’s officer was going beyond the sphere of his duty when he made an entry of the place of arrest, and that such an entry therefore had no claim to be received as evidence of that fact.”<sup>2</sup>

§ 638. Some persons contend that the rule under discussion is subject to a third qualification, which certainly does not apply to declarations against interest, and which is to this effect;—namely, that entries made in the course of office or business cannot be admitted, unless corroborated by other circumstances which render it probable that the facts therein recorded really occurred. This opinion seems to rest, partly, on a supposed dictum of Mr. Justice Taunton;<sup>3</sup> partly, on a misapprehension of the rule adopted by Lord Wensleydale, that an entry made in the course of business is admissible “where it is one of a chain or combination of facts, and the proof of one raises a presumption that another has taken place;”<sup>4</sup> and partly, on the circumstance, that, in one or two of the later cases on the subject, confirmatory evidence has in fact been adduced, and its existence has been noticed by the court as tending to establish the correctness of the entry.<sup>1</sup> Still, Mr. Phillipps is probably right in rejecting this qualification, and in contending that, though corroborative evidence must naturally add to the value of entries, it cannot be deemed essential to their admissibility.<sup>2</sup>

Those corroborating circumstances must be proved; and here many such circumstances did appear.” Mr. Phillpotts suggest that the words, “the entry was made when,” have probably been omitted by accident at the place marked with the star. 1 Ph. Ev. 324.

§ 639. It has further been urged that entries in the course of business will only be received, when the nature of the case is such as to render better evidence unattainable; but this limitation of the rule has been expressly rejected in Poole v. Dicas, where Chief Justice Tindal, after observing that Doe v. Turford was no authority for the proposition, since in that case persons might have been present when the notice was served, continued thus:—"In the present case, it would operate as a great hardship to require the testimony of the persons who might have been present. The clerk who presented the bill could scarcely, at the distance of two years, point out who it was that answered his application; and if it were necessary to call all the persons who resided at the place of presentment, the expense and inconvenience would be enormous. The rejection of the evidence which has been received would be a great injury to the commercial classes, by casting an unnecessary difficulty on the holders of bills of exchange."<sup>3</sup>

§ 640. From the cases cited above it may be collected, that, in order to bring a declaration within the present exception, proof must be given that it was made contemporaneously with the fact which it narrates, and in the usual routine of business, by a person whose duty it was to make the whole of it,<sup>4</sup> who was himself personally acquainted with the fact, who had no interest in stating an untruth, and who is since dead;<sup>5</sup> and, provided all the terms of this proposition be satisfied, it seems to be immaterial, excepting so far as regards the weight of the evidence, that more satisfactory evidence might have been produced, that the declaration is uncorroborated by other circumstances, or that it consists of a mere oral statement, which has never been reduced to writing.<sup>1</sup>

§ 641.<sup>2</sup> In the United States this principle has been extended to entries made by the party himself in his own shop-books;<sup>3</sup> at least, where they were evidently contemporaneous with the facts to which they refer, and formed part of the res gestæ. Being the acts of the party himself, they are received with the greater caution; but still they may be seen and weighed by the jury. Though this doctrine is not in accordance with the principles of the common law, at least as now understood,<sup>4</sup> it seems to have been regarded as sound law by the Legislature, if not by the judges, in the time of James the First. In 1609 an Act was passed<sup>5</sup> “to avoid the double payment of debts,” which clearly recognised a tradesman’s shop-books as instruments of evidence on his behalf. No doubt this statute, in modern times, has been treated in courts of justice as a dead letter; but, strangely enough, after lying dormant for upwards of two centuries, it was in the year 1863 revived and rendered perpetual by the Act of 26 & 27 V., c. 125. What will be the practical result when this Parliamentary freak is brought under the notice of the judges is a question that cannot readily be answered; but thus much seems clear, that the Act itself ought to be inserted in this place. It is a curious specimen of quaint legislation, and it will at least furnish useful hints when stale demands are sought to be enforced in the county courts.

§ 641 A. The Act is as follows:—“Whereas divers men of trades, and handicraftsmen, keeping shop-books, do demand debts of their customers upon their shop-books long time after the same hath been due, and when, as they have supposed, the particulars and certainty of the wares delivered to be forgotten, then either they themselves, or their servants, have inserted into their said shop-books divers other wares supposed to be delivered to the same parties, or to their use, which in truth never were delivered, and this of purpose to increase by such undue means the said debt: (2.) And whereas divers of the said tradesmen and handicraftsmen, having received all the just debts due upon their said shop-books, do oftentimes leave the same books uncrossed, or any way discharged, so as the debtors, their executors or administrators, are often by suits of law enforced to pay the same debts again to the party that trusted the said wares, or to his executors or administrators, unless he or they can produce sufficient proof, by writing or witnesses, of the said payments, that may countervail the credit of the said shop-books, which few or none can do in any long time after the said payments: (3.) Be it therefore enacted by the authority of this present Parliament, that no tradesman or handicraftsman keeping a shop-book as is aforesaid, his or their executors or administrators, shall be allowed, admitted, or received, to give his shop-book in evidence in any action for any money due for wares hereafter to be delivered, or for work hereafter to be done, above one year before the same action brought, except he or they, their executors or administrators, shall have obtained or gotten a bill of debt or obligation of the debtor for the said debt, or shall have brought or pursued against the said debtor, his executors or administrators, some action for the said debt, wares, or work done, within one year next after the same wares delivered, money due for wares delivered, or work done. II. Provided always, that this Act, or anything herein contained, shall not extend to any intercourse of traffick, merchandizing, buying, selling, or other trading or dealing for wares delivered or to be delivered, money due, or work done or to be done, between merchants and merchants, merchant and tradesman, or between tradesman and tradesman, for anything directly falling within the circuit or compass of their mutual trades and merchandize, but that for such things only they and every of them shall be in case as if this Act had never been made; anything herein contained to the contrary thereof notwithstanding."

641 B. Independent of all statutable sanction our courts of equity have for years past, to a certain extent, acted upon the principle of admitting shop-books in evidence, where accounts have been required to be taken, and vouchers have been lost;<sup>1</sup> and now, by virtue of the Chancery Practice Amendment Acts, whether for England or Ireland, they are expressly empowered, "in cases where they shall think fit so to do, to direct that in taking accounts, the books of account in which the accounts required to be taken have been kept, or any of them, shall be taken as primâ facie evidence of the truth of the matters therein contained, with liberty to the parties interested to take such objections thereto as they may be advised."<sup>2</sup>

§ 642.<sup>3</sup> In the administration of the Roman law, the production of a merchant's or tradesman's book of accounts, regularly and fairly kept in the usual manner, was deemed presumptive evidence (semi-plena probatio)<sup>4</sup> of the justice of his claim; and in such cases, the suppletory oath of the party (juramentum suppletivum) was admitted to make up the plena probatio necessary to a decree in his favour.<sup>5</sup> By the law of France, too, the books of merchants and tradesmen, regularly kept, and written

The civilians, however they may differ as to the degree of credit to be given to books of account, concur in opinion, that they are entitled to consideration, at the

from day to day without any blank, when the tradesman has the reputation of probity, constitute a semi-proof, and, with his suppletory oath, are received as full proof to establish his demand.<sup>1</sup> The same doctrine is familiar in the law of Scotland, by which the books of merchants and others, if kept with such a reasonable degree of regularity as to be satisfactory to the court, may be received in evidence, the party being allowed to give his own "oath in supplement" of such imperfect proof. It seems, however, that a course of dealing, or other "pregnant circumstances," must in general be first shown by evidence aliundè, before the proof can be regarded as amounting to that degree of semi-plena probatio, which may be rendered complete by the oath of the party.<sup>2</sup> discretion of the judge. They furnish at least the conjecture mentioned by Mascardus; and their admission in evidence, with the suppletory oath of the party, is thus defended by Paul Voet, De Statutis, § 5, cap. 2, n. 9:—"An ut credatur libris rationem, seu registris uti loquuntur, mercatorum et artificum, licet probationibus testium non juventur? ## DYING DECLARATIONS.

§ 644.<sup>1</sup> A SIXTH EXCEPTION to the rule rejecting hearsay evidence is allowed in the case of dying declarations. The general principle on which this species of evidence is admitted, was stated by Lord Chief Baron Eyre to be this—"that they are declarations made in extremity when the party is at the point of death, and when every hope of this world is gone; when every motive to falsehood is silenced, and the mind is induced by the most powerful considerations to speak the truth; a situation so solemn and so awful is considered by the law as creating an obligation equal to that which is imposed by a positive oath in a court of justice."<sup>2</sup> At one time an opinion prevailed that this general principle warranted the admission of dying declarations in all cases, civil and criminal;<sup>3</sup> and it was expressly held, by respectable authorities, that the dying declarations of a subscribing witness to a forged instrument were admissible to impeach it.<sup>4</sup>

<sup>2</sup> R. v. Woodcock, 1 Lea. 502; R. v. Drummond, id. 338. Our great poet, in King John, has put the same sentiment into the mouth of the wounded Melun, who, finding himself disbelieved while announcing the intended treachery of the Dauphin Lewis, exclaims:—

“Have I not hideous death within my view, Retaining but a quantity of life
Which bleeds away, even as a form of wax Resolveth from his figure ’gainst the fire?
What in the world should make me now deceive,
Since I must lose the use of all deceit?

Why should I then be false; since it is true

That I must die here, and live hence by truth?”—Act 5, sc. 4.

<sup>3</sup> It was even held that the dying declarations of a pauper respecting his settlement were admissible, though that question involved both law and fact, R. v. Bury St. Edmunds, Cald. 486; Abbotun v. Dunswell, 2 Bott, 80. This doctrine is now properly exploded. See R. v. Abergwilly, 2 East, 63; Stobart v. Dryden, 1 M. & W. 626.

<sup>4</sup> Wright v. Littler, 3 Burr. 1255; 1 W. Bl. 349, S. C., per Ld. Mansfield; stating, however, as reported in Blackstone, that no general rule could be

A contrary doctrine, however, has since prevailed;<sup>1</sup> and it is now settled law, both in England and America, that evidence of this description is admissible in no civil case—and, in criminal cases, only in the single instance of homicide, “where the death of the deceased is the subject of the charge, and the circumstances of the death are the subject of the dying declaration.”<sup>3</sup>

§ 645. Thus, on a trial for robbery, the dying declaration of the party robbed has been rejected;<sup>3</sup> and where a prisoner was indicted for administering drugs to a woman, with intent to procure abortion, her statements in extremis were held to be inadmissible.<sup>4</sup> So, where a party, convicted of perjury, had obtained a rule nisi for a new trial, and, pending the proceedings, had shot the prosecutor, the Court of King’s Bench, on cause being shown against the rule, rejected the affidavit of the dying declarations of the latter, as to the transaction out of which the prosecution for perjury arose.<sup>5</sup> After stating these strong cases, it seems scarcely necessary to add, that, in an action of ejectment, the court refused to receive the dying declarations of a servant of the party last seised, as to the relationship of such party with the lessor of the plaintiff;<sup>6</sup> and that in Ireland, on an indictment for murder, the prisoner was not allowed to avail himself of the statement of a stranger, who on his death-bed confessed that he had committed the crime.<sup>1</sup> Upon one occasion the judges appear to have intrenched somewhat upon this rule; for a prisoner being indicted for poisoning his master, and it appearing that a maid-servant had taken some of the same poison, and died in consequence, her dying declarations were admitted on the part of the prosecution, apparently on the ground that it was all one transaction.<sup>2</sup>

§ 646.<sup>3</sup> The reasons for thus restricting the admission of this species of evidence may be,—first, the danger of perjury in fabricating declarations, the truth or falsehood of which it is impossible to ascertain,—secondly, the danger of letting in incomplete statements, which, though true as far as they go, do not constitute “the whole truth,”—and thirdly, the experienced fact, that implicit reliance cannot in all cases be placed on the declarations of a dying person; for his body may have survived the powers of his mind;<sup>4</sup> or his recollection, if his senses are not impaired, may not be perfect; or, for the sake of ease, and to be rid of the importunity of those around him, he may say, or seem to say, whatever they choose to suggest.<sup>5</sup> As these, or the like considerations, are thought in ordinary cases to counterbalance the force of the general principle above stated, the exception under review is restricted to cases of homicide, and is there recognised on the sole ground of public necessity. For as it often happens that no third person was present as an eye-witness to a murder, and as the party injured, who is the usual witness in other cases of felony, cannot himself be called, it follows that if his dying declarations could not be received, the murderer might often

“Death’s siege is now

Against the mind, the which he pricks and wounds

With many legions of strange fantasies;

escape justice.<sup>1</sup> Still, this restriction applies only to such declarations as are tendered in evidence merely because they were made in extremis; for where they constitute part of the res gestæ, or come within the exception of declarations against interest, or the like, they are admissible as in other cases; irrespective of the fact, that the declarant was under apprehension of death.

§ 647.<sup>2</sup> The persons whose declarations are thus admitted, are considered as standing in the same situation as if they were sworn, the danger of impending death being equivalent to the sanction of an oath. It follows, therefore, that when the declarant, if living, would have been incompetent to testify by reason of imbecility of mind, or tender age, his dying declarations are inadmissible.<sup>3</sup> On the other hand, as the testimony of an accomplice is admissible against his fellows, the dying declarations of a felo de se are admissible against one indicted for assisting the deceased in his self-murder.<sup>4</sup> And on the same ground, when a husband is charged with the murder of his wife, or a wife with the murder of her husband, the dying declaration of the deceased will be received.<sup>5</sup>

§ 648. It is essential to the admissibility of these declarations, first, that at the time when they were made the declarant should have been in actual danger of death; secondly, that he should then have had a full apprehension of his danger; <sup>6</sup> and lastly, that death should have ensued.<sup>7</sup> All these facts, therefore, must be

Denman, who laid down the law as follows:—"With regard to declarations made by persons in extremis, supposing all necessary matters concurred, such as actual danger, death following it, and a full apprehension, at the time, of the danger, and of death, such declarations can be received in evidence; but all these things must concur to render such declarations admissible. Such evidence, however, proved to the satisfaction of the judge before the evidence will be received.<sup>1</sup> It<sup>2</sup> is not, however, necessary that the declarant should have stated that he was speaking under a sense of impending death, provided it satisfactorily appears, in any mode, that the declarations were really made under that sanction; as for instance, if the fact can be reasonably inferred from the evident danger of the declarant, or from the opinions of the medical or other attendants stated to him, or from his conduct, such as settling his affairs, taking leave of his relations and friends, giving directions respecting his funeral, receiving extreme unction, or the like. In short, all the circumstances of the case may be resorted to, in order to ascertain the state of the declarant's mind.<sup>3</sup> The length of time which elapsed between the declaration and the death of the declarant, furnishes no rule for the admission or rejection of the testimony; though in the absence of better evidence, it may serve as one of the exponents of the deceased's belief, that his recovery was or was not impossible. It is the impression of impending death,<sup>4</sup> and not the rapid succession of death in point of fact, which renders the testimony admissible. If, therefore, it appear that the deceased, at the time of the declaration, had any expectation or hope of recovery, however slight it may have been, and though death actually ensued within an hour afterwards, the declaration will be inadmissible.<sup>5</sup> On the other hand, a firm belief that death is impending,—by which is meant, not as was once thought,<sup>1</sup> that it will almost immediately follow, but that it will happen shortly in consequence of the injury sustained,<sup>2</sup>—will suffice to render the statement evidence, though the sufferer may chance to linger on for some days, or even for two or three weeks.<sup>3</sup>

§ 649. It is worthy of remark that in Scotland it is immaterial, except as regards the weight of the evidence, whether or not the declaration be made under the impression of impending death; but where a party has received a mortal wound, an account of the matter given by him at any time subsequent to the injury will be admissible in the event of his death, provided it were made seriously and deliberately, and whilst the deceased appeared to be aware of what he was doing, and in the possession of his faculties.<sup>4</sup> departure from this mode may affect the credibility of the declarations. Therefore, in general, it is no objection to their admissibility, that they were made in answer to leading questions,<sup>1</sup> or obtained by earnest solicitation.<sup>2</sup> But where a statement, ready written, was brought by the father of the deceased to a magistrate, who accordingly went to the deceased and interrogated her as to its accuracy, paragraph by paragraph, it was rejected in Ireland by Mr. Justice Crampton, who observed that, “in the state of languor in which dying persons generally are, their assent could be easily got to statements which they never intended to make, if they were but ingeniously interwoven by an artful person with statements which were actually true;” and his lordship added, “the magistrate should not have trusted to the relation of a third person, but should have taken down the deceased’s declaration from her own lips, or at least have had it taken down in his presence.”<sup>3</sup> When the declarations have been properly made, the right to offer them in evidence is not restricted to the prosecutor, but they are equally admissible in favour of the accused.<sup>4</sup>

651.<sup>5</sup> Whatever the declaration may be, it must be complete in itself; for, if the dying man appears to have intended to qualify it by other statements, which he is prevented by any cause from making, it will not be received.<sup>6</sup> Again, it has been held in one case,—though with very questionable propriety so far as relates to the rejection of parol evidence,—that if the statement were committed to writing at the time it was made, this writing must be produced, or its non-production accounted for; and that neither a copy, nor parol evidence of the declaration, can be admitted in the first instance to supply the omission.<sup>7</sup> But where three declarations had been made at different times on the same day, one of which was made under oath to a magistrate, and reduced to writing, but the other two were not, it was held that these last might be proved by parol, though the written statement was not produced.<sup>1</sup> If the deposition of the deceased has been taken under any of the statutes on that subject, and is inadmissible as such, for want of compliance with some of the legal formalities, it seems that it may still be treated as a dying declaration, if made in extremis.<sup>2</sup>

§ 652.<sup>3</sup> Though these declarations, when deliberately made under a solemn sense of impending death, and concerning circumstances wherein the deceased is not likely to be mistaken, are entitled to great weight, if precisely identified; it should always be recollected that the accused has not the power of cross-examination,—a power quite as essential to the eliciting of the truth as the obligation of an oath can be;—and that where a witness has not a deep sense of accountability to his Maker, feelings of anger or revenge, or, in the case of mutual conflict, the natural desire of screening his own misconduct, may affect the accuracy of his statements, and give a false colouring to the whole transaction. Moreover, the particulars of the violence to which the deceased has spoken are likely to have occurred under circumstances of confusion and surprise, calculated to prevent their being accurately observed, and leading both to mistakes as to the identity of persons, and to the omission of facts essentially important to the completeness and truth of the narrative.<sup>4</sup>

CHAPTER XIV.

ADMISSIONS.

§ 653.<sup>1</sup> UNDER the head of exceptions to the rule rejecting hearsay evidence, it has been usual to treat of admissions and confessions; considering them as declarations against interest, and, therefore, as probably true. But in regard to many admissions, and especially those implied from conduct and assumed character, it cannot be supposed that the party, at the time of the principal declaration or act, believed himself to be speaking or acting against his own interest; but often the contrary. Such evidence seems, therefore, more properly admissible as a substitute for the ordinary and legal proof;<sup>2</sup> either in virtue of the direct consent and waiver of the party, as in the case of explicit and solemn admissions, or on grounds of public policy and convenience, as in the case of those implied from assumed character, acquiescence, or conduct. In this light confessions and admissions are regarded by the Roman law, as stated by Mascardus. Illud igitur in primis, ut hinc potissimum exordiar, non est ignorandum, quod etsi confessioni inter probationum species locum in præsentia tribuerimus; cuncti tamen fere Dd. unanimes sunt arbitrati, ipsam potius esse ab onere probandi relevationem, quam proprie probationem.<sup>3</sup> Many admissions, however, being made by third persons, are receivable on mixed grounds; partly, as belonging to the res

<sup>3</sup> 1 Masc. de Prob., quæst. 7. n. 1, 10, 11; Menoch. de Præs., lib. 1, quæst. 61, n. 6; Alciat. de Præs., pars 2, n. 4. The Roman law distinguishes with great clearness and precision, between confessions extra judicium, and confessions in judicio; treating the former as of very little and often of no weight, unless corroborated, and the latter as generally, if not always, conclusive, even to the overthrow of the præsumptio juris et de jure; thus constituting an exception to the conclusiveness of this class of pregestæ, partly, as made against the interest of the person making them, and partly, because of some privity with him against whom they are offered in evidence.

§ 654.<sup>1</sup> In our law, the term admission is usually applied to civil transactions, and to those matters of fact, in criminal cases, which do not involve criminal intent; <sup>2</sup> the term confession being generally restricted to acknowledgments of guilt. This distinction will be better understood by an example. Thus, on the trial of Lord Melville, who was charged, amongst other things, with criminal misapplication of moneys received from the Exchequer, the admission of his agent and authorised receiver was held sufficient proof of the fact of such agent having received the public money; though had such admission been tendered in evidence to establish the charge of any misapplication of the money by the noble defendant, it would clearly have been rejected. The law was thus stated by Lord Chancellor Erskine: "This first step in the proof" (namely, the receipt of the money by the agent,) "must advance by evidence applicable alike to civil, as to criminal cases; for a fact must be established by the same evidence, whether it is to be followed by a criminal or civil consequence; but it is a totally different question, in the consideration of criminal as distinguished from civil justice, how the noble person now on trial may be affected by the fact when so established. The receipt by the paymaster would in itself involve him civilly, but could by no possibility convict him of a crime."<sup>3</sup>

§ 655.<sup>4</sup> As the rules of evidence, respectively applicable to admissions and confessions, differ in some respects, the two subjects will be discussed in separate chapters. And with regard to ADMISSIONS, the first rule, which is important to be borne in mind, is, that the whole statement containing the admission must be taken together; for though some part of it may be favourable to the party, and the object is only to ascertain what he has conceded against himself, and what may therefore be presumed to be true; yet, unless the whole is received, the true meaning of the part, which is evidence against him, cannot be ascertained.<sup>1</sup> But though the whole of what he said at the same time, and relating to the same subject, must be given in evidence, it does not follow that all the parts of the statement should be regarded as equally deserving of credit; but the jury must consider, under the circumstances, how much of the entire statement they deem worthy of belief, including as well the facts asserted by the party in his own favour, as those making against him.<sup>2</sup>

§ 656. This rule, simple as it appears, is not without difficulty in its practical application; and it will therefore be convenient briefly to refer to a few of the leading decisions on the subject. And, first, the rule applies equally to written, as to verbal, admissions; and, consequently, where a defendant has rendered a debtor and creditor account to the plaintiff, which the latter produces in proof of his demand, it will be equally admissible in evidence of the defendant's set-off;<sup>3</sup> though the plaintiff will be at liberty, while relying on the creditor side of the account, to impeach items which appear on the debtor side.<sup>4</sup> Where, however, to an action on an attorney's bill of costs, the defendant pleaded a set-off, and put in an account furnished to him by the plaintiff, in which the plaintiff credited himself for the amount of his bill, and debited himself for the amount of goods sold, the court held that the defendant could not exclude from the consideration of the jury

so much of the account as related to the bill of costs, on the ground that no signed bill had been delivered; because the non-delivery of a signed bill does not bar the debt, but merely, if insisted on, prevents its recovery by action.<sup>1</sup>

into a bill, for the sole purpose of eliciting truth from the opposite party.<sup>1</sup>

§ 658. In Goss v. Quinton,<sup>2</sup> where the plaintiffs, who were assignees of a bankrupt, gave in evidence an examination of the defendant before the commissioners, as proof that he had taken certain property, the court held that they thereby made his cross-examination evidence in the cause; and as, in this cross-examination, the defendant had stated that he had purchased the property under a written agreement, a copy of which was entered as part of his answer, this statement was considered as some evidence on his behalf of the agreement and its contents; and that, too, though the absence of the document was not accounted for, nor had notice been given to the plaintiffs to produce it. So, where a magistrate was sued in trespass for assault and false imprisonment, the warrant of commitment put in evidence by the plaintiff was held to be admissible on behalf of the defendant, as proof of the information recited in it;<sup>3</sup> and in an action against a sheriff, where an undersheriff's letter was produced by the plaintiff to affect the defendant, it was held to be some evidence also of certain facts stated therein, which tended to excuse the sheriff.<sup>4</sup>

§ 659. The case of Bessey v. Windham<sup>5</sup> purports to have been decided on the same principle. There, in order to fix a sheriff in an action of trespass, the plaintiff put in the warrant under which the seizure was made; and as this recited the writ of fi. fa., the Court of Queen's Bench held that it was some evidence of the writ, and, consequently, that it tended to protect the sheriff, as showing that the seizure was made by the authority of the law. The Court of Common Pleas, however, on a more recent occasion,<sup>6</sup>

has questioned this decision, on the ground that the warrant was offered in evidence, not as proof of the facts recited in it, but merely to show that the sheriff had ordered the goods in question to be seized. And it seems to be now tolerably clear from several authorities, that where a sheriff or bailiff seeks to justify a seizure as against any party but the execution-debtor, he must produce both the writ of execution and the judgment, and he cannot be relieved from offering such proof, by any recital in the warrant which his opponent may put in evidence.<sup>1</sup>

§ 660. The rule requiring the whole statement containing the admission to be taken together, prevails to a considerable extent in equity; and therefore, where a defendant had been examined on two days before commissioners of the Court of Bankruptcy, and the plaintiff read the examination taken on the first day, he was compelled to read that also which was taken on the second day;<sup>2</sup> and where a plaintiff in equity read that part of the defendant's account-book, which charged the latter, the defendant was allowed to read the discharging part as evidence for himself.<sup>3</sup> With respect, however, to answers and examinations in Chancery, the equity rule is far less comprehensive than that which is recognised at common law; and although, if a party in equity admits in his examination or answer, that he received a sum, and then adds in the same sentence that he immediately paid it away,—or if he states in a still more general form, that a person gave him 100*l.* as a present,—the charge and the discharge will be so blended together, that the one will not be admissible without the other;<sup>4</sup> still, if he once admits the receipt of money as an independent fact, he cannot refer to other parts of his examination or answer, much less to affidavits sworn by him, or to schedules attached to his answer, for the purpose of showing that he has liquidated the amount so admitted to have been received, by separate and independent payments.<sup>1</sup> So, if a plaintiff reads a passage in the answer as evidence of a particular fact, the defendant cannot read other parts, even though grammatically connected with such passage by conjunctive particles, unless they be really explanatory of its meaning;<sup>2</sup> and if, in order to understand the sense of the passage on which the plaintiff relies, it is necessary to read on the part of the defendant other portions of the answer, still these portions will be evidence only so far as they are explanatory; and any new facts introduced therein, though so immediately connected with the parts admitted as to be incapable of subtraction, will be considered as not read.<sup>3</sup> This rule, which is not recognised upon a motion for a decree,<sup>4</sup> seems to have been adopted in consequence of the subtle contrivances of equity draftsmen, whose skill formerly consisted in so grammatically blending important points of the defendant's case with admissions that could not be withheld, as to render it necessary that both should be read in conjunction, and thus to prove their client's case by means of his own unsupported statements.<sup>5</sup> The oats and tares were reaped together.

§ 661. Though the whole of a document may, at common law, be read by the one party, when the other has already put in evidence a partial extract, this rule will not warrant the reading of distinct entries in an account-book,<sup>6</sup> or distinct paragraphs in a newspaper,<sup>7</sup> unconnected with the particular entry or paragraph relied on by the opponent; nor will it render admissible bundles of proceedings in bankruptcy, entries in corporation-books, or a series of copies of letters inserted in a letter-book, merely because the adversary has read therefrom one or more papers, or entries, or letters.<sup>1</sup> If, indeed, the extracts put in expressly refer to other documents, these may be read also ; but the mere fact, that the remaining portions of the papers or books may throw light on the parts selected by the opposite party, will not be sufficient to warrant their admission ; for such party is not bound to know whether they will or not ; and, moreover, the light may be a false one.<sup>2</sup>

§ 662. The same rule prevails in the case of a conversation, in which several distinct matters have been discussed ; and although it was at one time held, on high authority, that if a witness were questioned as to a statement made by an adverse party, such party might lay before the court the whole that was said by him in the same conversation, even, matter not properly connected with the statement deposed to, provided only that it related to the subject-matter of the suit :<sup>3</sup> yet a sense of the extreme injustice that might result from allowing such a course of proceeding, has induced the courts, in later times, to adopt a stricter rule ; and if a part of a conversation is now relied on as an admission, the adverse party can give in evidence only so much of the same conversation as may explain or qualify the matter already before the court.<sup>4</sup> The case in which the Court of Queen's Bench came to this decision admirably illustrates its propriety and justice. It was an action against the defendant for having maliciously arrested the plaintiff for debt, the plaintiff contending that the advance had been a gift and not a loan. A witness for the plaintiff acknowledged on cross-examination, that he had heard the plaintiff admit on oath, that he had repeatedly been insolvent, and had been remanded by the court ; whereupon he was asked in re-examination whether the plaintiff had not, on the same occasion, expressly stated that the money was given, and not lent. The court, in holding that the answer to this question was not evidence, observed, that if it were, "the jury would be bound to consider it, and might give full effect to it, and thus award large damages for an injury, of which no particle of proof could be found but the plaintiff's own assertion;" and they added, that "the reason of the thing would rather go to exclude the statements of a party making declarations which cannot be disinterested."<sup>1</sup>

§ 663. With regard to letters, it has been held that a party may put in such as were written by his opponent, without producing those to which they were answers, or calling for their production; because, in such case, the letters to which those put in were answers are in the adversary's hands, and he may produce them, if he thinks them necessary to explain the transaction.<sup>2</sup> But if a plaintiff puts in a letter by the defendant, on the back of which is something written by himself, the defendant is entitled to have the whole read;<sup>3</sup> and where a defendant laid before the court several letters between himself and the plaintiff, he was allowed to read a reply of his own to the last letter of the plaintiff, it being considered as a part of an entire correspondence.<sup>4</sup>

§ 664. Questions not unfrequently arise as to the admissibility of letters, account-books, &c., which are tendered as admissions, in cases where their existence or contents have been discovered by means of a compulsory examination or answer of the party either in previous bankruptcy proceedings, or in a Chancery suit; and it is often contended in such cases that the documents cannot be read, without first producing the examination or answer. On one or two occasions at Nisi Prius, this objection has prevailed;<sup>5</sup> but the judges in Banc have since decided that, whatever the correct doctrine may be with respect to documents referred to in an examination or answer, and actually annexed thereto, no rule of law will, in other cases, compel a party to treat the document on which he relies as part of a previous examination or answer.<sup>1</sup> "It was surmised," said Lord Denman, while pronouncing the judgment of the court in Sturge v. Buchanan, "that an unfair advantage had been taken of the defendant in obtaining a knowledge of these letters through a suit in Chancery, and then producing them without the answers, which may have greatly qualified and altered their effect. But I cannot think that a judge at Nisi Prius has anything to do with these considerations: he is to inquire only whether due notice has been given: whether the documents have been proved to exist; whether copies are well proved."<sup>2</sup>

§ 665. Lord Tenterden has even expressed a doubt whether, in the event of a document being annexed to an answer in Chancery, the answer need be read, if it have no connection with the cause in which the document is produced.<sup>3</sup> If, however, the letter in question be not written by the party against whom it is offered, though contained in the schedule of his answer in Chancery, and if it be merely used against him, as raising an inference from possession that he knew of its contents, and had acted upon it, common fairness seems to dictate, in conformity with a decision of Chief Justice Tindal,<sup>4</sup> that the letter should not be read without the answer; for the answer of the party might contain such an explanation of the circumstances under which the letter came into his possession, as also such a contradiction of any passages in it which seemed to bear against his rights, as utterly to neutralise its effect. If a party, while making a verbal admission, refers to a written paper, without which the admission is incomplete, the paper should be produced, before the statement can be used as evidence against him.<sup>5</sup>

§ 666.<sup>1</sup> Where the admission, whether oral or in writing, contains matters stated as mere hearsay, it may be questionable whether such matters can be received in evidence. If tendered against the party making the statement, they are clearly entitled to very little weight, and unless coupled with a further admission, that he believes them to be true, they would seem, like hearsay declarations against interest,<sup>2</sup> to be inadmissible. But does the same rule hold, when they are offered in favour of the party making the admission, as tending to explain the statement which tells against him? Mr. Justice Chambre thinks that it does, and contends that where one party reads a part of the answer which his opponent has put in to a bill filed for discovery, “he does not thereby admit as evidence all the facts, which may happen to have been stated by way of hearsay only.”<sup>3</sup> Notwithstanding this authority, it may perhaps be urged with success, that, since the answer is offered as the admission of the party against whom it is read, the whole should be laid before the jury, for the purpose of showing under what impressions the admission was made, though some part of it be stated only upon hearsay and belief.

§ 667. The rule requiring the whole admission to be taken together is so important, that the judge will do well to explain distinctly to the jury its bearing and extent, whenever any portion of the statement is favourable to the party against whom it is read; but his neglecting to do so in a case where it is clear that the jury, in fact, took the whole into their consideration, will not amount to such a misdirection as to warrant a new trial.<sup>4</sup>

§ 668. A second rule respecting admissions is, that they are receivable in evidence though they relate to the contents of a written instrument, even when such contents are directly in issue;<sup>5</sup> but as this rule has already been discussed, it is needless to do more

in this place than thus shortly to refer to it.<sup>1</sup> Courts of equity recognise a third rule, in rejecting, or, at least, in placing no reliance upon, any verbal admissions or declarations of the parties, which are not put directly in issue by the pleadings, and which, consequently, have not been open to explanation or disproof.<sup>2</sup> This doctrine rests upon the ground, that the reception of such evidence would facilitate the production of false testimony;<sup>3</sup> and although it does not strictly extend to written admissions, yet the fact of their not being put in issue by the pleadings will naturally detract from their weight, as the party against whom they are offered in evidence will, in such case, have had no opportunity of explaining them.<sup>4</sup>

§ 669.<sup>5</sup> With respect to the person, whose admissions may be received, the general doctrine is, that the declarations of a party to the record, or of one identified in interest with him, are, as against such party, receivable in evidence;<sup>6</sup> but if they proceed from a stranger, who is still living, they are almost uniformly rejected;<sup>7</sup> and, though he be dead, they cannot in general be admitted, unless upon some of the special grounds already considered.<sup>8</sup> In holding that the admissions of parties to the record are receivable in evidence, it matters not whether such admissions were made before or after the party had arrived at full age; and, therefore, if an action be brought against an adult for goods supplied to him during his minority, admissions made, and letters written, by him while under age, may be proved on behalf of the plaintiff.<sup>9</sup>

§ 670. The common law recognises no distinction between nominal and real parties ; and, therefore, if the consignee of goods uses the name of the consignor in proceeding against a shipper,<sup>1</sup> or if the assignee of a bond is driven to sue the obligor in the name of the original obligee,<sup>2</sup> or if the cestui que trust brings an action in the name of his trustee, courts of Nisi Prius cannot reject the admissions of the nominal plaintiffs as evidence for the defendants.<sup>3</sup> Still, the persons beneficially interested are not without remedy, since they may always obtain protection from the Court of Chancery ; and if the admissions of the nominal plaintiff consists of a solemn instrument, such as a release, which being pleaded in bar operates by way of estoppel, they may also appeal to the equitable jurisdiction of the court of law in which the action is brought, and move to set aside the plea.<sup>4</sup> This latter course, as being less tedious and far less expensive than an application to Chancery, is now usually adopted where a clear case of fraud between the releasor and the defendant can be established ; but here it must be mentioned by way of caution, that, unless the case be such as would manifestly induce a court of equity to set aside the release as against the defendant, the judges at common law will not interfere.<sup>5</sup>

merely verbal, or be contained in some writing not under seal, as, for instance, a receipt, courts of law will, on motion, prevent the defendant from availing himself of it to defeat the claims of the real plaintiff, is a question still undecided.<sup>1</sup> Thus much, however, seems perfectly clear that, notwithstanding a receipt in full has been given by the nominal plaintiff to the defendant, the parties really interested may show to the jury that the money has in fact never been paid; for, as such a receipt is at best but an inconclusive declaration of payment, it must be open to explanation and controlling proof, and would be equally so, though the party who gave it was not only the nominal but the real plaintiff.<sup>2</sup>

§ 672.<sup>3</sup> In the American courts the practice is somewhat different, as the judges presiding at Nisi Prius exercise the same equitable jurisdiction as if they were sitting in Banc; and, consequently, if a release from a nominal plaintiff be pleaded in bar, a prior assignment of the cause of action, with notice thereof to the defendant, and an averment that the suit is prosecuted by the assignee for his own benefit, is a good replication.<sup>4</sup> Nor is the nominal plaintiff permitted, by the entry of a retraxit, or in any other manner,

§ 673. In holding that the admissions of mere nominal parties are receivable in evidence, the law does not include the declarations of a prochein amy or guardian, because these persons, though their names appear on the record, are not in fact parties to the suit, but are considered as officers of the court specially appointed by the judges to look after the interests of the infant.<sup>2</sup> A solemn admission, however, made by a guardian or prochein amy in good faith in a pending suit, for the purpose of that trial only, is governed by other considerations, and will be equally admissible with like admissions made by the attorney in the cause.<sup>3</sup>

The civil law considers them as, strictly speaking, not assignable; but, by the invention of a fiction, the Roman juriconsults contrived to attain this object. The creditor, who wished to transfer his right of action to another person, constituted him his attorney, or procurator in rem suam, as it was called; and it was stipulated that the action should be brought in the name of the assignor, but for the benefit and at the expense of the assignee. Pothier de Vente, No. 550. The Court of Chancery, imitating, in its usual spirit, the civil law in this particular, disregarded the rigid strictness of the common law, and protected the rights of the assignee of choses in action. This liberality was at last adopted by the courts of common law, who now consider an assignment of a chose in action as substantially valid, only preserving, in certain cases, the form of an action commenced in the name of the assignor; the beneficial interest and control of the suit being, however, considered as completely vested in the assignee as procurator in rem suam. § 674. When several persons are jointly interested in the subject-matter of the suit, the general rule is, that the admissions of any one of these persons are receivable against himself and fellows, whether they be all jointly suing or sued, or whether an action be brought in favour of or against one or more of them separately; provided the admission relate to the subject-matter in dispute, and be made by the declarant in his character of a person jointly interested with the party against whom the evidence is tendered.<sup>1</sup> Thus, the representation or misrepresentation of any fact made by one partner, with respect to some partnership transaction, will bind the firm;<sup>2</sup> and if partners bring an action as on a joint contract, an admission by one of them that the subject-matter of the contract was his separate property, will render the plaintiffs liable to a nonsuit,<sup>3</sup> unless the case be such as to warrant an amendment at the trial under § 35 of the Common Law Procedure Act, 1852.<sup>4</sup> So, where it appeared on the record, that an agreement sued on was made by the plaintiff on behalf of himself and the other proprietors of a theatre, statements made by one of such proprietors were admitted on the part of the defendant.<sup>5</sup> And where the obligee of a bond filed a bill against two joint and several obligors, alleging that the bond had been delivered up to one of them by mistake, and praying that he, the obligee, might recover the amount due on it, an admission by the party to whom the bond was given up, that it had been delivered to her by mistake, was held to be evidence against the co-obligor, though the joint answer of the defendants had traversed the allegation as to mistake, and, simply admitting the delivery of the bond, had stated that the party to whom it was given up had destroyed it.<sup>6</sup> where joint, or joint and several, debts have been barred by the Statute of Limitations. The first blow aimed at the rule was struck by Lord Tenterden's Act,<sup>1</sup> which, after enacting that "in actions of debt, or upon the case grounded upon any simple contract, no acknowledgment or promise by words only shall be deemed sufficient evidence of a new or continuing contract, whereby to take any case out of the operation of the enactments" contained in the old Statute of Limitations,<sup>2</sup> "or to deprive any party of the benefit thereof, unless such acknowledgment or promise shall be made or contained by or in some writing, to be signed by the party chargeable thereby,"—goes on to provide, "that where there shall be two or more joint-contractors, or executors or administrators of any contractor, no such joint-contractor, executor or administrator, shall lose the benefit of the said enactments or either of them, so as to be chargeable in respect or by reason only of any written acknowledgment or promise made and signed by any other or others of them :<sup>3</sup> Provided always, that nothing herein contained shall alter or take away or lessen the effect of any payment of any principal or interest made by any person whatsoever : provided also, that in actions to be commenced against two or more such joint-contractors, or executors, or administrators, if it shall appear at the trial, or otherwise, that the plaintiff, though barred by" the said Act of Jac. 1,<sup>4</sup> "or this Act, as to one or more of such joint-contractors, or executors, or administrators, shall nevertheless be entitled against any other or others of the defendants, by virtue of a new acknowledgment or promise, or otherwise, judgment may be given and costs allowed for the plaintiff as to such defendant or defendants against whom he shall recover, and for the other defendant or defendants against the plaintiff."<sup>5</sup> first place, it required that the written acknowledgment should be personally signed by the party chargeable; and next, it left untouched the law which allowed part payment by one of several co-debtors to operate as a bar of the statute with respect to the others. These defects caused much litigation, and not less injustice, till at length, after the lapse of a quarter of a century, a remedy was applied to them by the Mercantile Law Amendment Act, 1856.<sup>1</sup> § 13 enacts, with reference to the first defect, that “an acknowledgment or promise made or contained by or in a writing signed by an agent of the party chargeable thereby, duly authorised to make such acknowledgment or promise, shall have the same effect as if such writing had been signed by such party himself.”<sup>2</sup> The second defect was cured by § 14 of the same Act, which provides, that “when there shall be two or more co-contractors or co-debtors, whether bound or liable jointly only, or jointly and severally, or executors or administrators of any contractor, no such co-contractor or co-debtor, executor or administrator, shall lose the benefit of the ” Statutes of Limitations,<sup>3</sup> “so as to be chargeable in respect or by reason only of payment<sup>4</sup> of any principal, interest, or other money, by any other or others of such co-contractors or co-debtors, executors or administrators.”

§ 677. The enactment last cited came under the consideration of a court of equity in the case of Thompson v. Waithman.<sup>5</sup> There, two partners had given a promissory note in the name of the firm. One of the partners afterwards died, leaving his co-partner his executor; and this man continued to pay interest on the note for some years, when he became bankrupt. The holder of the note then claimed payment out of the assets of the deceased partner's estate; but as more than six years had elapsed since the date of the death, the Statute of Limitations was set up as a bar to the claim. the validity of this defence, holding that the payments in the case before him must be presumed to have been made by the bankrupt in his character of surviving partner, and not as executor of his deceased partner. In the case, too, of Jackson v. Woolley,<sup>1</sup> the Court of Queen's Bench has ruled, that, on the proper construction of the enactment in question, payment by one co-debtor, with the knowledge and mere consent of the other, does not deprive that other of the benefit of the Statute of Limitations. Since these cases were determined, the Exchequer Chamber has held, contrary to what was first thought to be the law, that § 14 of the Act of 19 & 20 V., c. 97, has no retrospective effect, and consequently that it cannot apply to any payment made before the 29th of July, 1856.<sup>2</sup> This decision is the more remarkable as § 10 of the same statute still seems to be retrospective.<sup>3</sup>

§ 678 A. Where a member of a partnership has been adjudged bankrupt, and an action has been brought, under the authority of the Court of Bankruptcy, in the joint names of the trustee and of the bankrupt's partner, such partner has no power to release the debt or demand to which the action relates, but any attempted release made by him, is, by the Bankruptcy Act, rendered void.<sup>1</sup>

§ 680. ship, and an action was brought against them as part-owners of a vessel, an admission made by the one, as to a matter which was not a subject of co-partnership, but only of co-part-ownership, was held inadmissible against the other.<sup>1</sup> So, where two executors were sued on a covenant by a testator for quiet enjoyment, and the question somewhat singularly raised by the facts and the pleadings was, whether the defendants, who had themselves evicted the covenantee, had done so under a lawful title, it was held that the plaintiff, in order to establish this fact, could not put in evidence a declaration by one of the defendants, made after entry, to the effect that both of them had a lawful title, through the testator, under a deed prior to that on which the action was founded.<sup>2</sup> The court considered that this admission was not made by the party in his character of executor, nor did it relate to any matter touching the testator's estate; but it simply referred to something of which the two defendants had taken advantage in their individual capacities. It may even be doubted whether an express promise made by one executor in his representative character will bind the remaining executors in their representative characters;<sup>3</sup> and it has been held that the admission of the receipt of money by one of several trustees, who were joint defendants, but were not personally liable, could not be received to charge the others.<sup>4</sup>

nor can the acts or admissions of the executor bind the survivor.<sup>1</sup> Neither will the admissions of one tenant in common be receivable against his co-tenant, though both are parties on the same side of the suit;<sup>2</sup> and in America, it has been decided, that no such privity exists among the members of a board of public officers,<sup>3</sup> or among several indorsers of a promissory note,<sup>4</sup> or between executors and heirs of devisees,<sup>5</sup> as to make the admission of one binding on all. These cases almost dispense with the necessity of adding, that in an action on the case for negligence, in an action of trespass, or in any other action for tort, the admission of one defendant will not be evidence against the others;<sup>6</sup> and it is abundantly clear that the same rule prevails in criminal proceedings, as the law cannot recognise any partnership or joint interest in crime.<sup>7</sup>

§ 682. One apparent exception to this last proposition prevails, where the inhabitants of townships, counties, or other territorial divisions of the country, sue or are prosecuted eo nomine; but in these cases they are regarded in the light of a corporation, of which each individual inhabitant forms a component part; and therefore it is entirely consistent with the rule stated above, to hold that the declarations and admissions of any one of such persons should be receivable in evidence against the collective body. It has consequently been decided on an indictment against a township for non-repair of a bridge, that the declarations of all rateable inhabitants, whether actually rated or not, may be given in evidence for the Crown, though the value of such evidence will of course vary according to the knowledge and position of the declarant, and will in many cases be exceedingly slight.<sup>1</sup> So, also, in settlement cases declarations by rated parishioners will be evidence against the parish.<sup>2</sup> This rule of evidence is in no way affected by the statutes, which now render parties to the record and other interested persons competent witnesses.<sup>3</sup>

§ 683.<sup>4</sup> An apparent joint interest is obviously insufficient to render the admissions of one party receivable against his companions, where the reality of that interest is the point in controversy. A foundation must first be laid, by showing, primâ facie, that a joint interest exists. Where, therefore, an action was brought against a party for money had and received, and the plaintiff, in order to prove the receipt of the money by the defendant, tendered in evidence certain statements, which had been made by a person whom the defendant had taken into partnership subsequently to the transaction in question, the court rejected the evidence of these statements, on the ground that a joint liability could not be presumed from the mere fact of a subsequent partnership.<sup>5</sup> Again, the existence of a joint interest which is disputed, cannot be established by the admission of one of the parties sought to be charged, but this fact must be established by independent proof. Therefore, in an action against three makers of a promissory note, the joint execution of which was the point in issue, the admission of his signature by one defendant was held insufficient to entitle the plaintiff to recover against him and the others, though theirs had been proved; the point to be established against all being a joint promise by all.<sup>6</sup> And where it is sought to charge several as partners, an admission of the fact of partnership by one is not receivable in evidence against any of the others, to prove the partnership; but it is only after the partnership is shown to exist by independent proof satisfactory to the judge, that the admissions of one of the parties are received in order to affect the others.<sup>1</sup> As, however, the admissions are evidence against the party making them, he will be bound thereby, either in an action brought against him as surviving partner, or even, if he be sued on the joint promise with his co-partners, provided they have been outlawed, or have let judgment go by default.<sup>2</sup>

§ 684.<sup>3</sup> In general, the answer of one defendant in Chancery cannot be read in evidence for his co-defendant, even on an inquiry before the Master or the chief clerk;<sup>4</sup> or upon a motion for a decree, at least without having given notice to that effect.<sup>5</sup> Neither can the answer of one defendant be read in evidence against his co-defendant;<sup>6</sup> the reason being, that, as there is no issue between them, no opportunity can have been afforded for cross-examination;<sup>7</sup> and, moreover, if such a course were allowed, the plaintiff might make one of his friends a defendant, and thus gain a most unfair advantage.<sup>8</sup> But this rule does not apply to cases, where the other defendant claims through the

§ 685. Where parties either sue or are sued in a representative character, it may be questionable how far statements made by them before they were completely clothed with that character, will be admissible against them, so as to affect the interest of the persons they represent. In one case, Chief-Justice Tindal is reported to have received an admission of a person, who was suing as the assignee, now called the trustee, of a bankrupt, though it was made before he became such;<sup>3</sup> but Lord Tenterden has ruled otherwise on precisely the same point;<sup>4</sup> and in weighing the respective merits of these decisions, the reader will probably be of opinion that Lord Tenterden's was correct. It certainly appears to be a somewhat startling proposition, that the assets of a testator, and the consequent rights of legatees, may be affected by some inconsiderate statement, which the executor, before the death of the testator, may have been induced to make;<sup>5</sup> and the more so, as even the sworn admission of a married woman, answering to a bill in Chancery jointly with her husband, cannot, except when it relates to her separate estate,<sup>6</sup> be read after his death, as against her, it being considered as the answer of the husband alone.<sup>7</sup> Neither can the answer of the guardian of an infant defendant in Chancery be read against the infant in another suit;<sup>1</sup> though it may be used against the guardian himself, if he afterwards be sued in his private capacity, for it is his own admission upon oath.<sup>2</sup> The same doctrine would seem to apply in the case of an answer to a bill in equity put in by the committee of a lunatic.<sup>3</sup>

§ 686.<sup>4</sup> The admissions of persons who are not parties to the record, but who are interested in the subject-matter of the suit, will next be considered. The law, in regard to this source of evidence, looks chiefly to the real parties in interest, and gives to their admissions the same weight as though they were parties to the record. Thus, the admissions of the cestui que trust of a bond, so far as his interest and that of the trustee are identical;<sup>5</sup> those of the persons interested in a policy effected in another's name for their benefit;<sup>6</sup> those of the shipowners, in an action by the master for freight;<sup>7</sup> those of the indemnifying creditor, in an action against the sheriff;<sup>8</sup> those of the deputy-sheriff tending to charge himself, in an action against the high sheriff for the misconduct of the deputy;<sup>9</sup> those of rated parishioners, in a settlement appeal, where the churchwardens and overseers of the poor are the nominal parties on the record;<sup>1</sup> and, in short, those of any persons who are represented in the cause by other parties,—are receivable in evidence against their respective representatives.<sup>2</sup> On this ground, it has been repeatedly held on the trial of election petitions, that the declarations of voters against their own votes, whether made before or after the votes were given,<sup>3</sup> and even though invalidating their votes on the ground of their having received bribes,<sup>4</sup> are admissible in evidence; for, in a scrutiny, each case is considered as a separate cause, in which the supporter of the vote under discussion and the voter are the parties on the one side, and the opposers of the vote are the parties on the other.<sup>5</sup>

§ 687. In all these cases, the declarations or admissions must, as will presently be seen,<sup>6</sup> have been made while the party making them had some interest in the matter; and, moreover, they are receivable in evidence only so far as his own interests, or the interests of those who claim through him, are concerned. In illustration of this last proposition it may be observed, that if an action be brought by trustees, who represent the interests of a variety of cestuis que trust, the statements of the person beneficially interested as tenant for life cannot be received as evidence for the defendant, so as to prejudice the rights of the remaindermen in fee. Indeed, before the declaration of a cestui que trust will be admitted at all against a trustee, the nature of the interest

§ 687 A. In applying the rule that a man's admissions are only evidence against himself and his privies, care must be taken to distinguish between the position of a tenant for life and that of a tenant in tail. A tenant for life cannot, unless empowered by some special statute,<sup>2</sup> prejudice, by an admission, the interest of a remainder-man or reversioner; but a tenant in tail is regarded as representing the inheritance, and therefore what he says or does will often be binding on the persons entitled in remainder. Thus, the law is well settled that a release of the equity of redemption by a tenant in tail in possession,<sup>3</sup> or a decree of foreclosure against him, will bind the remainder-man;<sup>4</sup> and the acknowledgment by a tenant in tail of a mortgage title, which, in the absence of such admission, would have been barred by the equitable rule respecting limitations, has been held to restore, as against the remainder-man, the right of redemption.<sup>5</sup>

§ 688.<sup>6</sup> In some cases, the admissions of third persons, strangers to the suit, are receivable. These exceptions to the general rule arise when the issue is substantially upon the mutual rights of such persons at a particular time; in which cases the practice is to let in such evidence in general, as would be legally admissible in an action between the parties themselves. Thus, under the old law,<sup>7</sup> in an action against the sheriff, either for not having arrested a debtor on mesne process and for having made a false return of non est inventus, or for an escape on mesne process, any such acknowledgment of the debt by the debtor as would have been sufficient to have charged him in the original action, would also, as against the sheriff, have supported the averment in the declaration, that the party not arrested, or escaping, was so indebted.<sup>1</sup> This exception proceeded on the principle that the sheriff was put in the place of the debtor, as to the creditor who sued him for a breach of duty.<sup>2</sup> So, an admission of joint liability by a third person, has been held sufficient evidence, on the part of the defendant, to support a plea in abatement for the nonjoinder of such person as defendant in the suit; because such evidence would be admissible in an action against the co-debtor for the same cause, and the defendant is merely bound to make out such a case for the plaintiff as against the co-debtor, as would enable him to sue the latter with success.<sup>3</sup> The admissions, too, of a bankrupt, made before the act of bankruptcy, are receivable in proof of the petitioning creditor's debt;<sup>4</sup> but if made after the act of bankruptcy, though admissible against himself,<sup>5</sup> they cannot furnish evidence against the trustee, because of the intervening rights of creditors, and the danger of fraud.<sup>6</sup>

§ 689.<sup>7</sup> The admissions of a third person are also receivable in evidence against the party who has expressly referred another to him for information in regard to an uncertain or disputed matter. In such cases the party is bound by the declarations of the person referred to, in the same manner, and to the same extent, as if they were made by himself. Thus, upon a plea of plene administravit, where the executors wrote to the plaintiff, that if she wished for further information in regard to the assets, she should apply to a certain merchant in the city, they were held bound by the replies of the merchant to her inquiries upon that subject.<sup>1</sup> So, in an action for goods sold and delivered, where the fact of the delivery of them by the carman was disputed, and the defendant said, "If he will say that he delivered the goods I will pay for them;" he was held bound by the affirmative reply of the carman.<sup>2</sup>

§ 690. In the application of this principle, it matters not whether the question referred be one of law or of fact; whether the person to whom reference is made, have or have not any peculiar knowledge on the subject; or whether the statements of the referee be adduced in evidence in an action on contract, or in an action for tort. Therefore, where two parties had agreed to abide by the opinion of counsel upon the construction of a statute, the party against whose interest the opinion operated was held bound thereby in a subsequent action;<sup>3</sup> and a disputed fact regarding a mine, having been referred by consent to a miner's jury, their decision was received in evidence when one of the disputants afterwards brought an action on the case against his adversary.<sup>4</sup> In these cases the decisions, which partook of the nature of awards, were not stamped; but the court held that this was immaterial, as the instruments, not containing any recital of the agreements, did not on their face purport to be awards. The doctrine under discussion may further be illustrated by the case of Downs v. Cooper.<sup>5</sup> There the defendant had demised premises to the plaintiff, who entered and paid him rent. During the term a brother of the defendant disputed his title, and to avoid litigation between brothers, both, within the knowledge of the plaintiff, agreed to abide by the opinion of a barrister, to whom a case was submitted. The opinion being adverse to the defendant, he thereupon gave up his title deeds, and permitted his brother's attorney to tell the plaintiff, that in future he must regard the brother as his landlord. The plaintiff paid his rent accordingly; but the defendant being subsequently dissatisfied with the barrister's opinion, levied a distress, and an action of replevin was the consequence. The above facts being stated in the plea in bar, the court held, that, though in general a tenant is estopped from denying his landlord's title, he was not so here, inasmuch as the conduct of the defendant amounted to an admission that his title had expired.

§ 691. To render the declarations of a person referred to equivalent to a party's own admission, it is not necessary that the reference should have been made by express words; but it will suffice if the party by his conduct has tacitly evinced an intention to rely on the statements as correct. Therefore, where a party, on being questioned by means of an interpreter, gave his answers through the same medium, it has been held that the language of the interpreter should be considered as that of the party; and that, consequently, it might be proved by any person who heard it, without calling the interpreter himself.<sup>1</sup> So, if a party, on motion before a judge, uses the affidavit of another person to prove a certain fact deposed to therein, such affidavit is on any subsequent trial evidence as against him of this fact, and that, too, though the person who made the affidavit is present in court;<sup>2</sup> and where a petitioning creditor, knowing that his servant could prove a particular act of bankruptcy, sent him expressly for that purpose to be examined at the opening of the fiat, the depositions so made were held to be evidence of the act of bankruptcy as against the petitioning creditor, where that fact was put in issue in an action brought against him by the assignees.<sup>3</sup>

§ 692. It has even been held, apparently on the authority of these cases, that, where the question in an action of trespass was

whether the plaintiff or defendant was the tenant of a field, the deposition of a witness who, in a proceeding before justices for an alleged trespass on the same close, had been called by the plaintiff to prove his possession, but had in fact disproved it, might be put in evidence for the defendant, though the witness was alive.<sup>1</sup> In this case, however, as the witness was abroad at the time of the trial, and as the litigants and the matter in dispute before the justices were identical with those before the court, the depositions would seem to have been admissible, rather as secondary evidence of oral testimony<sup>2</sup> than as admissions by the accredited agent of the plaintiff.<sup>3</sup> In this last light they could scarcely have been viewed, consistently with the opinion of the court, as expressed in Gardner v. Moul,<sup>4</sup> or Brickell v. Hulse;<sup>5</sup> for in both these cases the judges expressly admitted, that a party was not bound by what his witness might say at Nisi Prius.

§ 693.<sup>6</sup> Whether the answer of a person thus referred to is conclusive against the party does not seem to have been settled. Where the plaintiff had offered to rest his claim upon the defendant's affidavit, which was accordingly made, Lord Kenyon held that he was conclusively bound, even though the affidavit were false; and he added, that, to make such a proposition and afterwards to recede from it, was not only a dishonest act, but was one which might be turned to very improper purposes, such as to entrap the witness, or to find out how far the party's evidence would go in support of his case.<sup>7</sup> But in a later case, where the question was whether a horse in the defendant's possession was identical with one lost by the plaintiff, and the plaintiff had said that if the defendant would take his oath that the horse was his, he should keep him; and he made oath accordingly; Lord Tenterden observed, that considering the loose manner in which the evidence had been given, he would not receive it as conclusive, though it was a circumstance on which he should not fail to remark to the jury.<sup>1</sup> And certainly the opinion of Lord Tenterden, indicated by what fell from him in this case, more perfectly harmonizes with other parts of the law, especially as it is opposed to any further extension of the doctrine of estoppels, which precludes the investigation of truth. The purposes of justice and policy are sufficiently answered, by throwing the burthen of proof on the opposing party, as in the case of an award, and by holding him bound, unless he can impeach the test referred to by clear proof of fraud or mistake.<sup>2</sup>

§ 694. It may here be expedient to examine briefly how far the admissions of a married woman can be received in evidence, either against herself or her trustees, or for or against her husband. If a wife sue or be sued as a single woman, no valid reason can be given why her admissions should not have the same legal effect as those of any other person ; but in one case, where the defence to an action on contract was that the plaintiff was under coverture when the cause of action accrued, Lord Ellenborough is reported to have held, on what grounds it does not appear, that it was not sufficient to show that she had acknowledged herself to be married, without proof of an actual marriage, or at least of cohabitation.<sup>3</sup> If the trustees of a married woman sue or be sued, and the opposite party be a stranger, her admissions, like those of an ordinary cestui que trust,<sup>4</sup> will be clearly admissible as against the trustees ; and even if the husband be the hostile party, it seems that, on principle, the wife's admissions ought to be received on his behalf to the same extent as her vivâ voce testimony ;<sup>5</sup> for the principle of policy which admits the one should equally admit the other ; and, therefore, it is probable that if an action were brought against a husband by the trustees of his wife under a separation deed, for arrears of maintenance, and the defence were to rest on the fact of the wife's adultery, proof of her admission of criminal misconduct would, contrary to what was formerly the law,<sup>6</sup> be now received.

§ 696. It remains to be seen in what manner the Court for Divorce and Matrimonial Causes<sup>2</sup> will deal with the wife's admissions of adultery, on applications for judicial separation, or for restitution of conjugal rights, and on petitions for dissolution of marriage. The unfettered reception of such evidence in the last class of cases, would open a wide door to collusion; and on this ground, the House of Lords, in proceedings upon bills of divorce, was generally in the habit of rejecting letters from the wife to the husband containing confessions of adultery,<sup>3</sup> unless they were offered in confirmation of circumstances which tended strongly to prove the defendant's guilt.<sup>4</sup> It seems, however, that such letters, if addressed to a stranger, or even to the husband's agent, were receivable in evidence, after proof that they were not written in consequence of any threat or promise, and that the writer was then living apart from her husband;<sup>1</sup> and it further seems, that the wife's oral confession of guilt to a third party was admissible, at least as confirmatory evidence.<sup>2</sup> Not only were direct confessions rejected in the House of Lords, except under the circumstances above stated, but all letters written by the wife after her separation, either to the husband or to the adulterer, were generally held inadmissible, unless they were connected with some particular fact,<sup>3</sup> or could be referred to as part of the res gestæ,<sup>4</sup> or were tendered in evidence after a prima facie case of guilt had been already established. In one case, where the husband held a situation at Malta, and his wife, in consequence of bad health, had left the island, and had resided in England for several years, during which time she had lived with a paramour and had borne him four children, the House of Lords admitted a series of letters from the wife to her husband, which were tendered as accounting for the circumstance of her not going out to rejoin him, and as showing that she had practised upon him the grossest deceit.<sup>5</sup>

§ 697. In the Ecclesiastical Courts a less strict rule obtained than was observed in the Common Law Courts, with respect to the exclusion of a wife's confession. By a canon<sup>6</sup> passed in 1603, a mere confession, indeed, unaccompanied by other circumstances, was rendered insufficient to support a prayer for a separation a mensâ et thoro; and this rule has been held applicable, though the confession was made under the apprehension of approaching dissolution, and was free from all suspicion of a collusive purpose.<sup>7</sup> Still, the confession was always admissible in evidence, and, if coupled with other facts of a suspicious nature, it generally proved an important ingredient in the decision of the court. In one case, letters from the wife to the supposed paramour, taken in conjunction with other suspicious circumstances, were, in the absence of direct proof, considered to establish her guilt, though they contained no express avowal of adultery, and though they never reached the hands of the party to whom they were addressed, as they were intercepted by the husband.<sup>1</sup> Whether the wife's confession of adultery would be sufficient in itself to repel a suit instituted by her for restitution of conjugal rights, was still an undecided point when the Spiritual Courts were deprived by the Legislature of their jurisdiction over such matters;<sup>2</sup> but, in a suit of nullity of marriage, by reason of a former marriage, the simple admission of such former marriage was held not to be sufficient.<sup>3</sup>

§ 698.<sup>4</sup> The admissions of the wife will bind the husband only where she had authority to make them.<sup>5</sup> This authority does not result, by mere operation of law, from the relation of husband and wife; but is a question of fact, to be found by the jury, as in other cases of agency; for, though this relation is peculiar in its circumstances, from its close intimacy and its very nature, yet there is nothing peculiar in the principles of law which apply to it. As the wife is seldom expressly constituted the agent of the husband, the cases on this subject are almost universally those of implied authority, turning upon the degree in which the husband permitted the wife to participate, either in the transaction of his affairs in general, or in the particular matter in question.<sup>6</sup> Where, under the old law,<sup>7</sup> he sued for her wages, the mere fact that she had earned them did not authorise her to

§ 699. In regard to the inference of her agency from circumstances, the question used to be left to the jury with great latitude, both as to the fact of agency, and the time of the admissions. Thus, it has been held competent for them to infer authority in her to accept a notice and direction, in regard to a particular transaction in her husband's trade, from the circumstance of her being seen twice in his counting-house appearing to conduct his business relating to that transaction, and once giving orders to the foreman.<sup>3</sup> And in an action against the husband for goods furnished to the wife while in the country, where he occasionally visited her, her letter to the plaintiff, admitting the debt, and apologising for the non-payment, though written several years after the transaction, was held by Lord Ellenborough, previous to Lord Tenterden's Act,<sup>4</sup> sufficient to take the case out of the Statute of Limitations.<sup>5</sup> Of late years, however, a greater strictness has prevailed ; and in the case of *Meredith v. Had the admissions related to the receipt of shop goods, they would have been evidence ; but the fact that she was conducting a business for her husband, did not constitute her his agent to make admissions of an antecedent contract for the hire of the shop, or to make a new contract for the future occupation of it.

§ 700.<sup>1</sup> The admissions of attorneys of record bind their clients in all matters relating to the progress and trial of the cause. In some cases they are conclusive, and may even be given in evidence upon a new trial ; though, previously to such trial, the party give notice that he intends to withdraw them, or though the pleadings be altered, provided the alterations do not relate to the admissions.<sup>2</sup> But to this end they must be distinct and formal, or such as are termed solemn admissions, made for the express purpose of relaxing the stringency of some rule of practice, or of dispensing with the formal proof of some fact at the trial.<sup>3</sup>

§ 701. Another class of admissions comprehends those which attorneys make, not indeed with the express intent of dispensing with proof of certain facts, but as it were incidentally, while they are referring to other matters connected with the cause. These, which are generally the result of carelessness, though not regarded as conclusive admissions, are still considered, not unfrequently, as raising an inference respecting the existence of facts, which the adversary would otherwise have been called upon to prove ; and, consequently, it is very important that attorneys should exercise great caution in the language they employ while corresponding with their opponents. Thus, where in an action against the acceptor of a bill, his attorney had served notice on the plaintiff to produce all papers relating to a bill, the description of which corresponded with that set forth in the declaration,—“which said bill,” the notice went on to state, “was accepted by the said defendant,”—the court held that such notice was prima facie evidence of the defendant’s acceptance;<sup>1</sup> and in an action against the owners of a ship, their joint ownership was inferred from an undertaking to appear for them, signed by their attorney, in which they were described as owners of the sloop in question.<sup>2</sup> Again, where the defendant’s attorney, in an action of debt on a bond, had admitted the signature of the attesting witness; this was held, by implication, to amount to an admission of the due execution of the instrument.<sup>3</sup>

§ 702.<sup>4</sup> Admissions, however, contained in the mere conversation of an attorney, cannot be received against a client, though they relate to the facts in controversy. The reason of this distinction is found in the nature and extent of the authority given, the attorney being constituted for the management of the cause in court, and for nothing more.<sup>5</sup> So, if a letter sent by an attorney to the opposite party, be expressed to be written “without prejudice,” it cannot be received as an admission; neither can the reply be admitted, though not guarded in a similar manner.<sup>6</sup> If the admission were made before suit, it will be equally binding, provided it be shown that the attorney was already retained to appear in the cause.<sup>7</sup> But in the absence of any evidence of such retainer, some other proof must be given of authority to make the admission.<sup>8</sup> When the attorney is already constituted in the

§ 703. The practice of attorneys making solemn admissions before a trial, for the purpose of dispensing with the mere formal proof of documents, has of late years greatly prevailed; and the law on this subject, after several changes,<sup>2</sup> is now embodied in the 117th and 118th sections of the Common Law Procedure Act, 1852,<sup>3</sup> and in the 29th and 30th general rules of Hilary Term, 1853. The statute provides in the first place, that "either party may call on the other party by notice to admit any document, saving all just exceptions; and in case of refusal or neglect to admit, the costs of proving the document shall be paid by the party so neglecting or refusing, whatever the result of the cause may be, unless at the trial the judge shall certify that the refusal to admit was reasonable; and no costs of proving any document shall be allowed unless such notice be given, except in cases where the omission to give the notice is, in the opinion of the Master, a saving of expense."<sup>4</sup> The 29th general rule furnishes

<sup>4</sup> § 117. The Irish Act, 16 & 17 V., c. 113, contains in § 118 a corresponding enactment. The practice is also the same on the Revenue side of the Court of Exchequer; see Reg.-Gen., 24 V., r. 17; 6 H. & N. xiii. So, too, in the Court of Probate; see Rules of 1862, for Ct. of Prob. in contentious business, r. 72, and Form, No. 20. The new Rules of 1865 for the Ct. of Div. and Mat. Causes are, for some unaccountable reason, silent on this subject. The practice in the County Courts is governed by r. 102 of the Cy. Ct. Rules of 1868, which provides that "where either party proposes to give a judgment of a superior court or any other document, whether printed or written, in evidence, he may, by a demand in writing, made a reasonable time before the hearing, require the other party to admit (saving all just exceptions to the admissibility of such document in evidence) the document to be read in evidence without proof; and if such demand be not made, no costs of proving such document shall be allowed, unless the judge shall otherwise order. If such demand be not complied with, and the judge think it reasonable that the admission should have been made, the party refusing shall bear the expense of proving such document, whatever may be a form of notice that may be given,<sup>1</sup> while the 30th rule repeats, with one or two verbal alterations, the language of the Act, and extends it to "all cases of trials, writs of inquiry, or inquisitions of any kind."<sup>2</sup> When an admission has been made, the mode of proving it is regulated by § 118 of the statute, which enacts that "an affidavit of the attorney in the cause, or his clerk, of the due signature of any admissions made in pursuance of such notice,

Ord. 3, r. 2, provides that "where a party desires to give in evidence any document, he may, not less than five days before the hearing, give notice to any other party in the cause who is competent to make admissions, requiring him to inspect and admit such document; and if such other party shall not within a reasonable time make such admission, any expense of proving the same at the hearing shall be paid by him, whatever be the result of the cause, unless the court shall otherwise order; and no costs of proving any document shall be allowed unless such notice be given, except in cases where, in the opinion of the Registrar, the omission to give such notice has been a saving* of expense."

been in operation for twenty years, it may still be convenient to refer to a few cases which were decided on the construction of the former rules of 1834; and, first, it has been held, that, though the notice must be given a reasonable time before trial, yet, where it was given to the defendant's agent in town only four days before the commission day at Newcastle,—and he two days afterwards refused to admit the documents without objecting to the sufficiency of the notice, or requiring further time,—the plaintiff was entitled to the costs of proof.<sup>1</sup> Secondly, though the admission be made “with a saving of all just exceptions,” it so far recognises the general character and accuracy of the documents, that no objection can subsequently be taken to the authenticity of any part of them,<sup>2</sup> or to their reception in evidence on the ground of any interlineation, however material, appearing upon them.<sup>3</sup> If this were not so, great inconveniences would follow; for as one main object of inducing a party to admit under notice, is to dispense with the necessity of formal proof of the instrument, it would obviously open a door to fraud, if the party admitting were at liberty afterwards to object to an interlineation, which the attesting witness might alone be enabled to explain.<sup>4</sup> So, where a deed was admitted as “the counterpart of a lease,” an objection taken at the trial, that it was in fact a lease, and as such inadmissible for want of a sufficient stamp,<sup>5</sup> was overruled;<sup>6</sup> and where a party admitted an instrument, which was specified in the notice as bearing date the 10th August, he was not allowed to call on his opponent for an explanation, though on the production of the instrument it was evident that the date “August” had been written on an erasure.<sup>7</sup>

missory note, which was otherwise correctly described in the notice to admit, was misstated.<sup>1</sup> Fourthly, it seems that a party will not be entitled to the costs of proving any document specified in the notice, unless the witness called to establish this proof has, at least in his examination in chief, been questioned to no other fact.<sup>2</sup> Fifthly, when a notice is given to admit documents, all that can fairly be asked is, that the handwriting or due execution of the papers specified should be admitted; and, therefore, where a plaintiff included in his notice a demand to admit the authority by which the documents had been written, and afterwards, on the defendant refusing generally to make the admission as prayed, proved the documents of the trial, it was held that he could not recover from his opponent the costs of such proof.<sup>3</sup> Sixthly, it is needless to show that the admitting party has actually examined the documents mentioned in the notice, if he has had an opportunity of doing so;<sup>4</sup> and it seems to be unnecessary to identify the document produced at the trial with the one inspected, provided that it corresponds with the description contained in the notice.<sup>5</sup> On two occasions, however, the necessity for such evidence was urged by counsel, if not acknowledged by the court;<sup>6</sup> and prudence may generally dictate the propriety of being prepared with such proof, or, at least, of having the documents that are to be produced signed or marked by the party making the admission. Seventhly, though the notice to admit contain no saving of all just exceptions, the party admitting may still rely on any valid objection to the admissibility of a document specified in it; and, therefore, where a plaintiff admitted that a paper was a copy of a letter from himself to a defendant, who had suffered judgment by default, this did not entitle the other defendant to put in the copy, without first accounting for the non-production of the original, or tracing it to the plaintiff's possession, and proving the notice to produce. The judge's order in that case, which served the same purpose as the present notice to admit, merely secured the accuracy of the secondary evidence, but did not give it the effect of primary proof.<sup>1</sup>

§ 706. Lastly, these rules extend to every document which a party purposes to adduce in evidence, whether or not it be in his custody or control,<sup>2</sup> and whether or not it be put in issue by the pleadings.<sup>3</sup> Neither will the case be varied though the opposite party may have already, irrespective of the notice, refused in positive terms to make any admission on the subject.<sup>4</sup> A party may even, as it would seem, be served with notice to admit a foreign judgment, or other documents in a foreign court, provided that his opponent will give him time to inspect them abroad, and pay his expenses incurred in so doing.<sup>5</sup> Still the rules do not apply where ancient records of a public nature require, not proof, but translation and explanation, or where affidavits filed in Chancery must be produced by an officer of that court; and, consequently, a plaintiff was held entitled to the costs, both of a witness who was called to explain and translate the records, and of an officer of the Court of Chancery who produced the affidavits, though the defendant had not been called upon to admit any one of these documents.<sup>6</sup>

§ 707. In consenting to admit for the purposes of a trial, care must be taken, lest, by the words used in the notice to admit, the party admitting should be entrapped into making a larger admission than he intended. The defendant fell into this error in the case of Chaplin v. Levy.<sup>7</sup> There the holder of a bill of exchange sued the acceptor, and the defendant's attorney wrote a letter admitting "that the acceptance to the bill on which the action is brought is in the defendant's handwriting." A plea denying the acceptance was afterwards pleaded, but the court held that, notwithstanding this plea, the admission contained in the letter established a prima facie case on behalf of the plaintiff without the production of the bill itself at the trial. In the case of Wilkes v. Hopkins, a similar mistake was made.<sup>1</sup> That was an action against three persons on a bill of exchange alleged to have been accepted by them under the style of "The Newbridge Coal Company." The acceptance was traversed by two of the defendants, while the third one, Bishop, who had actually signed the acceptance for the company, suffered judgment by default. At the trial, the two defendants who had pleaded, denied that Bishop had any authority to accept for them; but as the notice to admit stated the bill to have been "accepted by Bishop for the defendants as the Newbridge Coal Company," the court held, that an admission under this notice, not only acknowledged the signature of Bishop, but precluded the defendants from denying that he had authority to bind them by his acceptance. This last decision, if sustainable to its full extent, is certainly one strictissimi juris; and the courts, feeling such to be the case, seem at present but little inclined to regard it as a binding authority. Thus, in a more recent action of trespass, where the plaintiff, in order to prove his possession of the close in question, relied upon an admission made by the defendant under a notice to admit in the following form:—"Letter of A.B., dated, &c., respecting Pond Field, then in possession of the said plaintiff;"—the court held, that although this description of the close was some evidence of the plaintiff's possession, it was certainly not conclusive proof of that fact.<sup>2</sup>

§ 707 A. The practice with respect to notices to admit documents has, of late years, been introduced into the Court of Chancery both in England and in Ireland, as also into the Court of Admiralty. The Chancery Amendment Act, 1858,<sup>3</sup> enacts, in

§ 7, that, “in any case in which all parties to a suit are competent to make admissions, any party may call on any other party by notice to admit any document, saving all just exceptions; and in case of refusal or neglect to admit, the cost of proving the document shall be paid by the party so neglecting or refusing, whatever the result of the cause may be, unless the court shall certify that the refusal to admit was reasonable; and no costs of proving any document shall be allowed, unless such notice be given, except in cases where the omission to give the notice is, in the opinion of the taxing master, a saving of expense.” It cannot fail to be noted by any practical lawyer that the words above, as marked in italics, have very seriously limited the salutary operation of this rule. They are not to be found in the Admiralty Court Act of 1861, which in other respects contains a very similar enactment.<sup>1</sup>

§ 708. Admissions made by counsel stand on much the same footing as those made by attorneys; and therefore, where a special case had been signed by the junior barrister on each side, but as a material fact had been omitted, a new trial was granted, the case was regarded by the court as containing the admissions of the parties to the facts therein stated, and its production was held to dispense with a second proof of those facts.<sup>2</sup> Again, where counsel on both sides so conduct a cause, as to lead to an inference that a certain fact is admitted between them, the court or the jury may treat it as proved;<sup>3</sup> and though the counsel do so with respect to some fact which goes to support one issue only, that fact, it seems, may be taken for granted for all purposes, and as to the whole case.<sup>4</sup> So, where a plaintiff's counsel in his opening stated that his client had paid a particular cheque, but called no evidence in support of that fact, the defendant was allowed to give secondary evidence of the contents of the cheque

after notice to produce, without giving further proof of the plaintiff's possession.<sup>1</sup>

§ 709. In the case of Colledge v. Horn,<sup>2</sup> this doctrine was sought to be carried one step further; and on a second trial the defendant endeavoured to avoid part of his opponent's demand, by proving an admission, which, on the former trial, had been made in the plaintiff's presence by the plaintiff's counsel in his opening address to the jury. The judge rejected this evidence; and although the court above subsequently granted a new trial, they did so, not on the ground that the ruling was wrong, but because the facts were not sufficiently before them. Mr. Justice Burrough, indeed, felt no difficulty in saying, that, if the plaintiff was in court, and heard what his counsel said, and made no objection, he was bound by the statement; but the other learned judges, with more prudence, forebore giving any opinion on a question, which they held to be one of great nicety. It was urged, with much truth at least, in support of the judge's ruling, that statements made by counsel in the course of his address to the jury are often no other than embellishments of the imagination; and it was contended, that, as bills in equity are not evidence against the parties who file them, inasmuch as they are supposed to be the suggestions of counsel, so the speeches of barristers should clearly be rejected. Should these arguments be considered inconclusive, some learned members of the profession, if duly watched, will often save their adversaries much trouble in the way of proof.<sup>3</sup>

§ 710.<sup>1</sup> The admissions of a principal can seldom be received as evidence in an action against the surety upon his collateral undertaking. In these cases the main inquiry is, whether the declarations of the principal were made during the transaction of the business for which the surety was bound, so as to become part of the res gestæ. If so, they are admissible; otherwise, they are not. The surety is considered as bound only for the actual conduct of the party, and not for whatever he might say he had done; and therefore he is entitled to proof of the principal's conduct by original evidence, where it can be had: excluding all his declarations made subsequent to the act to which they relate, and out of the course of his official duty. Thus, where one guaranteed the payment for such goods as the plaintiffs should send to another in the way of trade; the admissions of the principal debtor, that he had received goods, made after the time of their supposed delivery, were held inadmissible in evidence against the surety.<sup>2</sup> So, if a man become surety in a bond, conditioned for the faithful conduct of a clerk or collector, confessions of embezzlement, made by the principal after his dismissal, cannot be given in evidence if the surety be sued on the bond;<sup>3</sup> though entries made by the principal in the course of his duty, or whereby he has charged himself with the receipt of money, will, at least after his death, be received as proof against the surety.<sup>4</sup>

default of the former, gives him notice of the pendency of the suit and requests him to defend it; for here, if judgment goes against the surety, the record is conclusive evidence for him, in a subsequent action against the principal for indemnity, inasmuch as the principal has thus virtually become a party to the suit. This view of the law is at least in accordance with a ruling of Lord Kenyon, which cannot be supported on any other ground. A sheriff had brought an action against the surety of his bailiff, who had kept back some money which he had received; and his lordship held, that a written admission by the bailiff of the receipt of this money was evidence against the surety, as the bailiff was substantially the defendant in the action.<sup>1</sup>

§ 712.<sup>2</sup> The admissions of one person are also evidence against another, in respect of privity between them. The term privity denotes mutual or successive relationship to the same rights of property; and privies are distributed in several classes, according to the manner of this relationship. Thus, there are privies in estate,—as, donor and donee, lessor and lessee, joint-tenants, and successive bishops, rectors, and vicars: privies in blood,—as, heir and ancestor, and coparceners; privies in representation,—as, executors and testators, administrators and intestates; privies in law,—where the law, without privity of blood or estate, takes the land from one and bestows it upon another, as by escheat. All these are more generally classed into privies in estate, privies in blood, and privies in law.<sup>3</sup> The ground, upon which admissions bind those in privity with the party making them, is, that they are identified in interest; and of course the rule extends no further than this identity. The cases of coparceners, and of joint-tenants, are assimilated to those of joint promissors, partners, and others having a joint interest, which have already been considered.<sup>4</sup> In other cases, where the party by his admissions has qualified his own right, and another claims to succeed him, as heir, executor, or the like, the latter succeeds only to the right as thus qualified at the time when his title commenced; and the admissions are receivable in evidence against the representative, in the same manner as they would have been against the party represented.<sup>1</sup> Thus, the declarations of the ancestor, that he held the land as the tenant of a third person, are admissible to show the seisin of that person, in an action brought by him against the heir for the land.<sup>2</sup> And the declarations of an intestate are admissible against his administrator, or any other claiming in his right;<sup>3</sup> but it has been held, that the declarations of an executor, though made while he was acting in that capacity, are not admissible against a special administrator, who has been appointed in consequence of the executor's protracted absence from England.<sup>4</sup>

to the rector, it was held, in an action for similar tithes brought by a succeeding rector against owners, who had purchased their lands from the parties to the former suit, that the answer was strong evidence in favour of the plaintiff.<sup>1</sup> So, ancient maps, books of survey, and the like, though mere private documents, are frequently admissible on this ground, where a privy in estate exists between the former proprietor under whose direction they were made, and the present claimant against whom they are offered.<sup>2</sup> The declarations, also, of former owners or occupiers, made while in possession, have been admitted as evidence of the nature and extent of their title, against those claiming in privy of estate.<sup>3</sup>

§ 714. The question how far the admissions of tenants may be received in evidence against their landlords is not very distinctly ascertained; but, although in one case at Nisi Prius it has been held, that the receipts of a lessee of vicarial tithes were evidence, in proof of a modus, against the vicar, by reason of the privy between them;<sup>4</sup> and though in an action of ejectment, the admission of the tenant in possession will, from the peculiar nature of the proceedings, be evidence against one who defends as landlord:<sup>5</sup> yet it seems that, in general, the naked declarations of a tenant will not be evidence against the reversioner;<sup>6</sup> and it has been expressly held, that the declarations of a former occupier of the defendant's land were not admissible against him, on an issue whether the plaintiff had an easement in such land.<sup>7</sup>

§ 715.<sup>1</sup> The same principle holds in regard to admissions made by the assignor of a personal contract or chattel previous to the assignment, where the assignee must recover through the title of the assignor, and succeeds only to that title as it stood at the time of its transfer. In such case, he is bound by the previous admissions of the assignor in disparagement of his own apparent title. But this is true only where an identity of interest exists between the assignor and assignee; and such identity is deemed to exist, not only where the latter is either expressly or impliedly the mere agent and representative of the former,<sup>2</sup> but also where the assignee has acquired a title with actual notice of the true state of that of the assignor as qualified by the admissions in question, or where he has purchased a demand already stale, or otherwise infected with circumstances of suspicion.

§ 716.<sup>3</sup> Thus, in an action by the indorsee of a bill or note, which has been taken by the plaintiff after it was due, or without consideration, and with notice of fraud in its original concoction, the declarations of the indorser, made while the interest was in him, are admissible in evidence for the defendant.<sup>4</sup> But, on the other hand, the declarations of a former holder of a note, showing that it was given without consideration, though made while he held the note, are not admissible against the indorsee, to whom the instrument has been transferred on good consideration, and before it was overdue; for such an indorsee derives his title from the nature of the instrument itself, and not through the previous holder; and, as Mr. Justice Parke properly observed, "the right of a person, holding by a good title, is not to be cut down by the acknowledgment of a former holder, that he had no title."<sup>5</sup> In applying this rule, a note payable on demand, though not negotiated for some time after its date, will not on that account be treated as a note taken by an indorsee when over due; for such notes are intended to be continuing securities, and may circulate for years without exciting suspicion.<sup>1</sup> Neither will the circumstance that the declarations of the prior holder would, if received, prove his fraud in connection with the indorsee, render them admissible against the latter; because all preliminary facts, which are necessary to establish the admissibility of evidence, must be proved aliundè, before such evidence is received.<sup>2</sup>

§ 717. The case of Ivat v. Finch<sup>3</sup> appears to have been decided partly on the same principle. That was an action of trespass for taking three mares, the property of the plaintiff. The defendant, who was lord of the manor, justified under a heriot custom; and the sole question between the parties was, whether one Alice Watson, the tenant, was possessed of the mares at the time of her death. The plaintiff contended that she had given them to him some time before, and tendered in evidence her declarations to that effect. These were rejected at the trial, but the court above held that they were admissible, as they were against her interest, and the right of the lord depended upon her title. But where the fact of this dependence is not directly raised by the issue, such declarations will be inadmissible; and therefore, in Stotherd v. James,<sup>4</sup> where an issue was directed to try whether goods seized in A.'s house at the suit of the defendant were the property of the plaintiff, the declarations of A. respecting the property were rejected as evidence; because on that narrow issue the defendant would succeed, whether the goods belonged to A. or to any other person besides the plaintiff. Had the issue raised the question, whether the goods belonged to A. at the time of the execution, it would seem, on principle, that his declarations made before the seizure would have been evidence against the defendant; though, on an issue similar to that which was raised in Stotherd

v. James, Mr. Justice Wightman is reported to have rejected the debtor's admissions, on the dubious ground that the execution creditor claimed adversely to him.<sup>1</sup> In the case of Cooler v. Braham,<sup>2</sup> the Barons of the Exchequer, while they doubted the doctrine propounded by Mr. Justice Wightman, and intimated an opinion that, in an interpleader suit, the execution creditor should be considered as claiming under the debtor, held that the admissions of the debtor would only be evidence against the execution creditor, when they qualified or affected the debtor's title to the chattels in question; and, therefore, on an interpleader issue between the holder of a bill of sale and the execution creditor, where the question raised was the usual one of fraud in the concoction of the bill of sale, the court determined that the plaintiff could not support the genuineness of the instrument, by giving evidence of an admission by the debtor of a debt due from him to the plaintiff, though such admission was made prior to the assignment, it having also been made in the absence of the defendant.

§ 718.<sup>3</sup> These admissions by third persons, as they derive their legal force from the relation of the party making them to the property in question, may be proved by any witness who heard them, without calling the party by whom they were made. The question is, whether he made the admission, and not merely whether the fact is as he admitted it to be. Its truth, where the admission is not conclusive,—and it seldom is so,—may be controverted by other testimony, and even by calling the party himself; but it is not necessary to produce him, for his declarations, when admissible at all, will be received as original evidence, and not as hearsay.<sup>4</sup>

§ 719. With respect to the time and circumstances of the admission it may first be observed, that whenever the declarations of a third person are offered in evidence, on the ground that the party against whom they are tendered derives his title from the declarant, it must be shown that they were made at a time, when he had an interest in the property in question; because it is manifestly unjust, that a person who has parted with his interest in property, should be empowered to divest the right of another claiming under him, by any statement which he may choose to make.<sup>1</sup> Thus, the admission of a former party to a bill of exchange, made after he has negotiated it, cannot under any circumstances be received against the holder;<sup>2</sup> and where a person had, by a voluntary postnuptial settlement, conveyed away his interest in an estate, and afterwards had executed a mortgage of the same property, it was held, that his admission that money had actually been advanced upon the mortgage could not be received on behalf of the mortgagee, who was seeking to set aside the former settlement as voluntary and void.<sup>3</sup> So, also, the<sup>4</sup> declaration of a bankrupt, though good evidence to charge his estate with a debt, if made before his bankruptcy, is not admissible at all, if it were made afterwards.<sup>5</sup> This most just and equitable doctrine will be found to apply to the cases of vendor and vendee, grantor and grantee, and, generally, to all cases of rights acquired in good faith previous to the time of making the admission in question.<sup>6</sup>

impliedly made without prejudice, are excluded on grounds of public policy.<sup>1</sup> For without this protective rule, it would often be difficult to take any step towards an amicable compromise or adjustment, and as Lord Mansfield has observed, all men must be permitted to buy their peace, without prejudice to them should the offer not succeed; such offers being made to stop litigation, without regard to the question whether anything is due or not. If, therefore, the defendant, on being sued for 100*l.* should offer the plaintiff 20*l.*, and at the same time state that such offer was made without prejudice, this is not admissible in evidence, for it is irrelevant to the issue; it neither admits nor ascertains any debt, and is no more than saying that he would give 20*l.* to be rid of the action.<sup>2</sup> So, in equity, it has been held, that the giving of a small sum in order to obtain the release of a right, could not be considered as an acknowledgment that a right existed; it amounts only to this—"I give you so much for not seeking to disturb me."<sup>3</sup> Perhaps, also, an offer of compromise, the essence of which is that the party making it is willing to submit to a sacrifice, or to make a concession,<sup>4</sup> will be rejected, though nothing at the time was expressly said respecting its confidential character, if it clearly appear to have been made under the faith of a pending treaty, into which the party has been led by the confidence of an arrangement being effected;<sup>5</sup> though, in this case, if the admission be merely of a collateral or indifferent fact, such as the handwriting of a party, which is capable of easy proof by other means, and is not connected with the substantial merits of the cause, it will be received.<sup>6</sup> The American courts have held, that evidence of the admission of any independent fact is receivable, though made during a treaty of compromise.<sup>7</sup>

§ 721. In the absence of any express, or strongly implied, restriction as to confidence, an offer of compromise is clearly admissible as some evidence of liability;<sup>1</sup> and although the offer of a less sum than the amount demanded will not, in general, support a count on an account stated, since it may be a mere offer to purchase peace;<sup>2</sup>—nor, perhaps, will an offer by the drawer of a bill, who is threatened with legal proceedings upon it, to give another bill by way of settlement, obviate the necessity of proving at the trial that he has received due notice of dishonour;<sup>3</sup> yet there are occasions,—as for instance, if the drawer of a bill, whose signature is in issue, has proposed a settlement,—when the fact of an offer having been made may be entitled to considerable weight.<sup>4</sup> In the case of Thomas v. Morgan,<sup>5</sup> however, where the defendant was sued for keeping mischievous dogs, which had killed three of the plaintiff's cattle, and it appeared that on being told of the injury done by them he had offered to settle for it, the court held, that though this was a fact, which in strictness should have been submitted to the jury, as evidence of the scienter,<sup>6</sup> it was entitled to little, if any, weight, “as it might have been made from motives of charity without any admission of liability at all.” They therefore refused a new trial, though the question, whether the offer of compromise was not an admission of the defendant's liability, had not in point of fact been left to the jury, the attention of the judge at Nisi Prius not having been drawn to that particular point. After what has been said above, authorities need scarcely be cited to show, that admissions made before an arbitrator are receivable in a subsequent trial of the cause, the reference having proved ineffectual.<sup>7</sup>

§ 722. Before leaving this subject one word of caution may be added respecting a man's purchasing peace, where his conduct, though strictly upright and honourable, may be subjected to misinterpretation. Such a course is always pusillanimous, seldom gains its immediate object, and, if it fails, may be productive of irreparable injury to character. The counsel of a man who has once lent himself to such an arrangement, may feebly urge that he was actuated by motives of charity and benevolence; but the opponent will more loudly and successfully contend that his behaviour amounts to proof of a consciousness of misconduct; and the judge, while he rejects both these interpretations, will perform no easy task, should he induce the jury to ascribe it to the infirmity of one, who was reluctant to have his character and conduct questioned, and his name bandied about in the public papers. "Let this action," said Lord Ellenborough,—when Sir William Scott was sued for illegally excommunicating one Beaurain, whose animosity he had endeavoured to stifle by a gift,—“Let this action be a lesson for all men to stand boldly forward—to stand on their characters—and not, by compromising a present difficulty, to accumulate imputations on their honour.”<sup>1</sup>

§ 723.<sup>2</sup> In regard to admissions made under circumstances of constraint, the rule of law is this, that they cannot be received when obtained by illegal duress;<sup>3</sup> but that they are admissible, at least on the trial of civil actions,<sup>4</sup> if the compulsion under which they were made was legal. Thus affidavits sworn by a party in former legal proceedings, answers filed by him in Chancery in a former suit, evidence given by him in an action at law, or his examination taken in bankruptcy, will be evidence against himself in a subsequent cause; and this, too, though his subsequent opponent was a stranger to the prior proceeding,<sup>1</sup>—though he himself might, had he thought fit, have successfully demurred to the questions,<sup>2</sup>—though they were irrelevant to the matter before the court at the time of his examination, and were put to him for the purpose of procuring evidence in an action depending against him,<sup>3</sup>—and though he had no opportunity of fully explaining the testimony he had given. This last point may be illustrated by the case of Collett v. Lord Keith,<sup>4</sup> where in an action for taking the plaintiff's ship, the testimony of the defendant, given as a witness in an action between other parties, in which he admitted the taking of the ship, was allowed to be proved against him; though it appeared that, in giving his evidence, when he was proceeding to state his reasons for taking the ship, the judge had stopped him by saying that it was unnecessary for him to vindicate his conduct. The manner in which the evidence had been obtained was matter of observation to the jury; but as what was said bore directly on the issue, it could not be excluded as evidence of the fact. So, where a defendant had been examined before commissioners of bankrupts, and, though the whole of what he said had not been taken down, the portion that was reduced to writing had been read over and signed by him, this was held to be receivable against him as a statement of facts, the truth of which he had admitted.<sup>5</sup>

§ 724. It has been said that an admission, obtained under a compulsory examination, will not be evidence of an account stated; but the case in which this point arose, probably rests on the ground that the admission was there made to a third party,<sup>6</sup> while to support an account stated the admission must be made, either to the person to whom the money is owing, or to some one

sent by him.<sup>1</sup> If, therefore, the admission were contained in an answer to a bill in equity, which is clearly an answer to the plaintiff in the suit, it would most probably be regarded as good evidence of an account stated.<sup>2</sup>

§ 725.<sup>3</sup> Passing now to a consideration of the nature of admissions, it may be observed that no difference exists, in regard to their inadmissibility, between direct admissions, and those which are incidental, or made in some other connexion, or involved in the admission of some other fact. One or two cases illustrative of this rule have already been noticed, while treating of admissions made by attorneys;<sup>4</sup> but it may here be added, that in an action by the assignees of a bankrupt against an auctioneer, to recover the proceeds of a sale of the bankrupt's goods, the defendant's advertisement of the sale, in which he described the goods as "the property of D., a bankrupt," was held to be a conclusive admission that D. was a bankrupt, and that the defendant was acting under his assignees.<sup>5</sup> So, where a party, with a view of suing out a commission of bankruptcy against a trader, made an affidavit that the trader owed him 100*l.*, and was become bankrupt, he was not allowed afterwards to dispute the bankruptcy, when he was himself sued in trover by the assignees of the bankrupt, appointed under a second commission, for the price of some flour which he had clandestinely received from the trader, and applied to the discharge of his own debt.<sup>6</sup>

§ 726.<sup>7</sup> Other admissions are implied from assumed character; for, whenever the existence of any domestic, social, or official relation is in issue, any recognition, whether by word or deed, of that relation, is prima facie evidence of its existence, as against the person making such recognition.<sup>1</sup> This rule is more frequently applied against a person, who has recognised the character or office of another; but it embraces, in its principle, any representation or language in regard to himself. Thus, to illustrate the second branch of the rule first, where one has assumed to act in an official character, this is an admission of his appointment or title to the office, so far as to render him liable, even criminally, for misconduct or neglect in such office.<sup>2</sup> This doctrine has been held to apply, among other cases, to actions or prosecutions against clergymen, for non-residence;<sup>3</sup> against military officers, for returning false musters;<sup>4</sup> against popish priests, for remaining forty days within the kingdom, when this was considered an offence of no less magnitude than high treason;<sup>5</sup> against letter-carriers for embezzlement;<sup>6</sup> and against attorneys,<sup>7</sup> toll-gatherers,<sup>8</sup> and collectors, for penalties.<sup>9</sup>

§ 727. So, under the first branch of the rule, where one has recognised the official character of another, by treating with him in such character or otherwise, this is at least prima facie evidence of his title against the party thus recognising it.<sup>10</sup> For instance, where a person had received credit from the renter of turnpike tolls, and had afterwards accounted with him in that character, and made him a partial payment, he was not permitted to question the legality of his appointment;<sup>11</sup> and where a farmer-general of post-horse duties brought an action for certain statute penalties against a person who let out horses for hire, proof of his appointment was waived, the defendant having previously accounted with him as farmer-general.<sup>1</sup> So, the clerk of the trustees of a turnpike road has not been allowed to show, that a person who had acted as one of the trustees, and had been treated as such by himself, while clerk, was not duly qualified ;<sup>2</sup> and in an action by the trustee of a bankrupt against a debtor, who has made him a partial payment,<sup>3</sup> or has acknowledged his title in letters to the solicitor under the bankruptcy,<sup>4</sup> the plaintiff need not prove his title as trustee, though notice to dispute it has been given. Again, where an attorney brought an action against a defendant for defamation, in charging him with swindling, and threatening to have him struck off the rolls, this threat was held to imply an admission that the plaintiff was an attorney ;<sup>5</sup> and in a similar action brought by a physician, where the plaintiff was spoken of as " Doctor L.," and the defendant, who was an apothecary, had made up medicines prescribed by him, the Court of Common Pleas was equally divided upon the question, whether the defendant's words and conduct amounted to an acknowledgment of the plaintiff's character.<sup>6</sup> In actions of this kind, however, if the words complained of charge a want of qualification and not mere misconduct, the plaintiff must prove that he possesses the character which has been impugned, for the slander in such case does not admit it.<sup>7</sup>

§ 728. The case of Lipscombe v. Holmes<sup>8</sup> affords a good example of both branches of the rule in question. That was an action for work and labour as a surgeon ; and the defence was that the plaintiff was a physician, and therefore incapable, by the law then in force,<sup>9</sup> of maintaining an action for fees. It was shown that he had written prescriptions and signed himself M.D., upon which Lord Ellenborough was on the point of nonsuiting him, saying that "if a person passes himself off as a physician, he must take the character cum onere." It appearing, however, that the defendant had paid money into court, his lordship thought that this act removed the objection, being tantamount to an admission of the plaintiff's right to sue as a surgeon.

§ 729.<sup>1</sup> Admissions implied from the conduct of the party are governed by the same principles; and although this class of admissions has already been adverted to, while treating of the law of presumptions,<sup>2</sup> it deserves further illustration in this place. Thus, an attempt by a plaintiff to suborn false witnesses is cogent evidence, in the nature of an admission by conduct, that his cause is an unrighteous one.<sup>3</sup> So, the suppression of documents is an admission that their contents were deemed unfavourable to the party suppressing them.<sup>4</sup> The entry of a charge to a particular person in a tradesman's book, or the making out of a bill of parcels in his name, is an admission that the goods were furnished on his credit.<sup>5</sup> The delivery, too, by a tradesman, of an invoice or account in which goods are described as bought from him, is strong, but not conclusive evidence, that he was the real vendor.<sup>6</sup> The omission of a claim by an insolvent in a schedule of the debts due to him given on oath, is an admission that it is not due; though whether it amounts to a conclusive admission may be a question of some doubt.<sup>1</sup> Payment of money is an admission against the payer, that the receiver is the proper person to receive it; but not against the receiver, that the payer was the person who was bound to pay it; for the party receiving payment of a just demand may well assume, without inquiry, that the party tendering the money was the person legally bound to pay it.<sup>2</sup>

§ 730. Relief given at various times to a pauper while residing in another parish, is cogent, though not conclusive, evidence that he is settled in the relieving parish;<sup>3</sup> and even a single instance of such relief having been given will warrant a similar conclusion.<sup>4</sup> Of course the effect of such evidence will be much stronger, if the examination states a distinct head of settlement in the relieving parish, though the technical proof may fail to establish it satisfactorily.<sup>5</sup> On the other hand, the relief of a pauper, while residing in the relieving parish, is no evidence whatever of a settlement, however frequently it may have been bestowed;<sup>6</sup> but this rule rests, not so much on the absence of any presumption deducible from the conduct of the relieving parish, as on the impolicy of permitting such evidence to have

§ 731. A distinct promise by the drawer to pay, or indeed any acknowledgment by him of liability upon, a dishonoured bill,—as, for example, the suffering judgment by default in a prior action, brought by a former holder of the instrument,—will raise an inference that he has either received or waived due notice of dishonour,<sup>2</sup> and in the case of a foreign bill, that it has been duly protested;<sup>3</sup> and a jury will be justified in coming to the same conclusion on less positive evidence; as, for instance, if the drawer, in disclaiming liability when threatened with an action, did not rest his defence on the want of notice, but on some different ground.<sup>4</sup> The maxim, expressum facit cessare tacitum, will here raise a presumption, which a defendant may find it difficult to rebut. amount to an acknowledgment of the tenancy on the part of the lessor, and will consequently waive the forfeiture;<sup>1</sup> though, if the breach be a continuing one, as the using rooms in a prohibited manner, or the omitting to keep premises insured or repaired, the acceptance of rent after such breach will not waive the forfeiture incurred by subsequent user or omission.<sup>2</sup> A notice to quit will also in general be regarded as waived, if the landlord accepts rent subsequently accruing due, or puts in a distress for such rent, or does any other act amounting to a recognition of an existing tenancy, after the expiration of the time when the tenant ought to have quitted according to the notice.<sup>3</sup> Whether a simple demand of rent subsequently accruing due, or the bringing of an action for such rent, will operate as a waiver of a notice to quit, is a question not of law, but of fact, which must consequently be determined by the jury.<sup>4</sup> And here it must be remembered that, as a notice to quit has the legal effect of determining a tenancy, the waiver of such notice does not revive the tenancy thus determined, but creates a new one.<sup>5</sup>

§ 731 A. The doctrine of implied waiver, as applicable to the law of landlord and tenant, is not now recognised in Ireland, the Act of 23 & 24 V., c. 154, having expressly enacted, in § 43, that where any lease, made after the 1st of January, 1861, shall contain or imply any condition, covenant, or agreement to be observed or performed on the part of the tenant, no act done or suffered by the landlord shall be deemed a dispensation therewith, or a waiver of the benefit of the same in respect of any breach thereof, unless such dispensation or waiver shall be sig-

§ 732. The class of admissions now under discussion has, however, on another occasion, been partially recognised by the Legislature, which, for the sake of promoting substantial justice, has drawn conclusive inferences from particular conduct. Thus, when a lease granted under a power is invalid by reason of some deviation from the terms of the power, the acceptance of rent under it is, by virtue of the Act of 13 & 14 V., c. 17, § 2, deemed a confirmation of the lease as against the person accepting the rent; provided such person, or some one else by his authority, shall, before or at the time of accepting the rent, sign a receipt, memorandum, or note in writing, confirming such lease.

§ 733.<sup>1</sup> Admissions may also be implied from the acquiescence of the party. But acquiescence, to have the effect of an admission, must exhibit some act of the mind, and amount to voluntary demeanour or conduct of the party.<sup>2</sup> And whether it be acquiescence in the conduct or in the language of others, it must plainly appear that such conduct was fully known, or such language fully understood, by the party, before any inference can be drawn from his passiveness or silence.<sup>3</sup> The circumstances, too, must be not only such as afforded him an opportunity to act or to speak, but such also as would properly and naturally call for some action or reply from men similarly situated.<sup>4</sup> Thus, where a landlord quietly suffers a tenant to expend money in making alterations and improvements on the premises, it is evidence of his consent to the alterations;<sup>5</sup> though the mere lying by and passively witnessing a breach of covenant for several years, is not such an acquiescence as to amount to a waiver of the forfeiture.<sup>1</sup> Again, if a tenant, on personally receiving notice to quit on a particular day, makes no objection, he will generally, in England,<sup>2</sup> be deemed to have admitted that his tenancy expires on that day;<sup>3</sup> but if he cannot read, or even if he did not read the notice in the presence of the person serving it upon him, it will be treated as a notice not personally served,<sup>4</sup> and will go for nothing.<sup>5</sup> Thus, also, a trader being inquired for, and hearing himself denied, may thereby commit an act of bankruptcy;<sup>6</sup> and, in general, where one knowingly avails himself of another's acts done for his benefit, the jury will be justified in considering such conduct as an admission of his obligation to pay a reasonable compensation.<sup>7</sup> So, in settlement law, where two brothers, claiming derivative settlements from their father, were removed by successive orders, and the examination of the father proving his settlement was served upon the appellants together with the first order, against which there was no appeal, the fact of the appellants not objecting to the ground of removal when they received the first son, was held to be some slight evidence of an admission that the father was settled in their parish; and, consequently, although on an appeal

<sup>2</sup> In Ireland, however, the law is in part regulated by § 6 of 23 & 24 V., c. 154, which enacts, that "every tenancy from year to year shall be presumed to have commenced on the last gale day of the calendar year on which rent has become due and payable in respect of the premises, until it shall appear to the contrary." § 734. The raising an objection to one item of an account, no remark being made as to the rest, will be evidence of an account stated as to those items to which no objection has been made;<sup>3</sup> and, among merchants, an account rendered will be regarded as allowed, if it be not objected to within a second or third post,<sup>4</sup> or, at least, if it be kept for any length of time without making an objection.<sup>5</sup> With respect to ordinary accounts, however, a distinction has been taken in Ireland between such as are sent by post, and those delivered by hand; and it has been held that the former, though kept by the party to whom they were sent without observation, are not admissible against him, as evidence that he had acquiesced in their contents.<sup>6</sup> In the case where this point was determined, Chief Justice Bushe remarked, that what a party says upon an account furnished to him, or upon a statement made in his presence, may be given in evidence against him along with the account or statement, because what is thus offered is the act or declaration of the party to be affected by it, and the account or the statement is by reference made a part of such act or declaration; but the naked fact that an account remains in the possession of a party to whom it was sent, cannot amount to an acquiescence in its contents. His lordship added, that the admission of such evidence would countenance the notion, that a man might, by furnishing an account claiming a balance against his creditor, establish an acquittance for himself.<sup>7</sup> has been partially recognised in England. "What is said to a man before his face," observed Lord Tenterden in Fairlie v. Denton,<sup>1</sup> "he is in some degree called on to contradict, if he does not acquiesce in it ;<sup>2</sup> but the not answering a letter is quite different ; and it is too much to say, that a man, by omitting to answer a letter at all events, admits the truth of the statements that letter contains." Lord Denman, also, in a later case, declared, that "it was a great deal too broad a proposition to say, that every paper which a man might hold, purporting to charge him with a debt or liability, was evidence against him if he produced it."<sup>3</sup> In Gaskill v. Skeene,<sup>4</sup> however, the Court of Queen's Bench subsequently held, that letters containing a demand, written to a defendant, and unanswered by him, were admissible in evidence for the plaintiff, though they also stated facts showing how the demand arose ; but possibly that case rested on the ground, that the defendant had made some unsatisfactory statements respecting these letters, in a subsequent conversation with the plaintiff's agent. On this last ground unanswered letters written to a party have been admitted as evidence in America.<sup>5</sup>

§ 736. Letters and other papers found in a party's possession will occasionally, in a civil suit, be evidence against him, as raising an inference that he knows their contents and has acted upon them ;<sup>6</sup> and they are frequently received in criminal prosecutions, especially those for conspiracy and treason, though their weight, as evidence against the prisoner, will in a great measure depend on the fact, whether answers to them can be traced, or whether anything can be shown to have been done upon them.<sup>7</sup> So,<sup>8</sup> also, the opportunity of constant access to documents may sometimes, by raising a presumption that their contents are known, afford ground for affecting parties with an implied admission of the truth or correctness of such contents. Thus the rules of a club, or a record of the proceedings of a society, contained in a book kept by the proper officer and accessible to the members,<sup>1</sup>—charges against a club, entered by the servants of the house in a book kept for that purpose open in the club-room,<sup>2</sup> and the like,—are admissible against the members; their knowledge of the contents of the books, and their acquiescence therein, being presumable under the circumstances. On similar grounds, books of account which have been kept between master and servant, tradesman and shopman, banker and customer, or co-partners, will occasionally be admitted as evidence even in favour of the party by whom they have been written, provided that the opposite party has had ample opportunities for testing from time to time the accuracy of the entries.<sup>3</sup>

§ 737.<sup>4</sup> But in regard to admissions inferred from acquiescence in the oral statements of others, the maxim, Qui tacet consentire videtur, is to be applied with careful discrimination. “Nothing,” it has been observed, “can be more dangerous than this kind of evidence. It should always be received with caution: and never ought to be received at all, unless the evidence is of direct declarations of that kind, which naturally calls for contradiction; some assertions made to the party with respect to his right, which by his silence he acquiesces in.”<sup>5</sup> A distinction has accordingly been taken between declarations made by a party interested and those made by a stranger; and while what one party declares to the other without contradiction is admissible evidence, what is said to a party by a third person may well be inadmissible. It may be impertinent, and best rebuked by silence.<sup>1</sup> Still less will statements made by strangers in the presence of a party be receivable against him, if they be not directly addressed to him; because, in such case, he can scarcely under any circumstances be called upon to interfere. Therefore, where in a real action, upon a view of the premises by a jury, one of the chainbearers was the owner of a neighbouring close, respecting the bounds of which the litigating parties had much altercation, their declarations in his presence were held inadmissible against him, in a subsequent action respecting his own close.<sup>2</sup>

§ 738. Moreover, to affect one person with the statements of others, on the ground of his implied admission of their truth by silent acquiescence, it is not enough that they were made in his presence, or even to himself, by parties interested, but they must also have been made on an occasion, when a reply from him might be properly expected.<sup>3</sup> Depositions, therefore, taken in the presence of a party during a judicial investigation, observations made by a magistrate to the parties before him, and confessions of an accomplice criminating his co-prisoner before the justices, will not in general<sup>4</sup> be evidence in any subsequent trial, whether civil or criminal, against the party who heard them in silence; because in judicial inquiries a regularity of proceeding is adopted, which often prevents a person from interfering when and how he pleases, as he naturally would do in a common conversation.<sup>5</sup> The same inferences cannot, therefore, be drawn from his silence or his conduct on such occasions, as might reasonably result from

<sup>4</sup> This cannot be laid down as a strict rule of law applicable on all occasions; for as Ld. Denman observed, in Simpson v. Robinson, 12 Q. B. 512, "cases may certainly be conceived, in which a party, by not denying a charge made against him in a court of justice, may possibly afford strong proof that the imputation is just." See R. v. Coyle, 7 Cox, 74.

similar behaviour, were he under no restraint; and as it is only for the sake of these inferences that the statements of other parties can ever be admitted, they are properly rejected whenever they do not warrant the inferences sought to be drawn from them. A similar distinction has been recognised in the civil law, by which "confessio facta seu præsumpta ex taciturnitate in aliquo iudicio, non nocebit in alio."<sup>1</sup>

§ 739. If, however, the statement of one person calls forth a reply from another, such statement may then be read in conjunction with the reply, and will become evidence against the party replying so far as the answer directly or indirectly admits its truth; and it will make no difference in the application of this rule, whether the words were spoken by an interested party or a stranger,—whether they were addressed or not to the party replying,—or whether they fell from the parties, the witnesses, or the court, in a judicial proceeding, or were uttered during the course of an ordinary conversation.<sup>2</sup>

§ 740.<sup>3</sup> But the silence of the party, even where the declarations are addressed to himself, at a time too when he is at full liberty to reply as he thinks fit, is, at best, worth very little as evidence of acquiescence;<sup>4</sup> and if he has no means of knowing the truth or falsehood of the statement, the fact that he did not in terms deny it is almost valueless.<sup>5</sup> In all these cases it must be distinctly remembered, that the statement made in the party's presence or hearing<sup>6</sup> is not evidence against him, but his own conduct in consequence of such statement is the sole evidence. often make mistakes on this subject ; but it is highly important that the distinction should be observed.<sup>1</sup>

§ 741.<sup>2</sup> The effect of admissions, when proved, must next be considered ; and with regard to their conclusiveness, it is first to be observed, that the policy of the law favours the investigation of truth by all expedient methods ; and that the doctrine of estoppels, by which further investigation is precluded, being an exception to the general rule, and being adopted only for the sake of general convenience, and for the prevention of fraud, is not to be extended beyond the reasons on which it is founded.<sup>3</sup> It is also to be observed, that estoppels bind only parties and privies ; and not strangers. Hence it follows that a sheriff, who, being armed with a writ of execution in favour of a creditor, seizes goods as the property of the debtor, is not bound by an estoppel which would have prevented the debtor himself from claiming the goods.<sup>4</sup> Neither, as it seems, would the trustee of a bankrupt be bound by the bankrupt's written admissions, because the court would regard the trustee as claiming adversely to the bankrupt.<sup>5</sup> Again, though a stranger may often rely on an admission, which parties or privies might have specially pleaded by way of estoppel, yet, in his case it is only matter of evidence to be considered by the jury. This subject was very clearly illustrated by Mr. Justice Bayley, in the case of Heane v. Rogers,<sup>6</sup> which was an action of trover, brought by a person, who had been declared a bankrupt, against his assignees, to recover the value of goods, which, as assignees, they had sold. The defendants contended that the plaintiff was estopped from bringing this action, as, in addition to other evidence of his acquiescence in their title, it appeared that, after the issuing of the commission, he had given notice to the lessors of a farm which he held, that he had become bankrupt, and was willing to give up the lease, whereupon the lessors accepted the lease, and took possession of the premises. The question, therefore, was, whether he was precluded by this surrender from disputing the commission in the present suit.

§ 742. On this point the language of the learned judge was as follows :—"There is no doubt but that the express admissions of a party to the suit, or admissions implied from his conduct, are evidence, and strong evidence, against him ; but we think that he is at liberty to prove that such admissions were mistaken or were untrue, and is not estopped or concluded by them, unless another person has been induced by them to alter his condition ; in such a case the party is estopped from disputing their truth with respect to that person (and those claiming under him), and that transaction ; but as to third persons he is not bound. It is a well established rule of law, that estoppels bind only parties and privies, not strangers.<sup>1</sup> The offer of surrender made in this case was to a stranger to this suit ; and though the bankrupt may have been bound by his representation that he was a bankrupt, and his acting as such, as between him and the stranger to whom that representation was made, and who acted upon it, he is not bound as between him and the defendants, who did not act on the faith of that representation at all. The bankrupt would probably not have been permitted, as against his landlords,—whom he had induced to accept the lease without a formal surrender in writing, and to take possession, upon the supposition that he was a bankrupt, and entitled under 6 G. 4, c. 16, § 75, to give it up,—to say afterwards that he was not a bankrupt, and bring an action of trover for the lease, or an ejectment for the estate. To that extent he would have been bound, probably no further, and certainly not as to any other persons than those landlords. This appears to us to be the rule of law, and we are of opinion that the bankrupt was not by law, by his notice and offer to surrender, estopped; and indeed it would be a great hardship if he were precluded by such an act. It is admitted that his surrender to his commissioners is no estoppel, because it would be very perilous to a bankrupt to dispute the commission, and to try its validity by refusing to surrender.<sup>1</sup> A similar observation, though not to the same extent, applies to this act; for whilst his commission disables him from carrying on his business, and deprives him for the present of the means of occupying his farm with advantage, it would be a great loss to the bankrupt to continue tenant; paying a rent and remaining liable to the covenants of the lease, and deriving no adequate benefit; and it cannot be expected that he should incur such a loss, in order to be enabled to dispute his commission with effect. It is reasonable that he should do the best for himself in the unfortunate situation in which he is placed."

§ 743. The doctrine propounded in Heane v. Rogers,<sup>2</sup> that a party is always at liberty to prove that his admissions were founded on mistake, unless his opponent has been induced by them to alter his condition, is as applicable to mistakes in respect of legal liability, as to those in respect of matters of fact.<sup>3</sup> In all cases, therefore, of this nature, the jury, with the view of estimating the effect due to an admission, will be justified in considering the circumstances under which it was made; and if it should appear to have been made under an erroneous notion of legal liability, they may qualify its effect accordingly.<sup>4</sup>

§ 744. In a former part of this work, we have treated of estoppels by deed, alluded to those by record, and discussed that particular class of estoppels in pais, which relates to the rights of landlord and tenant;<sup>5</sup> and in the present chapter it has already been shown that admissions solemnly made in the course of judicial proceedings, whether as a substitute for regular proof, or in a case stated for the opinion of the court, are, on motives of policy and justice, deemed to be conclusive.<sup>1</sup> It remains, then, only to examine the law as it regards other conclusive admissions; and these will, in general, be found to range themselves under one or other of the following heads. First, admissions expressly or tacitly made by pleadings; secondly, admissions which have been acted upon by others. To these may be added a few cases of fraud and illegality, and some admissions on oath, where the party is estopped on grounds of public policy.

§ 745. With respect to admissions by pleading, it was at one time thought that a party might, by bringing an action on a contract, estop himself from denying the obligatory force of the agreement in a subsequent action against himself. In conformity with this view of the law, a strong opinion was expressed by Chief Justice Tindal, in the case of the Fishmongers' Company v. Robertson,<sup>2</sup> that if a corporation were to enter into an executory contract, which was invalid against themselves for not being under seal, and were then to sue thereon, this would amount to an admission on record, that such contract was duly entered into on their part, so as to be obligatory on them; and such admission would estop them in a cross action, from setting up an objection that it was not sealed by their common seal. The doctrine, thus propounded, has on several occasions been brought under the notice of the courts; but although it is unquestionably based on substantial justice, it has hitherto met with little favour, and will probably ere long be expressly overruled.<sup>3</sup> The law, as at present understood, seems to be, that the statements which are contained in a declaration or plea, though binding on the party making them for all purposes in the cause, ought not to be regarded in any subsequent action as admissions of the truth of the facts stated.<sup>4</sup>

§ 746. Still less will any admission, which has been incidentally or tacitly made in pleading in one suit, estop the party who has made it from denying in another suit, where precisely the same matter is not litigated, the fact so admitted. For instance, where a plea to an action on a bond set out a corrupt agreement between the parties irrespective of the bond, and then went on to aver that the bond was given to secure, among other moneys, the sum mentioned in the said agreement; and the replication, tacitly admitting the corrupt agreement, traversed the fact of the bond having been given in consideration thereof, but the plaintiff failed on this issue; it was held, that the admission was available for the purpose of that suit only; and, consequently, the plaintiff was at liberty to dispute the corrupt nature of the agreement, in a subsequent action on a deed, which was signed by the defendant at the same time with the bond by way of collateral security.<sup>1</sup>

§ 747. Although, as a general rule, an admission made in one suit by pleading or omitting to plead, cannot conclusively bind the party in any subsequent suit, an exception to this rule must be recognised, where the second action is brought on a judgment recovered in the first. For example, if an executor or administrator confess judgment, or suffer it to go against him by default, he thereby admits assets in his hands, and is estopped to say the contrary in an action on such judgment, suggesting a devastavit.<sup>2</sup> Some proof must indeed be given that the assets have been wasted, in order to charge the executor or administrator personally in such a case; but the slightest evidence will suffice for this purpose; and the mere issuing of a writ of fieri facias, directed to the county where the action was laid, and a return of nulla bona thereto, has, for a long time past, been deemed evidence enough.<sup>3</sup> So, where, to an action against three executors, two had pleaded plene administraverunt, and the third had admitted assets to the amount of 383*l.*, the court held, that, in a subsequent action against the third executor, suggesting a devastavit, the plaintiff was entitled to recover, on proof that the 383*l.* had been deposited with bankers to the credit of the executorship account, and that the defendant, after judgment in the former action, had given the plaintiff a cheque for the amount, which was dishonoured, as not being signed by the co-executors.<sup>1</sup>

§ 748. The questions which usually arise with respect to admissions in pleading relate to their effect in the same suit; and here it may be laid down broadly,<sup>2</sup> that, whenever a material averment well pleaded is passed over by the adverse party without denial, whether it be by pleading in confession and avoidance, or by traversing some other matter, or by demurring in law, or by suffering judgment to go by default, it is thereby for the purpose of pleading, if not for the purpose of trial before the jury, conclusively admitted.<sup>3</sup> The proper understanding of this rule is the province of the special pleader; and in works on pleading a detailed explanation of its effects must be sought. Reference, however, may here be made to a few leading decisions whereby its general operation is defined; and, first, the rule operates only with respect to material allegations. A demurrer, therefore, admits no more than is well pleaded;<sup>4</sup> and, if a plea denies a particular fact alleged in the declaration, it does not thereby admit all the immaterial statements, which the pleader has chosen to introduce as part of the plaintiff's case.<sup>5</sup>

§ 749. Thus, where a declaration in assumpsit,—after stating that the defendants were owners of a vessel, on which the plaintiff caused to be shipped some potatoes to be carried by them, as owners of the vessel, to Liverpool; in consideration whereof, and of freight, they promised to carry the potatoes safely as aforesaid—alleged as a breach, that through their negligence the goods were damaged: it was held, that the general issue did not admit that the defendants were owners, so as to raise the inference that the captain was their agent, the allegation of ownership being regarded as immaterial. The declaration in this case would have been equally good had no such allegation been made; since the statement, that, in consideration of the plaintiff having shipped the goods, and of the freight, the defendants promised to carry them safely, would have been quite sufficient, when coupled with an averment that the goods were not safely carried, to have made a complete case of liability against the defendants.<sup>1</sup> So, in an action on a bond, conditioned to indemnify the plaintiff from all losses which he might sustain in consequence of becoming surety for a tax collector, the replication alleged that the collector had received a sum “exceeding 500*l.*,” and had omitted to pay it over; and then assigned as a breach that the plaintiff had been forced, by reason of such default, to pay a large sum, to wit, the sum of 500*l.*, to the receiver. The rejoinder simply traversed the fact of the plaintiff’s having been forced to pay the 500*l.*, or any part thereof; and it was contended for the plaintiff, that the defendant had thereby admitted the receipt of 500*l.* by the collector. The court, however, refused to put this construction on the pleadings; for, as the action was sustainable, if any sum had been received and improperly retained by the collector, the actual amount stated in the replication was immaterial, and was consequently not admitted by the defendant having pleaded over.<sup>2</sup> “It is impossible,” said Mr. Justice Coltman, in pronouncing the judgment of the court, “to contend that a party admits more by omitting to traverse an allegation, than the opposite party would

§ 750. Secondly, some difference of opinion prevails among the judges as to how far admissions on the record may have the effect of shifting the burthen of proof. The Barons of the Exchequer, and especially the late Mr. Baron Alderson, have urged that, “an admission on the record is merely a waiver of requiring proof of those parts of the record which are not denied, the party being content to rest his claim on the other facts in dispute; but if any inferences are to be drawn by the jury, they must have the facts from which such inferences are to be drawn proved like any other facts.”<sup>2</sup> This view of the law seems to rest, partly, on the ground that the pleadings are not before the jury, but only the issue;<sup>3</sup> partly, on a consideration of the old doctrine of protestation;<sup>4</sup> partly, on a somewhat forced argument, that if an admission on the record is to be taken as an admission for all purposes, it may be used for the purpose even of discrediting the witnesses;<sup>5</sup> but chiefly, on the injustice which, prior to the year 1852, might have been perpetrated, if a jury had been required to treat a particular fact as proved, which the party, by the rules of pleading then in force, had had no opportunity of denying.<sup>6</sup> As the injustice here alluded to can no longer be done,—since, in consequence of the Common Law Procedure Act of 1852,<sup>1</sup> plaintiffs as well as defendants can now traverse either the whole or any part of the pleadings of their adversaries,—the strength of Mr. Baron Alderson's reasoning is much impaired; and possibly the judges may, in consideration of this circumstance, be inclined to follow the court of Queen's Bench in holding, that “an admission made in the course of pleading, whether in express terms, or by omitting to traverse what has been before alleged, must be taken as an admission for all purposes regarding the issue arising from that pleading, whether the facts relate to the parties or to third persons, provided the allegation so admitted be material.”<sup>2</sup> The distinction between admissions for the purpose of pleading, and admissions for the purpose of trial, is so subtle as to be almost incapable of explanation;<sup>3</sup> and surely it requires no laboured argument to show, that rules of law—especially those which are to be enforced at Nisi Prius—ought to be as simple and clear as it is possible to make them. If not framed in this spirit, they not only cease to be of any practical value, but they become, in the language of Lord Denman, “a mockery, a delusion, and a snare.”

§ 751. However the learned judges may differ respecting the point now under discussion, the cases in which that difference was expressed, would seem to be respectively well decided, and to be reconcilable with each other. In Edmunds v. Groves,<sup>1</sup> and again in Smith v. Martin,<sup>2</sup> the declaration was by the indorsee against the maker of a note; the plea stated that the note was illegal in its inception, and that the plaintiff took it with knowledge of the illegality; the replication traversed the fact of knowledge: on these pleadings the Court of Exchequer held, that, as the declaration contained no averment negating knowledge of the illegality, but this was introduced for the first time in the plea, the defendant was bound to prove the plaintiff's knowledge;<sup>3</sup> and, indeed, the same decision would have been pronounced, had the court considered that the illegality alleged in the plea was by the replication conclusively admitted for all purposes, because the admission, or even the proof, of illegality could afford no presumption on the subject of knowledge.<sup>4</sup> Again, in Bingham v. Stanley,<sup>5</sup> the plea to a similar declaration averred, that the note was given for a gaming debt, and then went on to state, not that the plaintiff took it with knowledge, but that he held it without consideration; and the Court of Queen's Bench rightly determined, on a replication alleging that the note was indorsed for a good consideration, that the plaintiff was bound to prove that fact, in like manner as he would have been, had he replied de injuriâ, and the defendant had proved the illegality.<sup>6</sup> Here, the declaration contained an original averment of indorsement, which was an ambiguous phrase, and might mean, either an indorsement in fact, by writing the name on the note, or an indorsement for a valuable consideration. The defendant, by alleging illegality, had shown that the latter sense was the one which he intended to dispute, and the plaintiff, by averring in his replication that the note was indorsed for a valuable consideration, merely explained the original averment of indorsement contained in the declaration, and was consequently bound to prove an affirmative statement, which he had first made.<sup>1</sup> This explanation may, perhaps, be thought somewhat unsatisfactory; but it is the best that can be offered.

§ 752. Thirdly, the tacit admission of a material fact by pleading over and traversing some other material allegation, cannot operate in the cause to the prejudice of the party making it, if he succeeds on the issue raised by his traverse. This point was established in the case of Robins v. Lord Maidstone.<sup>2</sup> There, to a declaration on a promissory note, the defendant pleaded that the consideration was a sum less than the amount of the note, and that that sum had been paid. The replication traversed the payment, and the verdict was for the plaintiff. The question then arose, whether the plaintiff was entitled to the whole amount of the note, or to the sum alleged in the plea, and tacitly admitted by the replication, to have been the sole consideration. The court, in holding that the verdict must be entered for the entire amount, observed, that “if the defendant had proved the payment which he alleged, it would not have been competent to the plaintiff to prove that more had been advanced: if he wished to have done so he ought to have traversed the allegation that no more had been advanced, and perhaps, shown how much more. But where a plea consists of several material allegations, one of which is traversed and found for the plaintiff, there is an end of the plea altogether; and the defendant can take no advantage of that part which was not traversed. The defendant sustains no injury; for he has pleaded that which is false, viz., the payment. If in truth 200*l.* only was advanced, he should have so pleaded, adding a payment into court of the amount due; and then the plaintiff

<sup>2</sup> 4 Q. B. 811. See, also, Couling v. Cox, 6 Com. B. 721, where Wilde, C. J., laid down the law as follows:—“A plea traversing an allegation in a declaration, although not for all purposes nor in all events an admission of the material allegations in the declaration which it does not traverse, yet may be considered as a conditional admission, that is, as admitting the allegation not traversed, in case the plaintiff can prove the allegation traversed.” In the D. of Rutland v. Bagshaw, 14 Q. B. 891, this passage was cited with approbation, and the doctrine of a “conditional admission” was recognised and acted upon.

would have been obliged, either to take the sum paid in, with costs, in discharge of the action, or to have replied that more was due, at the peril of having a verdict against him if he failed to prove it.”<sup>1</sup>

§ 753. Fourthly, the omitting to traverse a material allegation so far admits it, that the party who thus pleads over cannot disprove it. Therefore, where, in trover for bales of silk, the defendant pleaded that A. was factor of the plaintiffs, and as such, before and at the time of the pledge mentioned in the plea, was intrusted by them with, and was in possession of, dock-warrants relating to the bales; that he delivered the dock-warrants to the defendant, and pledged with him the bales, as security for a loan which the defendant then advanced to him on the faith of the said dock-warrants; and that the defendant had no notice that the factor was not the actual owner; it was held that the plaintiffs, by simply traversing the allegation that the defendant advanced the money on the faith of the dock-warrants, were debarred from proving that the dock-warrants were not deposited at the time of the advance, and were not, in fact, then in existence.<sup>2</sup> The same point was ruled in Carter v. James, which has been already noticed on another point.<sup>3</sup> That case was an action on a bond, to which the defendant pleaded that an usurious agreement had been entered into between the plaintiff and himself, and that the bond had been given in consideration, among other things, of the said agreement. The replication traversed this last fact only, and the courts of Queen’s Bench and Exchequer both held, that, on these pleadings, the plaintiff was not at liberty to prove that the agreement was in reality not usurious, that fact not having been put in issue.<sup>4</sup> So, where to an action of trespass quare clausum fregit, the defendant pleaded that A., being seised in fee, granted a right of way by a lost deed, and the plaintiff replied that A. did not grant modo et formâ; the latter was not allowed to show that A. was not seised in fee, for the purpose of rebutting the presumption of the grant.<sup>1</sup> The case of Ridley v. Tindall<sup>2</sup> is not inconsistent with these authorities. There the defendant pleaded to an action of assumpsit, that he had paid, and the plaintiff had accepted, certain moneys in full satisfaction; and though the plaintiff merely traversed the acceptance in satisfaction, he was permitted to dispute the payment. This ruling was clearly correct; for as, unless the money were accepted, it would be, not a payment, but a tender only, the payment in satisfaction, and the acceptance in satisfaction, were one and the same act, and, as such, a traverse of the one was a traverse of both.<sup>3</sup>

§ 754. Fifthly, when a party relies on several counts or pleas, his opponent can never use one of them as evidence to establish his case on another issue.<sup>4</sup> For instance, if not guilty and a justification be pleaded to a declaration in trespass, the admission of the trespass in the justification will not entitle the plaintiff to a verdict on the plea of not guilty; because, whatever issues are joined upon any counts or pleas, are to be tried by the jury distinctly from each other.<sup>5</sup> So strict is this rule, that a special plea, held bad on demurrer, cannot be read by the plaintiff at the trial of the general issue, as a direct admission by the defendant of the statements therein contained, though the jury be summoned to assess the damages on the demurrer, as well as to try the cause on the general issue;<sup>6</sup> neither can the defendant, under similar circumstances, advert to the plea, and use the demurrer as an indirect admission by the plaintiff of the facts stated in such plea.<sup>7</sup> So, where a declaration contained two inconsistent counts, on the second of which the defendant paid money into court, which the plaintiff accepted, it was held that such count, and the proceedings thereon, could not be read to the jury by the defendant as evidence to negative an allegation in the first count.<sup>1</sup> It was contended, in that case, that taking the money out of court in satisfaction of the matter in the second count, was an act of the plaintiff apparent on the record, of which the defendant was entitled to avail himself. But the answer given by the court was, that this part of the pleading was not before the jury.<sup>2</sup>

§ 755. One exception to this rule appears to be recognised, where a verdict has been found on an immaterial issue, and the court is subsequently called upon by the one side to enter up judgment non obstante veredicto, and by the other to grant a repleader. Here, the court will examine the whole record; and if it appears thereby that the defendant, besides raising the immaterial issue on which the question arises, has pleaded other material matters which have been disposed of on proper issues, and found for the plaintiff, it will award to the plaintiff judgment non obstante veredicto, the reasons for a repleader ceasing.<sup>3</sup> Neither will the effect of this exception be neutralised, even though the good pleas do not severally or collectively confess or traverse all the material facts alleged in the declaration; for, as a repleader is never granted except where complete justice cannot be done without it, the court will not interfere in this manner on behalf of the defendant, where he has already, by raising one or more correct issues, each of which would decide the action, enjoyed all the advantages which either justice or reason demands.<sup>4</sup> If, indeed, the plea or replication, traversing an immaterial allegation, stands alone on the record ;<sup>1</sup> or if, as was the case in Gwynne v. Burnell, a good plea has been pleaded in conjunction with others, but in consequence of the rejoinder departing therefrom, and raising an immaterial issue, the matter involved in such plea has never been tried at all ; in either of such cases a repleader will still be awarded ;<sup>2</sup> unless, perhaps, where the immaterial issue is found against the party who made the first fault in pleading.<sup>3</sup>

§ 756. Sixthly, in conformity with the rule that an admission in one plea cannot be prayed in aid of another, because the jury must separately determine the merits of each issue, a new assignment does not admit the truth of those matters stated in the plea which it does not pretend to traverse ; for although a distinction for some purposes may very properly be drawn between collateral and continuous pleading, and it may perhaps be contended with truth that a new assignment, to a certain extent, falls within the latter class, yet it is obvious that the plaintiff, by adopting this course of pleading, intends to waive all inquiry respecting the facts stated in the plea, as not applying to the true cause of action. The effect, therefore, of a new assignment is not strictly to admit the truth of these facts, but to withdraw them entirely from consideration, as forming any part of the subject-matter of the action, and thus, on the one hand, to prevent the plaintiff from complaining of them, and, on the other, to preclude the defendant from relying on them in support of the issue raised on the new assignment. They are, in point of fact, to be regarded as if they were struck out of the record, and the true grounds of complaint are to be sought in the explanation of the declaration which the new assignment contains.<sup>4</sup> For some purposes, indeed, the matters

stated in the plea, and not disputed by the new assignment, will be noticed by the court; as, for instance, if to an action for assault the defendant justifies, and the plaintiff new assigns another assault on a different occasion, the latter must either prove both assaults, or at least show that the one, of which he complains in his new assignment, is substantially different from that alleged in the plea; and so, if in an action of trespass quare clausum fregit a justification is pleaded under a right of way, and a trespass extra viam is new assigned, the plaintiff must prove at the trial that such last-named trespass was in fact committed; but in both these cases<sup>1</sup> the proof is required, not so much on account of any admission assumed to have been made by the plaintiff, as because it directly establishes the issue which has been raised by the new assignment.

§ 757. Seventhly, although for the purpose of trial before the jury, everything, which is not denied in the particular issue forming the subject of inquiry, is admitted, at least to the qualified extent stated above,<sup>2</sup> yet this rule does not apply to cases where, the issue found being immaterial, the court has to determine whether it will grant a repleader, or will allow the plaintiff to enter up judgment non obstante veredicto, or the defendant to arrest the judgment.<sup>3</sup> Here a distinction prevails between an express admission or a pleading in confession and avoidance on the one hand, and an implied admission from traversing other facts on the other, the latter not being regarded by the court in the light of an admission at all.<sup>4</sup> Thus, it has been held by the House of Lords, in the case of Gwynne v. Burnell,<sup>5</sup> that judgment non obstante veredicto can be awarded only on a pleading by the defendant in confession and avoidance, and not on an implied confession in a rejoinder of that part of a replication which it does not answer; and this seems to lead to the conclusion, that judgment for the plaintiff cannot be arrested on the ground that the traverse of a part of a plea contains an implied confession of the residue. The proper course seems to be, in both cases, to award a replader.<sup>1</sup>

§ 758. The question as to how far the particulars of the plaintiff's demand, or of the defendant's set-off, can be relied upon as admissions made by the parties respectively delivering them, has been discussed on more than one occasion, but it seems to be now determined, that, unless the particulars contain an express admission of a cross demand, in which case they will be regarded as proof of an agreement to admit such cross demand,<sup>2</sup> they will not be considered in the light of admissions at all, but simply as statements explaining, and, it may be, limiting, the claim made in the declaration or plea.<sup>3</sup> If particulars of set-off be not delivered in accordance with a judge's order, and such order contain, as it usually does, a clause precluding the defendant from proving his set-off in the event of non-delivery, any evidence of his counter claim will be inadmissible at the trial.<sup>4</sup>

§ 759. The rule in equity with respect to admissions in pleading are not very different from those at common law. First, every bill, which is ordered to be taken pro confesso, may be read as evidence of the facts therein contained, in the same manner as if such facts had been admitted to be true by the defendant's answer.<sup>1</sup> Next, where a cause is heard upon bill and answer, the answer is admitted to be true on all points,<sup>2</sup> and no other evidence is admitted, unless it be matter of record to which the answer refers, and which is provable by the record.<sup>3</sup> Then, it is generally true that, where a defendant, in his answer to a bill, admits the existence and contents of a document, the plaintiff may use such admission for the purposes of the suit, without producing the document as evidence at the hearing.<sup>4</sup> Still, a demurrer is regarded by courts of equity as simply raising the question of law, without any admission of the truth of the allegations contained in the bill,—so that if the demurrer be overruled, an answer may still be put in;<sup>5</sup> and a plea is merely a statement of circumstances sufficient to show, that, supposing the facts charged to be true, the defendant is not bound to answer. It follows from this state of the law, that in any future action between the same parties, neither the demurrer nor plea can be received in evidence, as amounting to an admission of the facts charged in the bill;<sup>6</sup> though the plea, as being a sworn statement,<sup>7</sup> admits the truth of the matters which are thus affirmed on oath.

§ 760. Having now discussed the general rules by which admissions in pleading are governed, and having, in a preceding chapter,<sup>8</sup> examined at some length what points are put in issue, and what are admitted, by particular pleas, it remains only to notice, in connection with this subject, the effect of paying money into court, of tendering compensation, and of pleading in abatement. brought against magistrates,<sup>1</sup> and, perhaps, in one or two other suits,<sup>2</sup>—must now be pleaded in all cases, but may be pleaded either to the whole or to part only of the plaintiff's claim,—may be made, as of course, in the case of a single defendant, and by leave of the court or a judge, in the case of one or more of several defendants, in all personal actions, except actions of detinue,<sup>3</sup> actions on bonds,<sup>4</sup> or actions for assault and battery, false imprisonment, libel, slander, malicious arrest or prosecution, or debauching of the plaintiff's daughter or servant.<sup>5</sup> Amends may also be paid into court in some of the cases above excepted, under the provisions of particular statutes. For instance, in an action for a libel contained in any public newspaper or other periodical publication, the defendant may plead that the libel was inserted without actual malice, and without gross negligence, and that at the earliest opportunity he had published, or, in some cases, had offered to publish, an ample apology. This statutable plea must then terminate with an allegation of the payment of money into court by way of amends, for otherwise the plaintiff may treat it as a mere nullity;<sup>6</sup> and as the plea, provided it be proved,<sup>7</sup> is regarded as an admission, not only of the cause of action, but of liability in damages to the extent of the sum paid into court, it cannot be pleaded along with the general issue to the same part of the declaration.<sup>8</sup> Many other statutes authorise pleas of payment of money into court, when actions are brought against persons for acts done by them, either in execution of their offices, or in pursuance or under the authority of Acts of Parliament;<sup>9</sup> and among these may be mentioned the Act passed in 1848 for the protection of justices,<sup>10</sup> the Acts of 1861, which consolidate

§ 761. The salutary effect of these regulations has been much impaired ; first, by not extending them to all personal actions ; and next, by allowing payment of money into court to be regarded in some cases as an admission of the cause of action. It is very true that in actions on contract, when money is paid into court upon the general indebitatus counts, the payment amounts only to an admission that the defendant is liable, in respect of some one or more contracts or causes of action stated in the general counts, to the extent of the sum so paid in ; and the plaintiff cannot apply that admission to any particular contract he may please to select, any more than the defendant.<sup>3</sup> If, therefore, the plaintiff seeks to recover any damages or debt beyond the sum paid into court, he must prove not only that a larger sum was due, but also the existence of the contract on which he relies,<sup>4</sup> as well as his separate right to sue on that contract ;<sup>5</sup> and if the action be brought against two or more defendants, he must further show their joint liability.<sup>6</sup> Neither can he avail himself of his bill of particulars, in order to see on what ground the payment was made, because the declaration must exist independently of the particulars, and must be taken to have some meaning as well before particulars are delivered as afterwards.<sup>1</sup> Much less can the joint payment of money into court by two defendants under the indebitatus counts be treated as an acknowledgment of their partnership, as alleged in a special count.<sup>2</sup>

§ 762. If, however, the plaintiff declares upon a special contract, and the defendant meets the special count by paying money into court, such money will still be regarded as a conclusive acknowledgment of the contract set forth in the declaration.<sup>3</sup> The technical reason on which this rule rests is, that as the plea, which necessarily accompanies the payment, states distinctly that the sum brought into court "is enough to satisfy the claim of the plaintiff in respect of the matter herein pleaded to,"<sup>4</sup> the payment must be considered in the light of an admission that something is due from the defendant to the plaintiff, and, consequently, it must at the same time admit that the contract was made, by which alone anything can be due.<sup>5</sup> The defendant, therefore, who has so pleaded, cannot object to the jurisdiction of the court,<sup>6</sup> or set up the non-performance by the plaintiff of a condition precedent,<sup>7</sup> or urge that the action has been brought too soon,<sup>8</sup> or deny the plaintiff's claim to the character in which he sues,<sup>9</sup> or move to arrest the judgment on account of the insufficiency of the declaration,<sup>10</sup> or contend that the agreement is not in writing, and signed in accordance with the Statute of Frauds,<sup>1</sup> or rely on the insufficiency of the stamp,<sup>2</sup> or insist on the plaintiff producing the attesting witness,<sup>3</sup> or plead other pleas denying or justifying the same cause of action,<sup>4</sup> unless he be permitted to do so by some particular statute, or give evidence, in mitigation of damages, of facts which would bar the plaintiff's recovery;<sup>5</sup> as, for instance, if the action be brought for discharging the plaintiff from service, the defendant, who has paid money into court, cannot, in mitigation of damages, justify the discharge on the ground of the plaintiff's misconduct.<sup>6</sup>

§ 763. In applying the above rules to particular cases, strict attention must be paid to the two following points. First, payment of money into court admits the special contract set out in the declaration, only to that extent to which the plaintiff is bound to prove it; for it would be obviously unjust if the admission were to tie the defendant when the plaintiff would be loose. For instance, in Cooper v. Blick,<sup>7</sup> the plaintiff declared upon a contract by the defendants to employ him, to wit, in the capacity of editor of a newspaper, at a certain salary, to wit, at the rate of 400*l.* per annum. The defendants paid money into court, and by so doing were held to have admitted the capacity in which the plaintiff had engaged to serve them, but not the amount of salary which they had agreed to pay him. Both averments were laid under videlicets; but the court applying the true test, namely, what must the plaintiff have proved, had non assumpsit been pleaded, decided that the former averment was material, and the latter immaterial. In discussing the effect of the videlicet, Mr. Justice Patteson observed, that it could not make that immaterial, which was in its nature material, though its omission might render that material which should otherwise not be so ; and he illustrated these propositions by pointing out, that a videlicet could not make the sum in a bill of exchange immaterial, because that was matter of description, but its omission in the declaration before him would have bound the plaintiff to the precise rate of salary stated, and the admission of the defendants by payment into court would then have bound them in the same manner.<sup>1</sup>

§ 764. The other point deserving attention is perhaps only another mode of stating the-proposition just adverted to. It is this:—that although payment into court admits the entire contract declared on, as also the specific breach in respect of which the payment is made, it does not admit any damages on that breach beyond the sum paid in, still less does it admit any other breach to which the payment does not apply. Thus, payment of money into court upon a count on a valued policy of insurance, which states a total loss by capture, admits the contract and the capture, but not the total loss, and the plaintiff, therefore, must still prove that he has suffered damage from the capture beyond the sum paid.<sup>2</sup> So, where the declaration, after stating that the defendant and another were indebted to the plaintiff in a certain sum, to wit, 250*l.*, but that the debt was barred by the Statute of Limitations, averred that the defendant afterwards, and within six years from the commencement of the suit, signed a written promise to pay his proportion of the debt, which proportion amounted to a certain sum, to wit, a moiety of the debt, and then assigned non-payment as a breach, it was held that the defendant, by paying 10*s.* into court, admitted the contract and breach, but disputed the amount due.<sup>3</sup> Again, although payment into court in an action upon a bill or a promissory note admits the instrument, and also, primâ facie, admits the precise sum to be due

upon it,<sup>1</sup> yet, if the instrument be payable by instalments, such payment admits only that the sum paid was due upon the bill or note, and does not preclude the defendant from pleading the Statute of Limitations as to any further sum:<sup>2</sup> nor, in short, is the defendant, by so paying, debarred from taking any other objection, in order to limit the operation of the contract declared on, and to prevent the plaintiff from recovering more than the actual amount paid.<sup>3</sup>

§ 765. In actions on tort, the effect of payment of money into court has varied from time to time in a manner, and to an extent, that is little creditable to our superior courts of justice. Formerly, it was supposed by the profession that by such payment the defendant admitted the cause of action sued for.<sup>4</sup> A contrary opinion next prevailed;<sup>5</sup> and this was followed by a state of things during the existence of which no lawyer could predicate what the next decision of the judges would be. The Court of Queen's Bench ruled one way,<sup>6</sup> the Court of Common Pleas ruled another;<sup>7</sup> and the learned barons of the Exchequer, in their anxiety to be right, ruled both ways.<sup>8</sup> At last, in 1852, Chief Justice Jervis undertook the task of reconciling these irreconcilable decisions, and in an elaborate judgment he laid down the law as follows:—"Upon a review of the authorities, we think that where, in an action of tort, the declaration is general and unspecific, the payment of money into Court, although it admits a cause of action, does not admit the cause of action sued for; and that the plaintiff must give evidence of the cause of action sued

J., thus expressed himself:—"The question is, how does payment into court operate in an action on tort; there is a case in the Exch. each way, a case in the Queen's Bench one way, and another in the Com. Pleas the other way;" and then with pardonable self-complacency he added, "but this latter is reconcilable upon the doctrine of identity."

for, before he can have larger damages than the amount paid into court. On the other hand, if the declaration is specific, so that nothing would be due to the plaintiff from the defendant, unless the defendant admitted the particular claim made by the declaration, we think that the payment of money into court admits the cause of action sued for, and so stated in the declaration. If the breach is single, and the damages entire, then, of course, it becomes, under such circumstances, a mere question of damages; but if the damages may be compounded of several things,—for instance, as in the case of Story v. Finnis, of the number and value of the goods taken,—then, although the payment of money into court may, from the form of declaration, admit the particular cause of action sued for, still it may be necessary to prove the cause of action with a view to the damages; because, although the defendant would thus admit that he broke a particular pound, he would not admit that, as the result of that particular breaking, he rescued all the goods in respect of which damages were claimed.”<sup>1</sup>

§ 766. The service of a summons to show cause why one or more of several defendants<sup>2</sup> should not be permitted to pay a certain sum into court, will, as against the party or parties obtaining the summons, be some evidence of liability to the amount specified, though, unless it be followed up by a corresponding plea of payment, it will by no means be conclusive.<sup>3</sup> The rules stated above as governing the effect by way of admission which is produced by paying money into court, apply equally to the plea of tender,<sup>4</sup> and it is therefore unnecessary to repeat them here with particular reference to that plea.

defendant's liability is not very distinctly settled, but the better opinion is, that when such plea is not supported by proof, the case remains the same as if the defendant had suffered judgment to go by default;<sup>1</sup> that is, if the action be one wherein the judgment is final, it admits the debt, but if the judgment be interlocutory, it merely admits a liability to nominal damages. In this last class of cases, therefore, the plaintiff must still prove the amount of his demand:<sup>2</sup> and if this arises from any contract which he has made with a joint stock company or other firm, he must also, in order to recover substantial damages, show by independent evidence that the defendant is a shareholder or co-partner therein; unless that fact is alleged in the declaration, and therefore stands admitted on the record;<sup>3</sup> or, unless the defendant himself, while endeavouring to support his plea, has treated the partnership as a matter not in dispute.<sup>4</sup> It remains only to add, that when a defendant pleads generally the non-joinder of other parties as co-defendants, such plea is not divisible, but if it fails in part, it must fail altogether. Thus, where, on a plea of abatement to an action for work done, the plaintiff proved that work was done to the amount of 5*l.* for the defendant alone, and to the further amount of 6*l.* for the defendant jointly with the other persons mentioned in the plea, the court held that the plaintiff was entitled to a verdict for the whole 11*l.*, and that in order to entitle the defendant to avail himself of his plea in abatement, he should have limited its application to the particular items for which he was jointly liable with others.<sup>5</sup>

been made through inadvertence or mistake, the court, in its discretion, will relieve the party from the consequences of his error, by ordering a repleader, or by permitting an amendment, or by discharging the case stated, or the rule, or the agreement, if made in court.<sup>1</sup> Agreements, too, made out of court between attorneys, concerning the course of proceedings in court, are, in effect, equally under the court's control, by means of its coercive power over the attorney in all matters relating to professional character and conduct. But, in all these cases, the party will be held to his admission, unless it clearly appear that he has acted through mistake.<sup>2</sup>

§ 769.<sup>3</sup> Every admission, which has been made with the intention of being acted upon, and which has been acted upon by another person, is conclusive against the party making it, in all cases between him and the individual whose conduct he has thus influenced. It is of no importance, whether such admission be made in express language to the person who acts upon it, or be implied from the general conduct of the party making it; for, in the latter case, the implied declaration will be considered as having been addressed to every one in particular, who may have had occasion to act upon it; and the rule of law is clear, that, where one by his words or conduct wilfully causes another to believe in the existence of a certain state of things, and induces him to act on that belief, so as to alter his own previous position, the former is concluded from averring against the latter a different state of things as existing at the same time.<sup>4</sup> Indeed, the principle

may be laid down still more broadly, as precluding any party, who negligently or culpably stands by, and allows another to contract on the faith and understanding of a fact which he can contradict, from disputing that fact in an action against the person, whom he has himself assisted in deceiving.<sup>1</sup> In such case the party is estopped, on grounds of public policy and good faith, from repudiating his own representations.<sup>2</sup>

§ 770. In the case of Freeman v. Cooke,<sup>3</sup> Lord Wensleydale, while explaining this rule, pointedly observed:—"By the term 'wilfully,' we must understand, if not that the party represents that to be true which he knows to be untrue, at least that he means his representation to be acted upon, and that it is acted upon accordingly; and if, whatever a man's real intention may be, he so conducts himself that a reasonable man would take the representation to be true, and believe that it was meant that he should act upon it, and did act upon it as true, the party making the representation would be equally precluded from contesting its truth;<sup>4</sup> and conduct by negligence or omission, where there is a duty cast upon a person by usage of trade or otherwise to disclose the truth, may often have the same effect;—as, for instance, a retiring partner omitting to inform his customers of the fact, in the usual mode, that the continuing partners were no longer authorised to act as his agents, is bound by all contracts made by them with third persons on the faith of their being so authorised."<sup>5</sup>

<sup>5</sup> In Howard v. Hudson, 2 E. & B. 1, *Ld. § 771. A similar doctrine prevails in courts of equity; and it is there recognised as a well-established rule, that if a party, having a secret equity, chooses to stand by, and permit the apparent owner to deal with others as if he were the absolute owner, he shall not be permitted to assert such secret equity against a title founded on such apparent ownership.<sup>1</sup> Many decisions have been founded upon this principle, but the case of the Duke of Beaufort v. Neald<sup>2</sup> will sufficiently serve to illustrate it. There, the Duke had signed, and put into the hands of his agent, an authority to consent to any exchanges under an inclosure Act, but had directed him not to act upon this authority excepting under certain circumstances. The agent, in breach of his private instructions, having produced the authority and agreed to an exchange not under the stipulated circumstances, the Duke repudiated the agreement, but the House of Lords held that he was clearly bound thereby. The Court of Chancery has also acted upon this doctrine on several occasions, where negotiations have been entered into preparatory to marriage; and the abstract rule deducible from the authorities is, that, whenever a representation<sup>3</sup> of some fact, as contradistinguished from a mere representation of intention,<sup>4</sup> has been made by one party for the purpose of influencing the conduct of another, and has been acted upon by the latter, this will, in general, be

§ 772.<sup>2</sup> The rule, at common law, is familiarly illustrated by the case of a man cohabiting with a woman, and treating her in the face of the world as his wife, when in fact he is not married to her. Here, though he thereby acquires no rights against others, yet they may against him; and therefore, if the mistress be supplied with goods during such cohabitation, and the reputed husband be sued for them, he will not be permitted to disprove or deny the marriage.<sup>3</sup> So, if the lands of such woman be taken in execution for her reputed husband's debt, as his own freehold in her right, he will be estopped, by the relation de facto of husband and wife, from saying that he held them as her servant.<sup>4</sup> Neither will a woman, who has solemnly declared that she was married to a particular man, and whose goods are thus admitted to belong to her husband in her right, be allowed, on his bankruptcy, to deny the marriage, and to lay claim to the goods as her sole property.<sup>5</sup> But a woman really married is, from some strange caprice in the law, excluded from the operation of this rule; and, therefore, if an action be brought against her as a feme sole, she may dis-

§ 773.<sup>3</sup> Where a person knowingly permits his name to be used as one of the partners in a trading firm, or an existing joint-stock company, under such circumstances of publicity as to satisfy the jury that a stranger knew of it, and believed him to be a partner, he is liable to such stranger in all transactions, in which the latter engaged and gave credit upon the faith of his being such partner.<sup>4</sup> So, although the mere fact of a person agreeing to become a member of the provisional committee of an intended railway company, or even the fact of such person authorising his name to be published in a prospectus, which contains nothing more than the names of the provisional committee-men, will not render him liable for contracts made by the other members or by the solicitor, for the purpose of promoting the objects in view; because such an intended association does not amount to a partnership, as it constitutes no agreement to share in profit and loss;<sup>5</sup>—still, if evidence be forthcoming that such person has acted with relation to the proposed scheme, as by attending meetings, giving directions, and the like, it will be for the jury to determine<sup>1</sup> whether he has not thereby authorised the managing committee, or the other members of the provisional committee, or the solicitor or secretary of the intended company, to pledge his credit for the necessary and ordinary expenses to be incurred in forming the company; and if they decide this question in the affirmative, they may then give a verdict against him, on further finding that the work was done, and the credit given, on the faith of his being liable.<sup>2</sup> On the same principle, if a man, by holding out false colours, induces a railway company to register him as a proprietor of shares, and, subsequently, to bring an action against him for calls on such shares, he will be precluded from disputing the validity of the transfer to him, or from otherwise denying his character as a shareholder.<sup>3</sup> So, when a company had registered a person as a shareholder, and had induced him, on the faith of such registration, to pay a call, they were not allowed to dispute his title to the shares.<sup>4</sup> An infant, too, who has actually deceived a tradesman by fraudulently representing himself to be of full age, and who has thus obtained credit for goods supplied to him, will in equity,<sup>5</sup> though not in law,<sup>6</sup> be held bound by his statement, and liable to pay the debt. So, also, a person who has assumed to act as a sworn broker of the city of London, cannot, as against a party who has employed him, protect himself from a discovery of his dealings with such party, on the ground that his answer may expose him to penalties for having acted as a broker without being duly qualified.<sup>1</sup>

§ 774. Where parties have agreed to act upon an assumed state of facts, their rights between themselves will be made to depend on such assumption, and not upon the truth.<sup>2</sup> Again, if a party has taken advantage of, or voluntarily acted under, the bankrupt or insolvent laws, he shall not be permitted, as against parties to the proceedings, to deny their regularity.<sup>3</sup> So, the grantee of an annuity, whose duty it is to have the memorial properly enrolled, cannot take advantage of his own neglect, and set up the want of enrolment against the grantor, although the statute relating to annuities<sup>4</sup> declares that in case of non-enrolment the deeds shall be void to all intents and purposes.<sup>5</sup> So, if an agent or a workman knowingly renders an untrue account to his principal or employer, and such account is adopted by the party to whom it is given, it cannot afterwards be gainsaid by the person who rendered it.<sup>6</sup> So, if a man by his receipt acknowledges that he has received money from an agent on account of his principal, and thereby accredits the agent with the principal

to that amount, such receipt is conclusive as to payment by the agent.<sup>1</sup> Therefore, the usual acknowledgment in a policy of insurance of the receipt of premium from the assured is conclusive of the fact as between the underwriters and the assured, although not as between the underwriters and the broker.<sup>2</sup> So, if a person having a right to an estate permit or encourage a purchaser to buy it of another, the purchaser shall, in equity at least, hold it against the person who has the right;<sup>3</sup> and precisely the same doctrine applies at common law to personal property.<sup>4</sup> Trespass, also, is not maintainable against a sheriff's officer who executes process against a man by a wrong name, either by taking his person, or seizing his goods, if before the process be sued out, he is asked his name, and gives such wrong one;<sup>5</sup> and if a party, who has entered into a bond by a wrong name, is sued in that name, he cannot, as it seems, cause the declaration to be amended at the cost of the plaintiff,<sup>6</sup> and probably he would be estopped from denying that the name in which a judge was bad as a proceeding under the Interpleader Act,<sup>1</sup> for want of a statement of consent upon its face, it was nevertheless held to be conclusive upon the parties, who by their conduct had agreed to submit the matter in dispute to the decision of the judge.<sup>2</sup> So, although a breach of covenant can in no case be justified by a parol licence to break it,<sup>3</sup> a forfeiture occasioned by it may be sometimes waived by the conduct of the covenantee. Thus, where a covenant to insure on the tenant's part was qualified by an option given to the landlord to insure if the tenant made default, and to add the premiums to his rent; it was held, in ejectment for a forfeiture for not insuring, that the defendant might defeat the action, by proving that the landlord had represented to him that he had exercised the power, and had himself duly insured the premises.<sup>4</sup> So also, a tenant, who has paid rent, and acted as such, is not permitted, as stated more fully in another place,<sup>5</sup> to set up a superior title of a third person against his lessor, in bar of an ejectment brought by him; for he derived the possession from him as tenant, and shall not be allowed to repudiate the relation.

§ 776. This doctrine is also applied to the respective relations of licensor and licensee, bailor and bailee, and principal and agent; the rule of law being clear that neither licensees, nor bailees, nor agents, can be permitted to dispute the respective titles of their licensors, bailors, or principals.<sup>6</sup> A licensee, therefore, under a patentee is estopped from disputing the validity of the

that, where a person pledges property to which he has no title, the pledgee is not estopped from delivering it to the rightful owner; for in the ordinary case of a pledge, the pledgor impliedly undertakes that the property is his own, and the pledgee merely undertakes that he will return it to the pledgor, provided it be not shown to belong to another.<sup>1</sup> A common carrier, too, being bound to receive goods for carriage, and having no means of making inquiry as to their ownership, is at liberty to dispute the title of the person from whom he has received them; and if he be sued in trover by such person, he may establish his defence by proving that he has delivered the goods to the real owner on his claiming them.<sup>2</sup> A vendor, however, who has sold goods to a party as a sole purchaser, and has directed his factors to weigh them over to such party, and to enter them in his name in their books, cannot, after such sale and transfer, dispute his title as sole proprietor, or detain the goods, on the authority of a third person, who claims to be a joint purchaser.<sup>3</sup>

§ 777. Again, in an action against the acceptor of a bill, the defendant cannot show that his signature has been forged, if he has accredited the bill, and induced the plaintiff to take it, by saying that the acceptance was his, and that the bill would be duly paid.<sup>4</sup> Until recently, however, it was deemed law, that no consideration of estoppel as between the parties could have any weight where the rights of the revenue intervened; and consequently, the maker of a banker's cheque, provided it were payable to bearer on demand,<sup>5</sup> might have defrauded a bonâ fide holder for value, by proving that the cheque was post-dated, and, as such, inadmissible in evidence without a bill stamp.<sup>6</sup> But this doctrine, the drawer the name of a real person as drawer and indorser be forged, it seems that the mere acceptance of such bill, in ignorance of the forgery, will not preclude the acceptor from denying the genuineness of the indorsement, though it be in the same handwriting as the drawing which he is bound to admit;<sup>1</sup> but if the acceptor, with knowledge of the forgery, puts the bill in circulation, he will be estopped from disputing the validity of the indorsement equally with that of the drawing.<sup>3</sup> In this last event the case is considered to fall within the principle of Cooper v. Meyer, which decides that if the bill be drawn in a wholly fictitious name, and the handwriting of the indorsement be the same as that of the drawing, the acceptor will be estopped from denying it, because he admits that the bill is drawn by somebody, that is, by the person who indorses in the same handwriting, and the fair construction to be put on his undertaking is, that he will pay to the signature of the same person who signed for the drawer.<sup>3</sup>

§ 779. The reasons for this distinction between the case of a drawer and that of an indorser, who signs the bill before the acceptance, are not very clear; but those usually assigned are, that, as the acceptor is only presumed to be acquainted with the handwriting of the drawer, it is sufficient if he ascertains that his signature is genuine; that he is not bound to look at the back of the bill at all; that, even if he were, he could not be supposed to know the handwriting of indorsers, who would probably be strangers to him; and that a different rule would raise nice questions of fact in every case, as to whether the bill was indorsed before or after acceptance, and would consequently embarrass the circulation of negotiable securities, by rendering the position of acceptors hazardous and undefined.<sup>4</sup>

§ 780. In accordance with the law which estops an acceptor from disputing the genuineness of the drawing, the indorsement by the payee of a promissory note is a conclusive admission of the handwriting of the maker;<sup>1</sup> and it has further been decided by the Court of Queen's Bench,<sup>2</sup> in opposition to some technical suggestions thrown out by the barons of the Exchequer,<sup>3</sup> that the indorsement of a bill of exchange will also operate as an estoppel on the indorser to deny any of the preceding signatures. In those cases where the admission is conclusive, it may either be replied by way of estoppel in pais,<sup>4</sup> or if the matter of estoppel appears on the pleadings, the party may avail himself of it on demurrer.<sup>5</sup>

§ 781. On the other hand, admissions which either have been made without any intention of being acted upon, or which have not been acted upon, or by which the situation of the opposite party has not been prejudiced or altered, though receivable in evidence against the parties making them, are not conclusive.<sup>6</sup> Thus, if A. contracts to sell timber to B., and gives him a delivery order, he may still, on B.'s bankruptcy, meet an action of trover brought by B.'s trustee, by showing that the delivery order was invalid, and therefore did not amount to a constructive delivery of the goods, provided B. has neither paid for them, nor sold them to a third party.<sup>7</sup> So, in an action against a marshal, for the escape of a prisoner arrested at the suit of the plaintiff, the defendant, by having received the prisoner into custody, is not estopped from disputing the legality of the custody.<sup>8</sup> Neither will the court treat as conclusive evidence the admission that his trade was a nuisance, by one indicted for setting it up in another place;<sup>1</sup> or the admission by the defendant, in a petition for damages by reason of adultery,<sup>2</sup> that the "teterrima causa" was the wife of the plaintiff.<sup>3</sup> So a sheriff's return, though it be conclusive evidence, in the particular cause in which it is made, or for the purposes of an attachment, does not operate as an estoppel in any other action or proceeding, either as against the sheriff or as against his bailiff.<sup>4</sup> So, also, a creditor is not estopped from bringing an action against a sheriff for a false return, by accepting the amount levied on account and towards the satisfaction of the debt mentioned in the writ;<sup>5</sup> and where a person brought an action of trover for a dog, he was held not to be precluded from proving his title to it, though he had previously authorised a third party, against whom the defendant had brought a similar action, to deliver it to the defendant, in the place of paying 50*l.*, which was the alternative directed by the verdict; the third person having, at the time of delivery, demanded back the dog, on behalf of the plaintiff, as his property.<sup>6</sup> In these,<sup>7</sup> and the like cases,<sup>8</sup> no wrong is done to the other party, by receiving any legal evidence to show that the admission was erroneous, and by leaving the whole evidence, including the admission, to be weighed by the jury.

§ 782. The case of Freeman v. Cooke<sup>9</sup> carries this doctrine to its extreme limit, if it does not transgress the strict bounds of law. That was an action of trover brought against a sheriff for seizing the plaintiff's goods under a fi. fa. against his brother, to which the defendant pleaded not guilty, not possessed, and leave and licence. It appeared at the trial, that the plaintiff, fearing an execution, had removed his goods to his brother's house, and when the sheriff's officer came there, the plaintiff, supposing that he had a writ against himself, warned him not to seize the goods, as they belonged to his brother. The officer, however, producing his writ, which was against the brother, the plaintiff, before the goods were actually seized, told him that they were the property of a third party; but the officer disregarded this last statement, and seized and sold the goods, as belonging to the brother. On this state of facts, the jury found that the goods were the plaintiff's, but that, before the seizure, he falsely stated to the officer that they belonged to his brother, and that the officer was thereby induced to seize them as his brother's. The court, on this finding, directed the verdict to be entered for the plaintiff, on the grounds, first, that the plaintiff did not intend to induce the officer to seize the goods as those of the brother; and next, that no reasonable man would have seized the goods on the faith of the plaintiff's representations taken altogether.

§ 783.<sup>1</sup> In some few cases, connected with the administration of public justice and of government, admissions are held conclusive on grounds of public policy. Thus, in an action for penalties for election bribery, a man who has given money to another for his vote, will not be permitted to say that such other person had no right to vote.<sup>2</sup> So, where the owners of a stage coach took up more passengers than were allowed by statute, and an injury was laid as having arisen from overloading, their conduct was held to be conclusive evidence that the accident was occasioned by the cause assigned.<sup>3</sup> So, one who has officiously intermeddled with the goods of another recently deceased, is, in favour of creditors, estopped from denying that he is executor.<sup>4</sup> And if an executrix treats the goods of her testator as the property of her husband, she will not be allowed to object to their being taken in execution for her husband's debt.<sup>1</sup> Thus, also, where a shipowner, whose ship had been forfeited for breach of the revenue laws, applied to the Secretary of the Treasury for a remission of the forfeiture, on the ground that it was incurred by the master ignorantly and without fraud, and upon making oath to the application, in the usual course, the ship was given up; he was not permitted afterwards to gainsay this statement, and to prove the misconduct of the master, in an action by the latter against himself for wages on the same voyage, even by showing that the fraud had subsequently come to his knowledge.<sup>2</sup>

§ 784.<sup>3</sup> The mere fact, that an admission was made under oath, does not seem alone to render it conclusive against the party; but it adds vastly to the weight of the testimony, throwing upon him the burthen of showing that it was a case of clear and innocent mistake. Thus, in a prosecution under the game laws, proof of the defendant's oath, taken under the Income Act, that the yearly value of his estate was less than 100*l.*, was held not quite conclusive against him, though very strong evidence of the fact;<sup>4</sup> and the same rule has been applied where the fact sworn to was not, as it might be considered in this case, a matter of judgment, but was purely a matter of fact within the knowledge of the party swearing.<sup>5</sup> The defendant's belief of a fact, sworn to in an answer in Chancery, is admissible evidence against him, though not conclusive.<sup>6</sup>

§ 786.<sup>6</sup> Other admissions, though in writing, not having been acted upon by another to his prejudice, nor falling within the reason before mentioned for estopping the party to gainsay them, are not conclusive against him, but are left at large, to be weighed with other evidence by the jury. facie evidence, not only that the testator had left assets to the amount specified in the inventory, but that such assets had been received by the executor in due course.<sup>1</sup> In England, however, as inventories without signature or verification were formerly produced for the mere purpose of obtaining probate, they were not regarded as prima facie evidence of assets,<sup>2</sup> though they would seem to have furnished, in conjunction with other circumstances, some proof of the value of the estate. A probate stamp, though admissible as slight evidence of assets to the amount covered thereby, is not alone sufficient to throw upon the executors the burthen of proving the non-receipt of such assets.<sup>3</sup> Coupled, however, with proof either of long acquiescence in the payment of the duty, or of other suspicious circumstances, it might perhaps furnish a presumption of assets received, which the executors would find it difficult to rebut.<sup>4</sup>

§ 788.<sup>5</sup> Evidence of oral admissions ought always to be received with great caution. Such evidence is necessarily subject to much imperfection and mistake; for either the party himself may have been misinformed, or he may not have clearly expressed his meaning,<sup>6</sup> or the witness may have misunderstood him,<sup>7</sup> or may purposely misquote the expressions used.<sup>8</sup> It also sometimes happens, that the witness, by unintentionally altering a few words, will give an effect to the statement completely at variance with what the party actually said.<sup>9</sup> But where the admission is delibe-

CHAPTER XV.

CONFESSIONS.

§ 789.<sup>1</sup> THE only topic under the general head of admissions which remains to be discussed, is that of CONFESSIONS of guilt in criminal prosecutions; and here it may be observed, as just remarked in regard to admissions in civil proceedings,<sup>2</sup> that the evidence of oral confessions of guilt ought to be received with great caution. For not only does considerable danger of mistake arise from the misapprehension or malice of witnesses, the misuse of words, the failure of the party to express his own meaning, and the infirmity of memory<sup>3</sup>—but the zeal which generally prevails to detect offenders, especially in cases of aggravated guilt, and the strong disposition which is often displayed by persons engaged in pursuit of evidence, to magnify slight grounds of suspicion into sufficient proof,<sup>4</sup>—together with the character of the witnesses, who are sometimes necessarily called in cases of secret and atrocious crime,—all tend to impair the value of this kind of evidence, and sometimes lead to its rejection, where, in civil actions, it would have been received. The weighty observation of Mr. Justice Foster should also be kept in mind, that “this evidence is not, in the ordinary course of things, to be disproved

<sup>3</sup> See Earle v. Picken, 5 C. & P. 542, n., per Parke, B.; R. v. Simons, 6 C. & P. 540, per Alderson, B.; Fost. C. L. 243; Coleman's case, cited in Joy on Confess. 108. In Resp. v. Fields, Peck, R. 140, the court observed, “How easy is it for the hearer to take one word for another, or to take a word in a sense not intended by the speaker; and for want of an exact representation of the tone of voice, emphasis, countenance, eye, manner, and action of the one who made the confession, how almost impossible is it to make third persons understand the exact state of his mind and meaning! For these reasons such evidence is received with great distrust, and under apprehensions for the wrong it may do.”

<sup>4</sup> For a curious instance of this kind of exaggeration, see the evidence adduced in support of Hugh Macauley Boyd's claim to the authorship of Junius, 1 Woodfall's Junius, *133—*137.

§ 790. In addition to these sources of distrust, which are often sufficient to raise a serious doubt whether the confession given in evidence was actually made by the prisoner in the words, or to the effect, stated by the witnesses, there is yet another reason why caution should be employed in receiving and weighing confessions. The statements, though made as deposed to, may be false. The prisoner, oppressed by the calamity of his situation, may have been induced by motives of hope or fear to make an untrue confession;<sup>2</sup> and the same result may have arisen from a morbid

St. Tr. 109, per Mr. Adams, in his address to the jury. The civilians placed little reliance on naked confessions of guilt, not corroborated by other testimony. Carpzovius, after citing the opinion of Severus to that effect, and enumerating the various kinds of misery which tempt its wretched victims to this mode of suicide, adds—"quorum omnium ex his fontibus contra se emissa pronuntiatio, non tam delicti confessione firmati quam vox doloris, vel insanientis oratio est." <sup>2</sup> *Of this character was the remarkable case of the two Boorns, convicted in the Supr. Court of Vermont, in Sept. 1819, of the murder of Russell Colvin, May 10, 1812. It appeared that Colvin, who was the brother-in-law of the prisoners, was a person of weak mind; that he was considered burdensome to the family of the prisoners, who were obliged to support him; that on the day of his disappearance, being in a distant field where the prisoners were at work, a violent quarrel broke out between them; and that one of them struck him a violent blow on the back of the head with a club, which felled him to the ground. Some suspicions arose at that time that he was murdered; which were increased by the finding of his hat in the same field a few months afterwards. These suspicions in process of time subsided; but, in 1819, one of the neighbours having repeatedly dreamed of the murder, with great minuteness of circumstance, both in regard to his death and the concealment of his remains, the prisoners were vehemently accused, and generally believed guilty of the murder. Upon strict search, the pocket-knife of Colvin and a button of his clothes were found in an old open cellar in the same field, and in a hollow stump not many rods from it were discovered two nails and a number of bones, believed to be those of a man. Upon this evidence, together with their deliberate confession of the fact of the murder and concealment of the body in those places, the prisoners were convicted and sentenced to die. On the same day they applied to the Legislature for a commutation of the sentence of death to that of perpetual imprisonment; which, as to one of them only, was granted. The confession being now withdrawn and contradicted, and a reward offered for the discovery of the missing man, he was found in New Jersey, and returned home in time to prevent the execution. He had fled for fear that they would kill him. The bones were those of some animal. They had been advised by some misjudging friends, that, as they would certainly be convicted upon the circumstances proved, their only chance of life, by commutation of punishment, depended on their making a penitential confession, and thereupon obtaining a recommendation to mercy. This case, of which there is a Report in the Law Library of Harvard University, is critically examined in a learned article in the North Amer. Rev. vol. x., p. 418—429. For another case of false confession, under a promise of pardon, see a case cited in note to Warickshall's case, 1 Lea. 264, n.

<sup>1</sup> One or other of these motives probably induced Hubert falsely to confess that he set fire to London in 1666. His confession cost him his life. See 6 How. St. Tr. 807—809, 819—821; and Wils. Cir. Ev. 70—75. See, also, General Lee's assertion that he was the author of Junius, as narrated in 1 Woodfall's Junius, *122, *123.

<sup>2</sup> Mr. Joy mentions the case of an innocent person making a false constructive confession, in order to fix suspicion on himself alone, that his guilty brothers might have time to escape—a stratagem which was completely successful; after which he proved an alibi in the most satisfactory manner. <sup>3</sup> This is probably the true key to the frequent confessions of the poor wretches who, in the good old times, were wont to be tried for witchcraft. See Mary Smith's case, 2 How. the court, in the judicious exercise of its duty, shall be enabled to make. Such an use of these anomalies, which should be regarded as mere exceptions, and which should speak only in the voice of warning, is no less unprofessional than impolitic; and should be regarded as offensive to the intelligence both of court and jury."<sup>1</sup>

§ 791.<sup>2</sup> Indeed, all reflecting men are now generally agreed, that deliberate and voluntary confessions of guilt, if clearly proved, are among the most effectual proofs in the law; their value depending on the sound presumption, that a rational being will not make admissions prejudicial to his interest and safety, unless when urged by the promptings of truth and conscience.<sup>3</sup> Such confessions, therefore, so made by a prisoner to any person, at any time, and in any place, are at common law receivable in evidence,<sup>4</sup> while the degree of credit due to them must be estimated by the jury according to the particular circumstances of each case.

§ 792.<sup>5</sup> Confessions may be divided into two classes, namely, judicial and extra-judicial. Judicial confessions are those which are made before the magistrate, or in court, in the due course of legal proceedings; and it is essential that they be made of the free will of the party, and with full knowledge of the nature and consequences of the confession. Of this kind are the preliminary examinations taken in writing by the magistrate pursuant to statute; and the plea of guilty to an indictment, made in open court. Either of these is sufficient by itself to support a conviction, though followed by a sentence of death, they both being deliberately and solemnly made under the protecting caution and oversight of the judge. Even on trials for treason or misprision of treason, where the law in its clemency affords to the accused unusual protection, a willing confession without violence in open court, renders it unnecessary to call witnesses in support of the charge;<sup>1</sup> and, perhaps, also,—though this would seem to be highly questionable,<sup>2</sup>—a confession made during the solemnity of an examination before a magistrate or other person having authority to take it, will, if satisfactorily proved by two witnesses, be deemed sufficient evidence to warrant a conviction.<sup>3</sup> The canon law, too, scrupulous as it is on the subject of evidence, regards a judicial and free confession, made out of prison, and without any just fear or danger, as amounting, in the phrase of the Spiritual Courts, to a plena probatio.<sup>4</sup> The doctrine of the Roman law was also to the like effect—confessos in jure pro judicatis haberi placet;—and, indeed, it may be deemed a rule of universal jurisprudence.<sup>5</sup>

§ 793.<sup>6</sup> Extra-judicial confessions are those which are made by the party elsewhere than before a magistrate, or in court; this term embracing not only express confessions of crime, but all those admissions and acts of the accused from which guilt may be implied. All voluntary confessions of this kind are receivable in evidence, on being proved like other facts; and this, too, on trials for treason or misprision of treason, in like manner as on ordinary indictments; except, only, that, on these more serious occasions, they will not supply the want of the two witnesses, whose testimony is required by the Act of William the Third. Consequently, whether these confessions be proved by one witness or two, they can only be treated as corroborative evidence of the overt act charged;<sup>7</sup> unless such overt act be the assassina-

§ 794.<sup>2</sup> Whether, on ordinary indictments for felony or misdemeanor, extra-judicial confessions, uncorroborated by any other proof of the corpus delicti,<sup>3</sup> are of themselves sufficient to justify a conviction of the prisoner, has been gravely doubted. In the Roman law, such naked confessions amounted only to a semiplena probatio, upon which alone no judgment could be founded; and at most, the accused, in particular cases, could only be put to the torture. But if voluntarily made in the presence of the injured party, or if reiterated at different times in his absence, and persisted in, they were received as plenary proof.<sup>4</sup> In each of the English cases usually cited in favour of the sufficiency of this evidence, some corroborating circumstance will be found.<sup>5</sup> Thus, in the case of Eldridge,<sup>6</sup> who was indicted for horse-stealing, the horse was found in his possession, and he had sold it for 12*l.*, after asking 35*l.*, which was its fair value. In the case of Falkner and Bond,<sup>7</sup> the person robbed was called upon his recognizance, and it was proved that one of the prisoners had endeavoured to send a message to him to keep him from appearing. In White's case<sup>8</sup> there was strong circumstantial evidence, both of the larceny of the oats from the prosecutor's stable, and of the prisoner's guilt; and in the case of Tippet,<sup>9</sup> who was indicted for the same larceny, part of this evidence was also given, together with the additional proof that the prisoner was an under-ostler in the same stable. In all these cases, too, except that of Falkner and Bond, the confessions were solemnly made before the examining magistrate, and taken down in due form of law; while the confessions of Falkner and Bond were repeated, once to the officer who apprehended them, and again on hearing the depositions read over which contained the charge. So, in Stone's case,<sup>1</sup> which is a very brief note, it does not appear that the corpus delicti was not otherwise proved; on the contrary, the natural inference from the report is, that it was. Wheeling's case, indeed, seems to be an exception; but it is far too briefly reported to be relied on as an authority, for it merely states that "in the case of John Wheeling, tried before Lord Kenyon, at the Summer Assizes at Salisbury, 1789, it was determined that a prisoner may be convicted on his confession, when proved by legal testimony, though it is totally uncorroborated by any other evidence."<sup>2</sup> In the United States, the prisoner's confession, when the corpus delicti is not otherwise proved, has been held insufficient to warrant his conviction; and this opinion certainly best accords with the humanity of the criminal law, and with the great degree of caution applied in receiving and weighing the evidence of confessions in other cases. Moreover, it seems countenanced by approved writers on this branch of the law.<sup>3</sup>

§ 794 A. Whatever may be the correct rule with respect to uncorroborated confessions as recognised by courts of criminal jurisdiction, the Court for Divorce has held, that a decree for the dissolution of marriage can legally rest on the respondent's admission of adultery, though unsupported by any confirmatory evidence.<sup>4</sup> Still, proof of this nature ought to be received with the utmost caution, and no judge would feel justified in acting upon it, unless the admission bore internal evidence of being trustworthy, and, moreover, amounted to an unequivocal acknowledgment of adultery.<sup>5</sup>

his own favour is not contradicted by evidence offered by the prosecutor, nor is improbable in itself, it will be naturally believed by the jury; but they are not bound to give weight to it on that account, being at liberty to judge of it, like other evidence, by all the circumstances of the case.<sup>1</sup> And if the confession implicate other persons by name, still it must be proved as it was made, not omitting the names; but the judge will instruct the jury, that it is not evidence against any one but the prisoner who made it.<sup>2</sup> This last proposition was strikingly illustrated in the case of Robinson v. Robinson and Lane,<sup>3</sup> which was a suit for dissolution of marriage on the ground of the wife's adultery, and in which a private diary kept by her, describing her intrigues with the co-respondent, was received as a confession against herself, though it was held to be inadmissible as evidence against her paramour.

§ 796.<sup>4</sup> Before any confession can be received in evidence in a criminal case, it must be shown to have been voluntarily made; for, to adopt the somewhat inflated language of Chief Baron Eyre, "a confession, forced from the mind by the flattery of hope, or by the torture of fear, comes in so questionable a shape, when it is to be considered as the evidence of guilt, that no credit ought to be given to it; and therefore it is rejected."<sup>5</sup> The material question, consequently, is, whether the confession has been obtained by the influence of hope or fear; and the evidence to this point, being in its nature preliminary, is, as we have seen,<sup>6</sup> addressed to the judge, who will require the prosecutor to show affirmatively, to his satisfaction, that the statement was not made under the influence of an improper inducement, and who, in the event of any doubt subsisting on this head, will reject the confession.<sup>1</sup> As the admission or rejection of a confession rests wholly in the discretion of the judge, it is difficult to lay down particular rules, à priori, for the government of that discretion; and the more so, because much must necessarily depend on the age, experience, intelligence, and character of the prisoner, and on the circumstances under which the confession was made.<sup>2</sup> Language sufficient to overcome the mind of one, may have no effect upon that of another; a consideration which may serve to reconcile some contradictory decisions, where the principal facts appear similar in the reports, but the lesser circumstances, though often very material in such preliminary inquiries, are omitted. Still, it cannot be denied, that this rule has been sometimes extended much too far, and been applied to cases where no reason could be given for supposing that the inducement had had any influence upon the mind of the prisoner.<sup>3</sup>

§ 797. Difficult as it is to lay down any definite rule on this subject, which can be used as an unerring guide in every supposable case, there are still some points, both in regard to the person by whom the promise or threat is made, and also in regard to the nature of the inducement itself, on which the judges appear to be pretty generally agreed, and a knowledge of which will materially assist the inquiry, whether any particular confession should be admitted in evidence or rejected. And <sup>4</sup> first, as to the person by whom the inducement is offered. Here it is very clear, that if the promise or threat be made by any one having authority over the prisoner in connexion with the prosecution,<sup>5</sup> as, for instance, by the prosecutor,<sup>1</sup> the master or mistress of the prisoner, when the offence concerns such master or mistress,<sup>2</sup> the constable,<sup>3</sup> or other officer<sup>4</sup> having him in custody, a magistrate,<sup>5</sup> or the like,<sup>6</sup> the confession will be rejected as not being voluntary. And the same rule will perhaps prevail, though the inducement was not actually offered by the person in authority, if it were held out by any one in his presence, and he by his silence has sanctioned its being made.<sup>7</sup>

§ 798. In these cases, as the authority possessed by the persons who make or sanction the inducement is calculated both to animate the prisoner's hopes of favour, on the one hand, and, on the other, to inspire him with awe, and in some degree to overcome the powers of his mind, the law assumes the possibility, if not the probability, of his making an untrue admission, and consequently withdraws from the consideration of the jury any declaration of guilt, which the prisoner under these circumstances may be induced to make. Moreover,—and this is a more sensible reason for the rule,—the admission of such evidence would naturally lead the inferior agents of the police, while seeking to obtain a character for activity and zeal, to harass and oppress unfortunate prisoners, in the hope of wringing from them a reluctant confession. It has been argued, with apparent reason, that a confession made upon the promises or threats of a person, assuming to act in the capacity of an officer or magistrate, and erroneously believed by the prisoner to possess such authority, ought, upon the above principles, to be excluded; but the point is not known to have received any judicial consideration.

§ 799.<sup>1</sup> Whether a confession made to a person, who having no authority has held out an inducement, will be receivable, is a question upon which learned judges are known to entertain opposite opinions.<sup>2</sup> On two occasions, Mr. Justice Bosanquet distinctly held that the fact of any person telling a prisoner that it would be better for him to confess, would always exclude any confession made to that person; <sup>3</sup> and one or two other cases may perhaps be cited in support of the same view.<sup>4</sup> On the other hand, Mr. Justice Patteson is reported to have said, in a more recent case, that, in the opinion of the judges, any confession is receivable, unless some

Ass. 1840, MS., where a woman was indicted for child-murder, a confession made by her to an elderly woman, who was her neighbour and nurse, and who told her it was better for her to confess, was held by Ld. Abinger to be inadmissible; and his lordship refused to admit evidence of a confession subsequently made to a surgeon. Sed qu.

<sup>4</sup> For instance, R. v. Kingston, 4 C. & P. 387, where Parke and Little-dale, Js., rejected a confession made to a surgeon who had held out an inducement. Perhaps, however, this case may rest on the ground that the surgeon was a person in authority. In R. v. Walkley, 6 C. & P. 175, where evidence of a confession was held inadmissible by Gurney, B., it does not appear, whether or not the witness, to whom the statement was made, and who had offered the inducement, was a person in authority; and the same observation applies to the case of R. v. Thomas, id. 353, per Patteson, J. See, also, Guild's case, 5 Halst. 163; and Knapp's case, 9 Pick. 496, 500—510.

§ 800. Both these contradictory decisions would seem to be open to one and the same objection; namely, they endeavour to define, as a strict rule of law, what circumstances shall be deemed, in all cases, to have unduly influenced the mind of the prisoner in making the confession. Now, although such a rule has been laid down with reference to inducements offered by persons in authority, because, being thought to succeed in a large majority of instances, it has, for the sake of uniformity and precision, been wisely adopted as applicable to them all; yet it by no means follows, that the same rule will equally apply to all promises and threats held out by private persons. These last inducements may vary in their effect to almost any conceivable extent. They will often be obviously insufficient to produce the slightest influence on even the feeblest mind; and, in such cases, the confession which follows, but which, in fact, is not consequent on them, should be admitted in evidence. On the other hand, an inducement held out by a private individual may be, and, indeed, frequently is, quite as much calculated to cause the prisoner to utter an untrue statement, as any promise made to him by a person in authority; in these cases, the confession made to such private person should be excluded. It is therefore submitted, that, without laying down any positive rule, whether of admission or rejection, the judge should determine each case on its own merits; only bearing in mind, that his duty is to reject such confessions only, as would seem to have been wrung from the prisoner, under the supposition that it would be best for him to admit that he was guilty of an offence which he really never committed.<sup>2</sup> may, thus much is clear, that a promise or threat made by an indifferent person, who has officiously interfered without any kind of authority, will never operate to exclude a confession made to any other person, who has not himself sanctioned the inducement.<sup>1</sup> This rule is founded, partly, on the supposition that such inducements will seldom much influence the conduct of the prisoner; but chiefly, on the ground that, were a contrary rule to prevail, it would probably open a wide door to collusive practices, and would certainly go far towards rendering all confessions inadmissible. Prisoners, who wished to avoid the consequences of their inconvenient acknowledgments of guilt, might with ease find associates ready to affirm, that they had advised them to confess; and even if this stratagem were not attempted, injudicious advice given by meddling persons, would frequently have the effect of shutting out a distinct and positive confession, and of thus embarrassing the course of criminal justice.

§ 802. Where promises or threats have been once used of such a nature as to render a confession inadmissible, all subsequent admissions of the same or the like facts will be rejected, unless from the length of time intervening, from proper warning of the consequences, or from other circumstances, there be good reason to presume, that the delusive hope or fear which influenced the first confession has been effectually dispelled.<sup>2</sup> Where,<sup>3</sup> however, it appears, to the satisfaction of the judge, that the improper influence was totally done away before the confession was made, the evidence will be received.<sup>4</sup> Thus, where a magistrate told a prisoner charged with murder, that if he was not the man who

struck the fatal blow, and would disclose all he knew respecting the matter, he would use his influence to protect him; but on subsequently receiving a letter from the Secretary of State refusing mercy, he communicated its contents to the prisoner, it was held that a confession, which the prisoner afterwards made to the coroner, who had also duly cautioned him, was clearly voluntary, and as such it was admitted.<sup>1</sup> So, where the accused had been induced by promises of favour to make a confession, which was for that cause excluded, but some months afterwards, and after he had been solemnly warned by two magistrates that he must expect death and prepare to meet it, he again fully acknowledged his guilt, this latter confession was received in evidence.<sup>2</sup> Indeed, it may be generally laid down, that, though an inducement has been held out by an officer, a prosecutor, or the like, and though a confession has been made in consequence of such inducement, still, if the prisoner be subsequently warned by a person in equal or superior authority, that what he may say will be evidence against himself, or that a confession will be of no benefit to him,—or if he be simply cautioned by the magistrate not to say anything against himself,—any admission of guilt afterwards made, will be received as a voluntary confession.<sup>3</sup> More doubt may be entertained as to the law, if the promise has proceeded from a person of superior authority, as a magistrate, and the confession is afterwards made to an inferior officer; because a caution from this latter person might be insufficient to efface the expectation of mercy, which had previously been raised in the prisoner's mind.<sup>4</sup>

§ 803. Passing now to the nature of the inducement, it may be laid down as a general rule, that in order to exclude a confession, the inducement, whether it assume the shape of a promise, a threat, or mere advice, must have reference to the prisoner's escape from the criminal charge against him. It is not here meant that at the time when the inducement is held out, the charge against the prisoner must actually have been made; for where a man was threatened to be given into custody without any offence being then specified, but afterwards the nature of the charge was stated, and he confessed his guilt, the judges held that the confession was not admissible.<sup>1</sup> Still, the promise or threat, to have the effect of excluding the statement, must be such as is calculated to influence the prisoner's mind with respect to his escape from the charge. A confession, therefore, will be received, though it were induced by spiritual exhortations, whether of a clergyman,<sup>2</sup> or of any other person;<sup>3</sup> for such a confession can scarcely be regarded as untrue; and the law of England, Ireland, and America,—unlike that which prevails in Scotland,<sup>4</sup> or in other countries subject to the Roman law,<sup>5</sup>—does not, as will presently be pointed out,<sup>6</sup> regard penitential confessions to a priest in the light of privileged communications. So, a promise of some merely collateral benefit or boon, as for instance, a promise to give the prisoner some spirits,<sup>7</sup> or to strike off his hand-cuffs,<sup>8</sup> or to let

It was lawful, however, for the priest to testify in such cases to the fact, that the party had made such a penitential confession to him as the Church requires, and that he had enjoined penance upon him; and, with the express consent of the penitent, he might lawfully testify to the substance of the confession itself. Neither will an inducement held out to a prisoner with reference to one charge, exclude a consequent confession which relates to another;<sup>2</sup> unless the two offences be so blended together as to constitute in reality but one transaction.<sup>3</sup> So, where a woman was indicted for concealing the birth of her child, her acknowledgment that she had been confined was received in evidence, though made in consequence of the doctor having threatened that he would examine her person.<sup>4</sup> So, also, confessions will in general be admitted, though caused by intimidating language, provided the intimidation has had no reference to the charge, and was not otherwise calculated to produce any untrue statement.<sup>5</sup>

prisoner, whether by a magistrate,<sup>1</sup> officer,<sup>2</sup> or private person;<sup>3</sup> and the form of the question is immaterial, even though it assumes the prisoner's guilt.<sup>4</sup> So, if a prisoner makes a confession under the hope, held out by a person not in authority, that he will thereby be admitted as Queen's evidence, it will be received against him;<sup>5</sup> and the same result will follow, though his hopes have been excited by a constable or other officer, if on the trial of his accomplices he refuses to make a full disclosure, and thus violates the condition on which his claim to favour can alone rest.<sup>6</sup> So, what the accused has been overheard muttering to himself, or saying to his wife or to any other person in confidence, will be receivable in evidence;<sup>7</sup> though the wife, attorney, and counsel of the prisoner will not, on grounds that will be presently explained, be themselves allowed to reveal what he has said to them.<sup>8</sup> A voluntary confession, too, is admissible, to whomsoever it may have been made, though it does not appear that the prisoner was warned that what he said would be used against him; nay, though it appears on the contrary that he was not so warned.<sup>9</sup>

§ 805. In most cases, indeed, it may be advisable and proper to caution the prisoner in general terms, that any confession he makes will be admissible against him at the trial, and can do him no service;<sup>1</sup> because, if it should turn out that any threat or inducement has been previously held out by some person in authority, the confession, which is unaccompanied by such caution, will, as before stated,<sup>2</sup> be inadmissible. Still, it is not necessary, in general, to do more than to show that the party receiving the confession left the prisoner at full liberty to act and judge for himself; and though it should appear that immediately before the admission was made the accused was in the custody of another person, the court, unless some reason exists for suspecting collusion, will not compel the prosecutor to call such person as a witness, or to prove that he did not hold out any threat or inducement.<sup>3</sup> In order, however, to free the evidence from all reasonable objection, it will be prudent, especially in important cases, to call any persons in authority, who, shortly before the confession was made, either had the prisoner in custody, or held any conversation with him.<sup>4</sup> Notwithstanding the law is as above stated, many justices of the peace, both in England and Ireland, are in the habit of dissuading the culprit, with more or less earnestness, from disclosing any fact which may tend to establish his guilt. This practice, which is rather to be admired for romantic generosity than for wisdom, or for any beneficial consequences resulting therefrom to the public,<sup>5</sup> has been very properly condemned by several able judges, as an absurd and improper mode of shutting up one of the most valuable sources of justice and truth.<sup>6</sup>

§ 806.<sup>1</sup> It has been thought that illegal imprisonment is calculated to exert such influence upon the mind of the prisoner, as to justify the inference that his confessions made during its continuance were not voluntary; and on one occasion, they appear on this ground to have been rejected.<sup>2</sup> But this doctrine cannot yet be considered as satisfactorily established.<sup>3</sup>

§ 807. From the preceding observations and cases, it is clear, that a confession, to be inadmissible, must have been made in consequence of some inducement or threat, which, being held out or sanctioned by a person in authority, related to the prisoner's escape from the charge against him. Still, the question remains, what language is sufficient to constitute such inducement or threat; and here the reported decisions certainly furnish a very unsatisfactory guide. Some reason may be given for applying the rule to such words as these:—"Unless<sup>4</sup> you give me a more satisfactory account, I will take you before a magistrate;"<sup>5</sup> "If you will tell me where my goods are, I will be favourable to you;"<sup>6</sup> "I only want my money, and if you give me that, you may go to the devil;"<sup>7</sup> "If you will not tell all you know about it, of course we can do nothing;"<sup>8</sup> "You are under suspicion of this, and you had better tell all you know;"<sup>9</sup> "The watch has been found, and if you do not tell me who your partner was, I will commit you to

Indeed, the judges themselves have of late years come to this conclusion, and after solemn discussion of the subject in the Court of Criminal Appeal, they have expressly overruled the last three decisions cited above, as cases which are discreditable to the law.<sup>9</sup> So anxious was the court at one time to exclude evidence of confessions, that exhortations not to tell lies, but to speak the truth, have been deemed likely to induce a false acknowledgment of guilt; and, consequently, admissions made after such exhortations have more than

§ 808. Where the inducement relates to the charge against the prisoner, and comes from a person in authority, it is not necessary that it should be directly held out to the prisoner himself; but it will equally have the effect of excluding his confession, if there be good reason to believe that it has come to his knowledge, and has influenced his conduct. Thus, where a superior clerk in the post-office said to the wife of a postman, who was in custody for opening and detaining a letter, "Do not be frightened; I hope nothing will happen to your husband beyond the loss of his situation;"—the prisoner's subsequent confession was rejected, it appearing that the wife might have communicated to him the substance of this statement.<sup>3</sup> So, where in a case of murder, Government had published a handbill, offering pardon to any one of the offenders, except the person who struck the blow, who should give such information as would lead to the conviction of his accomplices; and it appeared that the prisoner was aware of this offer, and was induced by it to make a confession, the court held that what he said could not be given in evidence.<sup>4</sup>

§ 809.<sup>5</sup> The rule that the confession must be voluntary, is equally applicable to cases where the prisoner has made a statement during the preliminary inquiry before the magistrate. The practice of subjecting the accused to a compulsory examination, and even of putting him to the torture, was familiar to the Roman law,<sup>6</sup> and both these modes of proceeding were legal in Scotland

so late as the reign of Queen Anne.<sup>1</sup> In England, too, down to the reign of Charles the First, the rack was occasionally employed as an apt engine for wringing truth from the victims of the Star Chamber and the High Commission Court;<sup>2</sup> and even Lord Coke, till he became a patriot, and saw political offences with the eyes of a leader of the Opposition, was prepared to wink at, if not to justify, its use;<sup>3</sup> while Lord Bacon, to his eternal infamy, did not hesitate, as Attorney-General, to superintend, in person, the torture of an aged clergyman.<sup>4</sup> However, in the year 1628, on the trial of Felton for the murder of the Duke of Buckingham, the evidence being amply sufficient to insure a conviction without the use of torture, and the prisoner threatening, that, were he put to the rack, he might possibly accuse Bishop Laud, or some other of the lords of the council as being accessories to the fact, the judges came to an unanimous opinion, that "no such punishment as torture by the rack was known or allowed by our law;"<sup>5</sup> and since that decision no attempt has been made to revive this atrocious practice.<sup>6</sup>

§ 810. Though torture was thus formally abolished before the middle of the seventeenth century, it was not till after the lapse of many years that the common law doctrine, nemo tenetur prodere seipsum, was fully recognised, or at least was interpreted to mean, as it does in the present day, that all confessions should be strictly voluntary; for no man can read the cases reported among the State trials, without observing, that, up to a comparatively modern date, persons accused of flagrant or political offences were earnestly pressed, in their preliminary examinations, to acknowledge their guilt; while, at their trial, recourse was frequently had to every artifice of cross-examination, in order to entrap them into a confession, or to detect some falsehood or inconsistency in the statements which they had made in support of their innocence. This practice, which still continues in France,<sup>1</sup> and in other countries on the continent of Europe, and which certainly is no mean instrument for the discovery of truth, has been regarded both in this country and in America, during the last century, as savouring of unfairness and oppression, and has consequently been discontinued; and, though assuredly few Englishmen would wish to see this mode of proceeding re-established in all its harshness and vigour in our criminal courts, some will probably consider that false sentiments of humanity and fair dealing have been carried much too far in an opposite direction.

§ 811. The first Acts which regulated the examination of prisoners before the magistrates, were passed in the reign of Queen Mary;<sup>2</sup> and these statutes, the principles of which have been adopted in several of the United States,<sup>3</sup> were followed in England by the Act of 7 G. 4, c. 64, and in Ireland by the corresponding Act of 9 G. 4, c. 54. The statutes, however, which now define the course of practice in either country are 11 & 12 V., c. 42, and 14 & 15 V., c. 93.<sup>4</sup> The first of these two Acts, which any admission or confession of his guilt, but that whatever he shall then say may be given in evidence against him on his trial, notwithstanding such promise or threat: Provided, nevertheless, that nothing herein enacted or contained shall prevent the prosecutor in any case from giving in evidence any admission or confession, or other statement of the person accused or charged, made at any time, which by law would be admissible as evidence against such person.”<sup>1</sup>

§ 812. If the above clause be read in connexion with the form given in the schedule to the Act,<sup>2</sup> it would seem that, in order to render a prisoner's statement strictly valid as a statutory confession, the following circumstances must all have occurred. The charge must have been read to the accused;<sup>3</sup> all the witnesses must have been examined in his presence,<sup>4</sup> and the depositions read to him after the examinations were completed;<sup>5</sup> he must then, and not till then, be twice cautioned by the justice; first, generally,<sup>6</sup> and, secondly, as to the inefficacy of any promises or threats which may have been formerly held out to him;<sup>7</sup> his whole statement must next be taken down in his own words;<sup>8</sup> it must then be read to him,<sup>9</sup> and he must be pressed for his signature,<sup>10</sup> though the Act is silent as to the effect of his refusing to sign it, or even to admit its correctness; the justice must also sign the statement;<sup>11</sup> and this being done, it must be kept with the depositions, and be transmitted, together with them and certain other documents, to the court where the trial is to be had, on or before the opening of such court.<sup>12</sup>

§ 813. Notwithstanding these minute directions, it is not easy to see how the prisoner on his trial could avail himself of any neglect of them on the part of the justice, whether intentional or otherwise; for the statement transmitted, if headed in the manner pointed out by the schedule, is made evidence against the prisoner on its mere production, and without any proof of the mode in which it was taken down, unless it can be shown that the signature of the justice is a forgery. Whether this was the intention of the Legislature may, perhaps, be doubted; but such is the apparent effect of the language employed. It is also clear, from the last proviso which is appended to the 18th section of the Act, that any statement made by the prisoner in the magistrate's presence, before the examinations of the witnesses for the prosecution are all completed, may be proved by parol evidence, and will be admissible against him, even though no caution has been previously given.<sup>1</sup>

§ 814. The judges, as might have been expected, have felt much embarrassment in putting a sensible interpretation on these ill-drawn provisions; and the cases as reported on the subject are extremely unsatisfactory. In one,<sup>2</sup> Mr. Baron Alderson is made to entertain much doubt whether, in spite of the general language of the Act, it was not necessary to prove by independent evidence that the accused had been duly cautioned by the magistrate, although the caption of the examination contained a positive declaration to that effect. In another,<sup>3</sup> Mr. Justice Coleridge, after consulting Cresswell, J., is said to have expressed an opinion, that the first proviso in § 18 of the Act, which relates to the special caution to be given to the accused for the purpose of removing the effect of any previous threat or inducement, was a condition precedent, and that, in the absence of any proof that it had been acted upon, the statement of the prisoner was inadmissible. These dicta, however, appear to be wholly unfounded; and if the case of R. v. Sansome, be correctly given in Mr. Cox's

Criminal Law Cases,<sup>1</sup> they have been overruled. According to this reporter, the judges expressly determined in that case, that when an examination was transmitted by the committing magistrate in the statutory form, it became admissible without further proof;<sup>2</sup> and Mr. Baron Parke went so far as to assert that, in his judgment, it would be receivable in evidence, though neither of the cautions was stated to have been given. Too much reliance, however, should not be placed on this last dictum: and until the law is more clearly defined by judicial construction, it certainly will be prudent for committing magistrates not only to adopt the form set out in the schedule to the Act, but to give the prisoner in all cases the second caution as well as the first.<sup>3</sup>

§ 815. Although a written examination, if it purport to be taken in conformity with the Act, and to be signed by the committing magistrate, is in strictness admissible without proof, it may still be advisable in serious cases, as a matter of caution, to call either the justice or the clerk, so that it may clearly appear that the proceedings have been conducted in the proper manner.<sup>4</sup> Indeed, this course may become necessary, if the document has not been drawn out in the form given in the schedule, or if it contains erasures or interlineations which require explanation.<sup>5</sup> If, too, the prisoner has not signed his name or mark to the paper, some witness, who was present at the inquiry, should, in prudence, be forthcoming to speak to its identity, and to prove that it was read over to the accused, and assented to by him.<sup>6</sup> It would seem to be further necessary to the validity of an examination as evidence per se, that it should appear on the face of the document that it was taken while the prisoner was under examination on a charge of felony or misdemeanor, or of suspicion of one of those crimes, and that the justices signing it were acting as justices pursuant to statute.<sup>1</sup> Whether these facts must appear by a separate caption is a point which is not yet determined. The form in the schedule gives a separate caption, but that form, though legalised, is not rendered necessary by the Act;<sup>2</sup> and under the old law, provided the examination was written on the same paper as the depositions, the heading at the commencement was held to apply to all the statements contained in the document.<sup>3</sup> In this respect the rule agreed with that which governs examinations taken under the Poor Law Acts; for it is not necessary, as was once supposed,<sup>4</sup> that such examinations should have distinct captions, but it will suffice to state in the first caption the names of all the witnesses.<sup>5</sup>

§ 816. As the admissibility of statutory examinations without proof rests on the presumption that the justices have done their duty, it seems to follow that no evidence can be received tending to contradict or vary the statements contained in the documents as returned. This was the law before the late Act was passed,<sup>6</sup> and that Act does not appear to have introduced any change in the practice.<sup>7</sup> Whether this presumption is of so conclusive a character as to exclude all parol evidence, which is tendered with the view of adding to the written examination, is a question of doubt and difficulty; but as the Act renders it incumbent on the justice, not only to reduce to writing so much of the prisoner's examination as may be material,<sup>8</sup> but to take down his whole statement,<sup>9</sup> it would seem right to hold that he had done so, and that no parol evidence of any additional statement made at the same time could be received.<sup>10</sup>

§ 817. If, however, parol evidence of such additional statement be admissible on the part of the prosecution, the prisoner, a fortiori, would seem entitled to pray it in aid of his defence; and this view of the law is sanctioned, not only by the case of Venafrá v. Johnson,<sup>1</sup> but also by the authority of Mr. Starkie and Mr. Phillipps; the latter of whom, while he denies the right of the Crown, admits the right of the accused, to produce such evidence.<sup>2</sup> Whatever may be the correct rule upon this particular point, it is clear, from the last proviso which is appended to § 18 of the Act, that<sup>3</sup> a written examination will not exclude parol evidence, either of an extra-judicial confession, previously or subsequently made;<sup>4</sup> or of a statement made before the justice on a former investigation, and not incorporated in the examination returned;<sup>5</sup> or of anything incidentally said by the prisoner while the witnesses were deposing against him, even though it were addressed to the magistrate himself,<sup>6</sup> and no caution had been previously given.<sup>7</sup> So, if it can be proved that the prisoner's examination was not reduced to writing, parol evidence of what he said before the magistrates will be received;<sup>8</sup> though the presumption that all things were done as the law requires, renders it necessary for the Crown to give clear evidence on this point;<sup>9</sup> and on more than one occasion, the judges seem to have thought it necessary that the magistrate or his clerk should be called to prove the negative fact.<sup>1</sup> Again, if the written examination be shown to have been lost,<sup>2</sup> or if it be wholly inadmissible under the statute by reason of irregularity, parol evidence will be received to prove what the prisoner voluntarily disclosed;<sup>3</sup> and in this last event of the examination being rejected for informality, it may still be used, either as a contemporaneous writing, to refresh the memory of the witness who wrote it,<sup>4</sup> or if it be signed by the prisoner, it will be receivable at common law, as his confession, the signature being first proved, and it being shown that he knew what it contained.<sup>5</sup>

§ 818. One species of irregularity, however, in excluding the examination as evidence per se, prevents its being used to refresh the writer's memory, and shuts out all parol testimony of what was said on the same occasion. The irregularity in question is where the examination purports to have been taken upon oath.<sup>6</sup> This rule, which is supported by too many authorities to admit of dispute, rests upon two principles of law, both of which are of very questionable policy, as applied to the particular case under discussion. The first is a principle which has been several times mentioned above, namely, that the confession of a prisoner must be voluntary: and it is contended, that a statement made under oath is not so. This is certainly true in one sense, though not in that in which it is used by the advocates for exclusion. A confession not voluntary is excluded. Why? because it may be untrue. A confession made upon oath cannot be rejected on this ground; since it is absurd to contend, that an oath, which in all other cases is rightly considered as the most effectual test of truth, should, if taken by a prisoner, be regarded as an inducement to falsehood. But then, it is urged, nemo tenetur prodere seipsum; a prisoner should not be compelled to criminate himself. Admitted; but what then? A prisoner, though sworn, is no more bound to criminate himself, than if he were simply interrogated without any oath being administered to him. He has still full liberty to decline to make any explanation or declaration whatever: though if he does consent to answer the questions put to him, he may, perhaps, incur the penalties of perjury should he knowingly utter what is false.<sup>1</sup> “But a friendless accused is not aware of the law in his favour.” This may be so; but in what other case is a party at liberty to set up his ignorance of the law? If the maxim of the common law, ignorantia legis neminem excusat, be sound, as it unquestionably is; and if, consequently, the defence of acting in ignorance cannot protect an offender even from punishment; on what principle of justice is the accused entitled to say, “I confessed my crime, and have sworn that my statement is true; but you, the jury, must not hear what I said, because I was not aware of the existence of a rule of law, which would have expressly justified me in holding my peace”? If the practice of examining prisoners on oath be deemed inquisitorial and harsh, let it be discountenanced, not by rejecting a confession so obtained, but by prohibiting justices from acting in this manner, or even by rendering them liable to a penalty in case of disobedience.

§ 819. It may be thought, at first view, that if this change were effected, the practical result would be the same; but this is not so; since, at present, not only are all confessions made upon oath rejected, but all those which purport to be so made;<sup>2</sup> and this leads us to the second principle of law, on which the rule under discussion rests. That principle is, that as the justices, in discharge of their duty, ought to make a true return of what took place before them, the court will presume that they have done so ; and, therefore, will not admit parol evidence to vary or contradict the written document so returned. Now, the fallacy of this reasoning is obvious. In the first place, the presumption, omnia ritè esse acta, is not conclusive in ordinary cases, and should not be so in this ; and next, even supposing that it should, it does not apply. The duty of the justice is two-fold : first, to examine the prisoner without administering an oath to him ;<sup>1</sup> and, secondly, to make a true return of his statement. If, then, an examination be returned, which purports to have been taken on oath, the presumption that this return is true is at least counterbalanced by the opposite presumption, that the justice has discharged his duty by not swearing the prisoner ; and the result is, that parol evidence should be received, in order to ascertain which presumption is in accordance with the fact. The principle, that written documents shall not be varied or contradicted by parol testimony, may apply to the body of the examination, which is taken down by the justice or his clerk, and is expressly assented to by the accused ; but it should not extend to the mere formal heading or conclusion of the examination, which is not, or at least need not be, read over to the prisoner, or admitted to be correct by him ; and a mis-statement in which may, and, in fact, notoriously does, often arise from the inadvertence or carelessness of the magistrate or his clerk. If the justice were liable to a penalty, as above suggested, for taking a prisoner's confession on oath, he would clearly be entitled, if sued or prosecuted for such penalty, to show that, though the examination purported on its face to have been taken on oath, the prisoner was not in fact sworn ; and no real danger could be apprehended, but on the contrary much benefit would accrue to the administration of criminal justice, if a similar course of proceeding were allowed, when the question was whether a confession was receivable or not. However, as before stated, the authorities in favour of rejecting examinations which purport to be upon oath, are so numerous and consistent, that, without the aid of the Legislature, little hope can be entertained that a more satisfactory rule will be adopted in practice.<sup>1</sup>

§ 820. Where a prisoner, on being mistaken for a witness, was partially examined upon oath, but, the mistake being discovered, the deposition was destroyed,—a subsequent statement made by him, after due caution from the magistrate, was held to be clearly admissible.<sup>2</sup> And, indeed, the rule excluding sworn confessions seems strictly confined, at common law, to the case of a statement, made by the party upon oath, while a prisoner under examination respecting the criminal charge.<sup>3</sup> It is true that one or two decisions by Mr. Baron Gurney might be cited, which seem to extend the rule somewhat further, and to render inadmissible confessions made on oath to magistrates or coroners by parties, who, after being examined as witnesses, have themselves been committed for trial;<sup>4</sup> but the authority of these decisions has been much shaken by subsequent cases,<sup>5</sup> and they cannot now be safely relied upon as law.

§ 821. Thus, the judges have held, that, on an indictment for forging a bill of exchange, depositions of the prisoner, which had been taken on oath before commissioners of bankruptcy, after the prisoner had been charged before the mayor with forging the bill, were admissible against him;<sup>6</sup> and in another case, where a bankrupt had been examined before a commissioner touching some matter irrespective of his trade dealings, and had not objected to answer the questions put, his examination was held to be admissible evidence against him on a subsequent criminal charge.<sup>1</sup> So, also, on the trial of an indictment for conspiracy, the answers in Chancery of the defendants, made on oath by them in a suit instituted against them by the prosecutor, have been received.<sup>2</sup> An affidavit, too, has been given in evidence against a prisoner, which was sworn by him in a suit in Doctors' Commons;<sup>3</sup> and depositions made by prisoners, when examined as witnesses against other persons on criminal charges, have several times been admitted against themselves.<sup>4</sup> Nay, in one case, the very point decided by Mr. Baron Gurney was distinctly overruled by Chief Justice Cockburn; and a deposition was admitted against a prisoner, who had made it before the justices while under examination as a witness, and who, in consequence of its self-criminating character, had been committed to take his trial.<sup>5</sup> So, upon a trial for manslaughter, the prisoner's deposition on oath, taken by the coroner upon the inquest, has been admitted in evidence against him.<sup>6</sup> So the testimony, given by a prisoner before a committee of the House of Commons, has been read against him on a criminal trial;<sup>7</sup> though this case is of little authority on the subject under discussion, as the evidence could not then have been given on oath.<sup>8</sup> The case of R. v. Britton,<sup>9</sup> which is sometimes cited as a decision conflicting with the above proposition, is in fact no hostile authority, as the only question there determined was, that on an indictment against a bankrupt for not disclosing his effects under the commission, his balance-sheet, which was only admissible in the event of the commission being valid, could not be given in evidence to prove the petitioning creditor's debt as a part of the commission.<sup>1</sup> On the whole it seems clear, that if a prisoner, on being examined as a witness, has consented to answer questions, to which he might have demurred as tending to criminate himself, and which, therefore, he was not bound to answer, his statement will be deemed voluntary, and, as such, may be subsequently used against himself for all purposes,<sup>2</sup> unless he be protected by the special language of some statute.<sup>3</sup>

§ 822. Although a prisoner cannot, at common law, exclude his own confession, on the sole ground that it was made by him while a witness under oath, yet, if he can prove that, when questions tending to criminate him were put, he had claimed the protection of the court, and had still been illegally compelled to answer, his answers cannot be given in evidence against himself.<sup>4</sup> Testimony so obtained is excluded, not, as it seems, because it may possibly be untrue, but because the right of the witness to be silent has been infringed; and it is deemed expedient on grounds of public policy, to uphold the broad legal maxim, that no man shall be forced to criminate himself.<sup>5</sup>

§ 823. Although the statutes which prescribe the duty of coroners contain no provision for taking the examination of the accused, but simply enact, that every coroner shall put in writing the evidence given to the jury before him, or as much thereof as shall be material, and shall certify and subscribe the same, and deliver it to the officer of the court in which the trial is to be,<sup>6</sup>—it seems on several occasions to have been assumed, that the coroner has the same authority to take the examination of a prisoner as a magistrate.<sup>1</sup>

§ 824.<sup>2</sup> Where, in consequence of information unduly obtained from the prisoner, the property stolen, or the instrument of the crime, or the body of the person murdered, or any other material fact, has been discovered, proof is admissible that such discovery was made conformably with the information so obtained. The prisoner's statement as to his knowledge of the place where the property or other article was to be found, being thus confirmed by the fact, is shown to be true, and not to have been fabricated in consequence of any inducement. It is, therefore, competent to prove that the prisoner stated that the thing would be found by searching a particular place, and that it was accordingly so found; but it would not be competent to inquire whether he confessed that he had concealed it there.<sup>3</sup> Lord Eldon has laid down the rule somewhat more strictly, saying, in Harvey's case,<sup>4</sup> that, where the knowledge of any fact was obtained from a prisoner, under such a promise as excluded the confession from being given in evidence, he should direct an acquittal, unless the fact proved would itself have been sufficient to warrant a conviction, without any confession leading to it. But the sounder doctrine seems to be, that so much of the confession as relates distinctly to the fact discovered by it may be given in evidence, as this part at least of the statement cannot have been false.<sup>5</sup>

§ 825.<sup>6</sup> If the prisoner himself delivers up the goods stolen, the fact that this was done upon inducements to confess held out by persons in authority, will afford no ground for rejecting his

declarations, contemporaneous with the act of delivery, and explanatory of its object, though they may amount to a confession of guilt.<sup>1</sup> But whatever he may have said at the same time, not qualifying or explaining the act of delivery, must be rejected. And if, notwithstanding the prisoner's confession, thus improperly induced, and any acts done by him in furtherance of the discovery, the search for the property or person in question be ineffectual, no proof of either the confession or the acts can be received. The confession is excluded, because, being made under the influence of a promise, it cannot be relied upon; and the acts done under the same influence, not being confirmed by the finding of the property or person, are open to the same objection. The influence which may produce a groundless confession, may also produce groundless conduct.<sup>2</sup>

§ 826. A prisoner is not liable to be affected by the confessions of his accomplices; <sup>3</sup> and so strictly has this rule been enforced, that where a person was indicted for receiving stolen goods, a confession by the principal that he was guilty of the theft, was held by all the judges to be no evidence of that fact as against the receiver; <sup>4</sup> and the decision, it seems, would be the same, if both parties were indicted together, and the principal were to plead guilty.<sup>5</sup>

agent or servant may be shown in evidence, as proof that such an act was done; for a fact must be established by the same evidence, whether it be followed by a criminal or civil consequence; but it is a totally different question, in the consideration of criminal as distinguished from civil justice, how the principal may be affected by the fact, when so established. For though the wrongful or fraudulent act of the agent may involve his principal civilly,<sup>1</sup> it cannot convict him of a crime, unless further proof be given that the principal has directed, or, at least, assented to such act.<sup>2</sup> Where it was proposed to show that an agent of the prosecutor, not called as a witness, had offered a bribe to a witness, who also was not called, the evidence was held inadmissible; though the general doctrine, as above stated, was recognised.<sup>3</sup> The rule thus generally laid down is open to an apparent exception in the case of the proprietor of a newspaper, who is, primâ facie, criminally responsible for any libel it contains, though inserted by his agent or servant without his knowledge. But Lord Tenterden considered this case as falling strictly within the principle of the rule; for “surely,” said he, “a person who derives profit from, and furnishes means for carrying on, the concern, and intrusts the conduct of the publication to one whom he selects, and in whom he confides, may be said to cause to be published what actually appears, and ought to be answerable, though you cannot show that he was individually concerned in the particular publication.”<sup>4</sup> Yet even here the defendant may prove, if he can, that the publication was made by his servant without his authority, consent, or knowledge, and that it did not arise from want of due care or caution on his part.<sup>5</sup> from his silent acquiescence in the statements of others, made in his presence, respecting himself;<sup>1</sup> provided they were not made either before a magistrate, when the prisoner, from a sense of decorum, might have felt himself restrained from interposing, or under any other circumstances, which would naturally have prevented him from replying.<sup>2</sup> In the case of R. v. Newman,<sup>3</sup> it was sought to push this doctrine to an unwarrantable length. That was an information for libel, to which truth was pleaded as a justification under the Act of 6 & 7 V., c. 96, and the defendant tendered evidence to prove that the very imputations contained in the libel in question, had been previously published in another work, and that the prosecutor, though well aware of that fact, had taken no steps to obtain redress. The court, however, very properly rejected the evidence, as being far too vague to be received in a court of justice as any proof of acquiescence.

CHAPTER XVI.

EVIDENCE EXCLUDED ON GROUNDS OF PUBLIC POLICY.

§ 829.<sup>1</sup> The law excludes or dispenses with some kinds of evidence on grounds of public policy: because it is thought that greater mischiefs would probably result from requiring or permitting their admission, than from wholly rejecting them. This rule of law has respect, in some cases, to the person testifying, and will hereafter be discussed in the chapter relating to the Competency of Witnesses.<sup>2</sup> In other cases the rule applies to the matter concerning which the witness is interrogated; and it is to this branch of the rule that our attention will at present be directed.

§ 830. The first class of subjects which the law protects from disclosure, includes all communications between husband and wife. "No husband," says the Legislature, "shall be compellable to disclose any communication made to him by his wife during the marriage, and no wife shall be compellable to disclose any communication made to her by her husband during the marriage."<sup>3</sup> This wise enactment rests on the obvious ground, that the admission of such testimony would have a powerful tendency to disturb the peace of families, to promote domestic broils, and to weaken, if not to destroy, that feeling of mutual confidence, which is the most endearing solace of married life. The protection is not confined to cases where the communication sought to be given in evidence is of a strictly confidential character, but the seal of the law is placed upon all communications of whatever nature which pass between husband and wife.<sup>4</sup> It extends also to cases in which the interests of strangers are solely involved, as well as to those in which the husband or wife is a party on the record. It is, however, limited to such matters as have been communicated "during the marriage;" and consequently, if a man were to make the most confidential statement to a woman before he married her, and it were afterwards to become of importance in a civil suit to know what that statement was, the wife, on being called as a witness, and interrogated with respect to the communication, would, as it seems, be bound to disclose what she knew of the matter.

§ 831. In interpreting the rule it may become a question, whether or not it be material that the relation of husband and wife should be still subsisting at the time when the evidence is required to be given. On the one hand, the statute speaks only of husbands and wives, and makes no reference either to widowers or widows, or to parties who have been divorced; but on the other hand, the old common law rule, which precluded husbands and wives from giving evidence for or against each other, has been construed by the judges to mean, that whatever had come to the knowledge of either party by means of the hallowed confidence which marriage inspires, could not be afterwards divulged in testimony, even though the other party were no longer living.<sup>1</sup> So, where a woman, who had been divorced by Act of Parliament, and had married another person, was offered as a witness against her former husband, to prove a contract which he had made during the coverture, Lord Alvanley held her clearly incompetent, adding, with his characteristic energy, "It never can be endured, that the confidence, which the law has created while the parties remained in the most intimate of all relations, shall be broken, whenever, by the misconduct of one party, the relation has been dissolved."<sup>2</sup>

rule is now well settled, that, where a barrister, solicitor, or attorney is professionally employed by a client, all communications which pass between them in the course and for the purpose of that employment, are so far privileged, that the legal adviser, whether he be called as a witness, or be made a defendant in equity on a bill of discovery being filed against him, cannot be permitted to disclose them, whether they be in the form of title deeds, wills,<sup>1</sup> documents, or other papers delivered, or statements made, to him, or of letters, entries, or statements, written or made by him in that capacity.<sup>2</sup> After stating the rule in this general form, it seems almost needless to add, that cases laid before counsel on behalf of a client, and the opinions of counsel thereon, stand upon precisely the same footing as other professional communications from the client to the counsel and solicitor, or to either of them, or from the counsel and solicitor, or from either of them, to the client.<sup>3</sup>

communications between a solicitor and his client, relating to matters within the ordinary scope of a solicitor's duty.<sup>1</sup> It seems, also, that the legal adviser cannot be asked whether the conference between him and his client was for a lawful or an unlawful purpose,<sup>2</sup> though, if from independent evidence it should clearly appear that the communication was made by the client for a criminal purpose, as for instance, if the attorney was questioned as to the most skilful mode of effecting a fraud, or committing any other indictable offence, it is submitted that, on the broad principles of penal justice, the attorney would be bound to disclose such guilty project.<sup>3</sup> Nay, it may reasonably be doubted whether the existence of an illegal purpose will not also prevent the privilege from attaching; for it is as little the duty of a solicitor to advise his client how to evade the law, as it is to contrive a positive fraud.<sup>4</sup>

For this reason I apprehend that if a secret, which is contrary to the public good, such as a design to commit treason, murder, or perjury, comes to the knowledge of an attorney, even in a cause wherein he is concerned, the obligation to the public must dispense with the private obligation to the client." Two of the learned judges who tried that remarkable case, Bowes, C. B., and Mounteney, B., expressed the same sentiments, see pp. 1240—1243. See, also, Gartside v. Outram, 26 L. <sup>4</sup> Russell v. Jackson, 9 Hare, 392, per Turner, V.-C., who observed: "I am very much disposed to think that the existence of an illegal purpose would prevent any privilege attaching to the communications. Where a solicitor is party to a fraud, no privilege attaches to the communications with him upon the subject, because the contriving of a fraud is no part of his duty as solicitor; and I think it can as little be said that it is part of the

it is quite immaterial whether the communication relate to any litigation commenced or anticipated;<sup>1</sup> for, as Lord Chancellor Brougham observed, in a case of high authority, "If<sup>2</sup> the privilege were confined to communications connected with suits begun, or intended, or expected, or apprehended, no one could safely adopt such precautions as might eventually render any proceedings successful, or all proceedings superfluous;"<sup>3</sup> and again, "This protection is not qualified by any reference to proceedings pending or in contemplation. If, touching matters that come within the ordinary scope of professional employment, legal advisers receive a communication in their professional capacity, either from a client, or on his account and for his benefit in the transaction of his business,—or, which amounts to the same thing, if they commit to paper, in the course of their employment on his behalf, matters which they know only through their professional relation to the client,—they are not only justified in withholding such matters, but bound to withhold them, and will not be compelled to disclose the information or produce the papers in any court of law or equity, either as party or as witness."<sup>4</sup>

§ 835.<sup>5</sup> "The foundation of this rule," adds his lordship, "is not on account of any particular importance which the law attributes to the business of legal professors, or any particular disposition to afford them protection. But it is out of regard to the interests of justice, which cannot be upholden, and to the administration of justice, which cannot go on, without the aid of men skilled in jurisprudence, in the practice of the courts, and in those matters affecting rights and obligations, which form the subject of all judicial proceedings.”<sup>1</sup> If such communications were not protected, no man, as the same learned judge remarked in another case, would dare to consult a professional adviser, with a view to his defence, or to the enforcement of his rights; and no man could safely come into a court, either to obtain redress, or to defend himself.<sup>2</sup>

§ 836. The rigid enforcement of this rule no doubt operates occasionally to the exclusion of truth; but if any law reformer feels inclined to condemn the rule on this ground, he will do well to reflect on the eloquent language of the late Lord Justice Knight Bruce, who, while discussing this subject on one occasion, felicitously observed: “Truth, like all other good things, may be loved unwisely—may be pursued too keenly—may cost too much. And surely the meanness and the mischief of prying into a man’s confidential consultations with his legal adviser, the general evil of infusing reserve and dissimulation, uneasiness, suspicion, and fear, into those communications which must take place, and

<sup>2</sup> Bolton v. Corp. of Liverpool, 1 Myl. & K. 94, 95. “This rule seems to be correlative with that which governs the summary jurisdiction of the courts over attorneys. In Ex parte Aitken, 4 B. & A. 49, that rule is laid down thus:—‘Where an attorney is employed in a matter wholly unconnected with his professional character, the court will not interfere in a summary way to compel him to execute faithfully the trust reposed in him. But where the employment is so connected with his professional character as to afford a presumption that his character formed the ground of his employment by the client, then the court will exercise this jurisdiction.’ See, also, Ex parte Yeatman, 4 Dowl. 309. So where the communication made relates to a circumstance so connected with the employment as an attorney, that the character formed the ground of the communication, it is privileged from disclosure.” Per Alderson, B., in Turquand v. Knight, 2 M. & W. 101. The Roman law rejected the evidence of the procurator and the advocate, in nearly the same cases as the common law; but not for the same reasons; the latter regarding the general interests of the community, as stated in the text, while the former seems to have considered such testimony as not credible, because of the identity of the legal adviser’s interest, opinions, and prejudices with those of his client. 1 Masc. de Prob., Concl. 66; vol. 3, Concl. 1239; Farin. which, unless in a condition of perfect security, must take place uselessly or worse, are too great a price to pay for truth itself."<sup>1</sup>

§ 837. Such being the reasons on which the rule is founded, its application has been confined, with perhaps questionable strictness, to communications which pass between a client and his legal adviser; and the protection has not been permitted to extend to any matters communicated to other persons, though such communications were made under terms of the closest secrecy. Thus,<sup>2</sup> clergymen<sup>3</sup> and medical men<sup>4</sup> are bound to disclose any information, which by acting in their professional character they have confidentially acquired; and clerks,<sup>5</sup> bankers,<sup>6</sup> stewards,<sup>7</sup> confidential friends,<sup>8</sup> and, perhaps, even licensed conveyancers,<sup>9</sup> are equally obliged to reveal what has been imparted to them in confidence, except as to matters which the principal himself would not be compelled to disclose, such as his title-deeds and private papers, in a case in which he is not a party.

cations made to clergymen in reference to criminal conduct, has been strongly urged, on the ground that evil-doers should be enabled with safety to disburthen their guilty consciences, and by spiritual instruction and discipline to seek pardon and relief. The law of Papal Rome has adopted this principle in its fullest extent, not only, as already intimated,<sup>1</sup> by excepting such confessions from the general rules of evidence, but by punishing the priest who reveals them. It has even gone further; for Mascardus, after observing that, in general, persons coming to the knowledge of facts under an oath of secrecy are compellable as witnesses to disclose them, states that confessions to a priest are not within the operation of the rule, since they are made not so much to the priest as to the Deity whom he represents; and he thence draws the jesuitical conclusion that the priest, when appearing as a witness in his private character, may lawfully swear that he knows nothing of the subject: "Hoc tamen restringe, non posse procedere in sacerdote producto in testem contra reum criminis, quando in confessione sacramentali fuit aliquid sibi dictum, quia potest dicere, se nihil scire ex eo; quod illud, quod scit, scit ut Deus, et ut Deus non producitur in testem, sed ut homo, et tanquam homo ignorat illud super quo producitur."<sup>2</sup> In Scotland, where a prisoner in custody and preparing for his trial has confessed his crimes to a clergyman, in order to obtain spiritual advice and comfort, such confession is privileged; but this privilege is not carried so far as to include communications made confidentially to clergymen in the ordinary course of their duty.<sup>3</sup> Though the law of England encourages the penitent to confess his sins "for the unburthening of his conscience, and to receive spiritual consolation and ease of mind;" yet the minister, to whom the confession is made, is merely excused from presenting the offender to the civil magistrate, and enjoined not to reveal the matter confessed, "under pain of irregularity."<sup>4</sup> In all other respects he is left to the full operation of the rules of the common law, which recognise

no distinction between clergymen and laymen, but provide that all confessions and other matters, not confided to legal counsel, must be disclosed when required for the purposes of justice.<sup>1</sup> Neither penitential confessions made to the minister or to members of the party's own Church, nor even secrets confided to a Roman Catholic priest in the course of confession, are regarded as privileged communications.<sup>2</sup>

§ 839. Although the privilege, in its full extent, applies only to the communications which pass between a client and his legal adviser,<sup>3</sup> yet, with respect to the production of title-deeds, the protection has been held applicable to the case of trustees and mortgagees, who cannot be compelled either to produce the deeds of the cestuis que trust, or mortgagors, or to give parol evidence of their contents.<sup>4</sup> It may here be laid down as a general proposition, that, whenever a party is justified in refusing to produce an instrument, he cannot be forced to disclose its contents; and although some few dicta, or even decisions,<sup>5</sup> to the contrary may be found, the rule as above stated may now be considered as established. To adopt an observation of Mr. Baron Alderson,<sup>1</sup> "It would be perfectly illusory for the law to say that a party is justified in not producing a deed, but that he is compellable to give parol evidence of its contents; that would give him, or rather his client through him, merely an illusory protection, if he happens to know the contents of the deed, and would be only a roundabout way of getting from every man an opportunity of knowing the defects there may be in the deeds and titles of his estate."

§ 840. The protection afforded<sup>1</sup> to professional confidence applies with equal force, though the client be in no shape before the court;<sup>2</sup> and although the rule which excludes hearsay prevents this question from often arising with respect to mere oral communications, it has often been discussed on occasions when an attorney has been called upon, either by subpoena duces tecum or otherwise, to produce a document with which he has been confidentially intrusted by some stranger to the suit. In such a case, if the attorney claims the privilege of the client, he will be protected not only from producing the deed or other paper, but from answering any question with respect to its nature;<sup>3</sup> and although on several occasions the court has inspected the document, and pronounced upon its admissibility, according as its production has appeared to be prejudicial or not to the client,<sup>4</sup> it seems to be now settled, that, in strict law, the judge ought not to look at the writing to see whether it is a document which may properly be withheld.<sup>5</sup> The same rule applies where the documents called for are in the hands of solicitors for the trustees of bankrupts,<sup>6</sup>

though it was at one time thought that their production was a matter of public duty.<sup>1</sup> In all these cases, if the client or principal would have been entitled, had he been called as a witness, to withhold the document, the attorney, agent, or steward cannot be compelled, though he will be permitted, to produce it;<sup>2</sup> but if both the client and the attorney, or the principal and the agent, concur in refusing to produce the document, the party calling for it may, in such an event, give secondary evidence of its contents.<sup>3</sup>

counsel, and to his opinion thereon.<sup>1</sup> Formerly it was thought that a barrister's or an attorney's clerk was not within the reason and exigency of the rule; but as the principals, being unable to transact all their business in person, are under the necessity of employing clerks, it has since been held, that such clerks cannot be permitted to disclose facts coming to their knowledge in the course of employment, unless the barrister or attorney himself might have been interrogated respecting them.<sup>2</sup> So, where a plaintiff, at the instance of his solicitors, sent out a gentleman to India, for the express purpose of acting as the solicitor's agent in the collection of evidence respecting a pending suit, letters written by the agent either to the plaintiff himself or to his solicitors on the subject of the evidence, have been regarded by the court as confidential communications.<sup>3</sup>

§ 842. The rule of protection, however, will not be carried to any further extent; and therefore, where the directors of a joint-stock company sent agents abroad to assist in winding up the affairs of the company, a correspondence between the directors and agents relative to legal proceedings, which had been commenced against the directors by certain creditors of the company, was held not to be privileged, though many of the letters had been written for the purpose of aiding the directors in their defence, and of being submitted to their solicitors.<sup>4</sup> Indeed, it may be laid down generally, in the language of Lord Cranworth, that "there is no protection as to letters between parties themselves, or from a stranger to a party, merely because such letters

§ 843. As the privilege is established, not for the benefit of the attorney, but for the protection of the client,<sup>2</sup> it would seem to extend to an executor in regard to papers coming to his hands as the personal representative of the attorney.<sup>3</sup> If, however, an attorney, in violation of his duty, should voluntarily communicate to a stranger the contents of an instrument with which he was confidentially intrusted, or should permit him to take a copy, the secondary evidence so obtained would, it seems, be admissible, provided that notice to produce the original were duly given, and the production were resisted on the ground of privilege.<sup>4</sup> Indeed,<sup>5</sup> it has more than once been laid down, that the mere fact that papers and other subjects of evidence have been illegally taken from the possession of the party against whom they are offered, or otherwise unlawfully obtained, constitutes no valid objection to their admissibility, provided they be pertinent to the issue. For the court will not notice whether they were obtained lawfully or unlawfully, nor will it raise an issue to determine that question.<sup>6</sup>

§ 844. In order to protect communications, they must have been made to the legal adviser, while he was acting, or at least while he was considered by the client as acting,<sup>7</sup> in that capacity.

The rule,<sup>1</sup> however, does not require any regular retainer, or any particular form of application or engagement, or the payment of any fees; it is enough if the legal adviser be, in any way, consulted in his professional character.<sup>2</sup> It would also seem that if a person be consulted confidentially, under the erroneous supposition that he is an attorney, he cannot be compelled to disclose the matters communicated.<sup>3</sup> But where a prisoner in custody on a charge of forgery wrote to a friend, requesting him "to ask Mr. G. or any other attorney" a question respecting the punishment of forgery, the letter was admitted in evidence, on the ground that it did not appear that the relation of attorney and client ever subsisted between Mr. G. and the prisoner.<sup>4</sup> So, if a party were to go to an attorney to discount a forged note, or to raise money on a forged will, what passed at the interview would of course not be privileged, unless, perhaps, in the event of the attorney being consulted as the party's own solicitor.<sup>5</sup>

§ 845. The question of privileged communications has hitherto been considered with respect to cases in which the legal adviser either is called as a witness, or has a bill of discovery filed against him in Chancery; but although the privilege is, as before observed, that of the client, and not that of the professional adviser, the rule of protection has not been laid down in equally broad terms, where the client himself is the party interrogated.<sup>6</sup> It has indeed been established, that, in this event, all communications between the solicitor and client, whether pending and with reference to litigation, or made before litigation and with reference thereto, or made after the dispute between the parties followed by litigation, though not in contemplation of, or with reference to, that litigation, are protected; as also are communications made respecting the subject-matter in question, pending, or in contemplation of, litigation on the same subject with other persons, with the view of asserting the same right.<sup>1</sup> If, however, communications pass between a client and solicitor before any dispute has arisen between the client and his opponent, the opponent can compel the client by a bill in equity to disclose these communications, although they relate to the matters which form the subject of the suit, except so far as they contain mere legal advice or opinions.<sup>2</sup>

§ 847. Lord Justice Knight Bruce has indeed, on one occasion,<sup>1</sup> attempted to show that the proposition stated above was not established either by Radcliffe v. Fursman,<sup>2</sup> or by Richards v. Jason,<sup>3</sup> which last case has often been cited as a decision by Lord Eldon in accordance with the rule supposed to have been laid down by the House of Lords; and his Honour has contended, at least with much plausibility, that both the judgments may be explained, on the supposition that the communications held to be unprotected in each case, were not communications which the client had made to his solicitor on his sole and exclusive behalf, and for his single and separate interest, but were communications made by him as trustee in the one case, and as copartner in the other. If this view of the subject be correct, the decisions in both cases were clearly consistent with sound principle; and it may still be urged with success, that if a man, with relation to his own private and exclusive interests merely, upon a point on which he owes no fiduciary duty to another, lays a statement before counsel for his professional advice, he cannot be compelled afterwards to disclose it, although at the time no suit or dispute was in existence.<sup>4</sup>

§ 848. If an attorney be employed for two parties, as for mortgagor and mortgagee, and peruse on behalf of the former his abstracts of the title, he cannot, as against him, disclose their contents;<sup>5</sup> and where a professional man was engaged by vendor and purchaser to prepare the deeds, and the draft conveyance was confidentially deposited with him by both parties, it was held that he could not produce it at the trial against the interest of the purchaser's devisees, though with the consent of the vendor.<sup>1</sup> If, however, an attorney, acting<sup>2</sup> as such for opposite parties, has an offer made to him by the one for the purpose of being communicated to the other, he may be called upon to disclose the nature and terms of this offer at the instance of either party.<sup>3</sup> And, where two persons, having a dispute about a claim made by one of them upon the other, went together to an attorney, when one of them made a statement, and instructed the attorney to write a letter to a third party on the subject of the claim—it was held that, in a subsequent action between these two persons, both the statement and the letter were admissible in evidence.<sup>4</sup> So, if a wife were induced by her husband to deal with her separate interest under the advice of her husband's attorney, such attorney would be regarded by the client as acting for both husband and wife; and consequently, in the event of any dispute arising between the married couple, each party would be entitled to call for the production, and to have full inspection, of all documents that might have come into the possession of the attorney in the course of the transaction.<sup>4</sup> In all these cases the question would seem to be, was the communication made by the party to the witness in the character of his own exclusive attorney? If it was, the bond of secrecy is imposed upon the witness; if it was not, the communication will not be privileged.<sup>5</sup>

§ 849.<sup>6</sup> The protection does not cease with the termination of the suit, or other litigation or business, in which the communications were made; nor is it affected by the party's ceasing to employ the attorney, and retaining another, nor by any other change of relation between them, nor by the attorney's being struck off the rolls,<sup>1</sup> nor by his becoming personally interested in the property, to the title of which the communications related,<sup>2</sup> nor even by the death of the client. The seal of the law, once fixed upon the communications, remains for ever,<sup>3</sup> unless it be removed either by the party himself, in whose favour it was placed,<sup>4</sup> or perhaps, in the event of his death, by his personal representative;<sup>5</sup> and, therefore, if the client becomes a bankrupt, his trustee cannot waive the privilege without his particular permission.<sup>6</sup> Neither does the client waive his privilege by calling the attorney as a witness, unless he also examines him in chief to the matter privileged;<sup>7</sup> and even in that case, it has been held in Ireland, that the cross-examination must be confined to the point upon which the witness has been examined in chief.<sup>8</sup>

§ 850. In stating that the privilege does not terminate with the death of the client, care must be taken to distinguish between cases where disputes arise between the client's representatives and strangers, and those in which both the litigating parties claim under the client. In the former class of cases no doubt the protection will survive for the benefit of those who represent the client; but in the latter, it would be obviously unjust to determine that the privilege should belong to the one claimant rather than to the other. The rule, therefore, has no application in cases of testamentary dispositions, and as between parties claiming under the testator; and where the question was, whether certain

§ 851. Whether the protection can be removed without the client's consent, in cases where the interests of criminal justice require the production of the evidence, may admit of some doubt.<sup>2</sup> In one case where a party had intrusted an attorney with a promissory note, and had instructed him to bring an action upon it, Mr. Justice Holroyd held that the attorney ought not to produce the note, on the trial of a subsequent indictment against his client for forgery;<sup>3</sup> and a similar decision appears to have been pronounced by the Court of King's Bench in the time of Lord Mansfield.<sup>4</sup> On the other hand, Mr. Justice Patteson has compelled an attorney, who had been employed by a mortgagor and mortgagee to negotiate a loan between them, and had received from the former a forged will as part of his title-deeds, to produce the will on a trial of the mortgagor for forging that instrument.<sup>5</sup> So, where a party having possessed himself of the title-deeds of a deceased person, placed a forged will of the deceased amongst them, and then sent the whole to his attorney, ostensibly for the purpose of asking his advice upon them, but really, as it seemed, that the attorney might find the will and act upon it,—the judges unanimously held, that the attorney was bound to produce the will on the trial of his client for forgery, it not having been intrusted to him in professional confidence, even if that would have made any difference.<sup>6</sup> Again, where a prisoner was indicted for forging a will, and it appeared that his wife had taken the will to an attorney, and asked him to advance money upon it for her husband, which he refused to do, but took a copy of the will, the judges most properly held that such copy was admissible as secondary evidence, and that the conversation between the wife and the attorney was not privileged.<sup>1</sup> This last case, however, is scarcely an authority on either side of the question; for the judges took the distinction that the attorney consulted was not the prisoner's own attorney.

§ 852.<sup>2</sup> This rule may be further illustrated by reference to the cases in which the attorney may be examined, and which are therefore sometimes mentioned as exceptions to the rule. These apparent exceptions<sup>3</sup> are—where the knowledge was not acquired by the attorney solely by his being employed professionally, but was in some measure obtained by his acting as a party to the transaction, and the more especially so, if this transaction was fraudulent;<sup>4</sup>—or where the communication was made before the attorney was employed as such, or after his employment had ceased;—or where, though consulted by a friend because he was an attorney, he had refused to act as such, and was therefore only

<sup>3</sup> Besides the exceptions here stated, the following case may be mentioned. In a suit for taking a partnership account between solicitors, semble that the plaintiff is entitled to the discovery and production of papers material to the account, though they relate to professional business transacted for clients, and the consequent effect of their production must be that some stranger will become acquainted with matters intrusted to the partners in confidence. Brown v. Perkins, 2 Hare, 540. This case obviously rests on necessity, for otherwise no account could ever be taken between solicitors acting in partnership.

<sup>4</sup> See Follett v. Jefferyes, 1 Sim. N. S. 3, 17, where Rolfe, V.-C., observed, "It is not accurate to speak of cases of fraud, contrived by the client and solicitor in concert together, as cases of exception to the general rule. They are cases not coming within the rule itself, for the rule does not apply to all which passes between a client and his solicitor, but only to what passes between them in professional confidence; and no court can permit it to be said that the contriving of a fraud can form part of the professional occupation of an attorney or solicitor." See, also, Charlton v. Coombes, 32 L. J., Ch. 284; 4 Giff. 372, S. C.; and Kelly v. Jackson, 13 Ir. Eq. R. 129.

applied to as a friend;—or where the information was obtained, not exclusively from the client, but also from some other independent source;<sup>1</sup>—or where it could not be fairly stated that any communication had been made; as where, for instance, a fact, something that was done, became known to him, from his having been brought to a certain place by the circumstance of his being the attorney, but of which fact any other man, if there, would have been equally conusant<sup>2</sup> (and even this has been held privileged in some of the cases);—or where the matter communicated was not in its nature private, and could in no sense be termed the subject of a confidential disclosure;<sup>3</sup>—or where it had no reference to professional employment, though disclosed while the relation of attorney and client subsisted;<sup>4</sup>—or where the attorney, having made himself a subscribing witness and thereby assumed another character for the occasion, adopted the duties which it imposes, and became bound to give evidence of all that a subscribing witness can be required to prove. In all such cases, it is plain that the attorney is not called upon to disclose matters, which he can be said to have learned by communication with his client, or on his client's behalf; matters, which were so committed to him in his capacity of attorney; and matters, which in that capacity alone he had come to know.<sup>5</sup>

§ 853. It may here be expedient to illustrate these apparent exceptions somewhat more at length. Thus, if an attorney, having been engaged in a conspiracy, be willing to turn informer, he cannot be prevented from disclosing what he knows of the transaction, though he may have been employed by some of the guilty parties in his professional character, and have acquired much of his knowledge in consequence of that connexion.<sup>1</sup> In one case,<sup>2</sup> usury in a mortgage was proved by the plaintiff's attorney who prepared the deed, and who was called by the defendant to prove the consideration usurious. Lord Kenyon, who admitted this evidence, assumed that the attorney had, by his conduct, become a party to the transaction ; but as the facts do not warrant this assumption, the case cannot be supported at the present day,<sup>3</sup> and it is only valuable as recognising the general principle, that if an attorney acts as a party, no knowledge he obtains will be privileged. Again, an attorney has been compelled to disclose a confession made to him by his client before the retainer, respecting an erasure in a will ;<sup>4</sup> as also a gratuitous conversation which his client had held with him after the compromise of a suit, in which he stated that he was glad the action was settled, as the promissory note on which it was founded had been indorsed to him without consideration, and with notice that it was void as being mixed up with a lottery transaction.<sup>5</sup> On the other hand, where a person, having possession of a deed in the character of trustee to the defendant, had first obtained a knowledge of its contents while acting as his attorney, the knowledge thus obtained was held to be privileged ;<sup>6</sup> and, in another case, where a solicitor became a trustee under a deed for the benefit of his client's creditors, it was held that subsequent communications made to him by the client could not be divulged.<sup>7</sup>

his duty as trustee for both parties, the communications between him and his client were not privileged as against the other cestui que trust.<sup>1</sup> So, where an attorney had been confidentially consulted, but had not been professionally employed, because he was at that time acting as undersheriff, he was held bound to disclose what had been communicated to him.<sup>2</sup> Again, in Griffith v. Davies,<sup>3</sup> a witness called by the plaintiff was permitted to state a conversation, in which the defendant proposed a compromise to the plaintiff, although, when the conversation took place, the witness was attending as attorney for the defendant; for, in this case, the knowledge gained by the witness was not by reason of its being intrusted to him in his professional character, but merely by his being present at the conversation.<sup>4</sup> So, if an attorney, by the direction of his client, makes a proposal to the opposite party, he may be compelled to disclose what he stated to that party, though he cannot divulge what his client had communicated to him;<sup>5</sup> and if communications from an adverse party be made, either directly to the solicitor for the purpose of being communicated to the client,<sup>6</sup> or to the client himself in the presence of the solicitor,<sup>7</sup> the solicitor is not at liberty to withhold them. Indeed, he is bound, as it seems, to produce all letters, and to disclose all information, communicated to him from collateral quarters.<sup>8</sup>

§ 855. The legal adviser must also disclose all questions put to him by his client, together with his answers thereto, provided such questions were asked in order to gain information respecting matters of fact, as distinguished from those put with the view of obtaining legal advice.<sup>1</sup> This proposition has, on one occasion,<sup>2</sup> been applied to circumstances which seem scarcely to have warranted its application. The question was, whether the client had committed an act of bankruptcy on a particular day. On that day the client inquired of his attorney, whether he could safely attend a particular meeting of his creditors without being arrested for debt. The attorney advised him to remain in his office, until it was ascertained whether the creditors would engage to give him safe-conduct, and he accordingly remained there for two hours to avoid being arrested, till the attorney returned from the meeting. The court held that what had passed between the attorney and his client was receivable in evidence, Lord Tenterden observing, that “a man could hardly ask, as matter of law, whether he would be free from arrest while attending a voluntary meeting of creditors, though he might well ask, as matter of fact, from the person at whose suggestion the creditors had been convened, whether any arrangement had been made with the creditors to prevent an arrest:” and his lordship added, “The attorney gives no legal advice, his answer implying that no arrangement had been made, but that he would see at the meeting whether any could be effected; and he recommends his client, not as a legal adviser, but as any agent or any friend might have recommended, to stay where he was till that matter of fact could be ascertained.”<sup>3</sup>

§ 856. Again, it is no breach of professional confidence for a legal adviser to give evidence of a fact not communicated directly to him by his client, but the knowledge of which has been acquired by him during the progress of a trial. The case of Brown v.

Foster<sup>1</sup> well illustrates this proposition. There, counsel had attended before a magistrate on behalf of a man charged with embezzlement, and the prosecutor had produced a book, in which the accused, contrary to his duty, had omitted to enter a sum of money received by him. On a subsequent examination the book was found to contain the entry. The accused afterwards brought an action for malicious prosecution, and it was held at the trial, that the counsel might give evidence that the entry was not in the book at the time of the first examination, as that fact had not been communicated to him by his client, but he had become cognisant of it through his own personal observation. An attorney may also be called, either to prove his client's handwriting, though he be acquainted with it only from having seen him sign documents in the cause;<sup>2</sup> or to disclose the name of the person by whom he was retained, in order to let in the declarations and admissions of the real party in interest;<sup>3</sup> or to discover when and to whom he parted with his client's title-deeds, and in whose possession they are.<sup>4</sup> So, for the purpose of letting in secondary evidence of the contents of a document, an attorney will be bound to answer whether it is in his possession or elsewhere in court, even though he may have obtained it from his client in the course of communication with reference to the cause.<sup>5</sup> The attorney, too, is bound to furnish any information in his power which may lead to the discovery of his client's address, especially if that client be a ward of the Court of Chancery, who is attempting to conceal his residence from the court. called to identify his client as the person who has put in, or sworn, or signed an answer in Chancery, because this, so far from being a secret, is in its very nature a matter of publicity.<sup>1</sup> From one case it would even seem that an attorney might be compelled to divulge the character in which his client employed him, as, for instance, whether as executor, or trustee, or on his own private account;<sup>2</sup> but, in America, it has been held, that counsel could not state whether they were employed to conduct an ejectment for their client, as landlord of the premises.<sup>3</sup> An attorney, who has prepared a will at the instance of a party benefited by it, is not privileged to withhold from the Court of Probate any facts connected with contemporaneous business transacted between the testator and himself on account of his client the legatee, when his opinion of the testator's capacity to make a will is in any degree founded on such facts.<sup>4</sup>

§ 857. Moreover, the privilege does not attach to unnecessary communications made by a client to his legal adviser; and therefore a prosecutor's attorney has been allowed to state that, pending the proceedings on the indictment, his client had observed to him that he would give a large sum to have the prisoner hanged;<sup>5</sup> and, in an action brought by an attorney for his bill, where the question was whether he had been employed by the defendant or by a third party, a statement made by the plaintiff to his attorney, on introducing such third party to him, was held to be excluded from the rule of privilege.<sup>6</sup> So, if an attorney attests an instrument which his client executes, he may be compelled to prove the execution; for by becoming a subscribing witness he makes himself a public man, and pledges himself to give evidence on the subject, whether he be called by

§ 858. But where the assignees of a bankrupt, in an action of assumpsit brought by them, endeavoured to establish that the bankrupt had made a fraudulent conveyance to his son, and, in order to prove this transaction, called the bankrupt's attorney, Lord Ellenborough held that, though, as attesting witness to the deed, he was bound to disclose what took place at the time of its execution, he was privileged from stating what occurred during its concoction and preparation, and could not be asked whether it had not been subsequently destroyed, if the only knowledge he had, as to its concoction, preparation, or destruction, was acquired from his confidential situation as attorney.<sup>2</sup> So, a legal adviser cannot, as it would seem, disclose in what condition an instrument was, when it was intrusted to him by his client, as whether or not it were then stamped, or indorsed, or had an erasure upon it;<sup>3</sup> and in an action of trover for a lease, brought by the assignees of a bankrupt, where the question was whether the lease had been deposited with the defendant by the bankrupt before or after the bankruptcy, an attorney, who, after the act of bankruptcy, had been applied to by the bankrupt to procure a loan, was not permitted to state whether his client had, on that occasion, brought to him the lease; for the purpose of raising money upon it.<sup>4</sup>

Abinger observed, that this passage "must apply to a case where the attorney has his knowledge independently of any communication from the client; it cannot mean that where the attorney, coming to the client for a confidential purpose, obtains some other collateral information which he would not otherwise have possessed, he can be compelled to disclose it." p. 541. compellable to testify as to certain matters, in which they have been judicially or professionally engaged; though, like ordinary persons, they may be called upon to speak to any foreign and collateral matters, which happened in their presence, while the trial was pending, or after it was ended.<sup>1</sup> In regard to judges of courts of record, it is considered dangerous, or at least highly inconvenient, to compel them to state what occurred before them in court; and on this ground the grand jury have been advised not to examine a chairman of quarter sessions, as to what a person testified in a trial in his court.<sup>2</sup> The case of arbitrators is governed by the same general policy; and neither the courts of law nor of equity will disturb the deliberate decision of an arbitrator, by requiring him to disclose the grounds of his award, unless under very cogent circumstances, such as upon an allegation of fraud; for Interest reipublicæ ut sit finis litium.<sup>3</sup> Of course, a judge or an arbitrator may, by his own consent, be examined respecting the facts proved, or the matters claimed, at the trial or the reference;<sup>4</sup> and an arbitrator may be asked questions for the purpose of showing that he has exceeded his powers, as, for instance, by awarding compensation for injuries not included in the matters submitted to him.<sup>5</sup> With respect to barristers, it has been held that they cannot be forced to prove what was stated by them on a motion before the court;<sup>6</sup> and the like privilege has been strenuously claimed, though not expressly recognised, where a counsel was called upon as a witness to disclose a confidential negotiation, into which, on behalf of his client, he had entered with a third party, though the client himself waived all objection to the course of examination proposed.<sup>7</sup>

§ 860.<sup>1</sup> A fourth class of cases, in which evidence is excluded from motives of public policy, comprises secrets of State, or matters, the disclosure of which would be prejudicial to the public interest. These matters are such as concern the administration, either of penal justice, or of government; but the principle of public safety is in both cases the same, and the rule of exclusion is applied no further than the attainment of that object requires. Thus, in Crown prosecutions, and in Exchequer informations for frauds committed against the revenue laws, witnesses for the Crown will not, on cross-examination, be permitted to disclose either the names of their employers, or the nature of the connexion between them, or the names of the persons from whom they received information, or the names of those to whom they gave information, whether such last-mentioned persons were magistrates, or actually concerned in the executive administration, or were only the channel through which the communication was made to Government.<sup>2</sup> Neither can the witness be asked whether he himself was the informer.<sup>3</sup> “It is perfectly right,” said Lord Chief Justice Eyre, in Hardy’s case,<sup>4</sup> “that all opportunities should be afforded to discuss the truth of the evidence given against a prisoner; but there is a rule, which has universally obtained, on account of its importance to the public for the detection of crimes, that those persons, who are the channel by means of which the detection is made, should not be unnecessarily disclosed.”

§ 861. The protection afforded by this rule will be equally upheld, though the witness, in his examination in chief, has admitted that suggestions have been made to him on the part of the Government;<sup>5</sup> and the doctrine has been even carried so far, that, where a witness, believing the views of certain parties to be dangerous to the State, had consulted a private friend as to what steps he should pursue, and the friend advised him to communicate the information to Government, a majority of the learned judges held that the name of his friend could not be disclosed.<sup>1</sup> They<sup>2</sup> were also, in the same case, unanimously of opinion, that all questions tending to the discovery of the channels by which the information was given to the officers of justice, were, upon the general principle of public convenience, to be suppressed; that all persons in that situation were protected from the discovery; and that, if an objection were raised to the question, it was no more competent for the defendant to ask who had advised the witness to give information, than to ask to whom he had given it in consequence of that advice, or to put any other question respecting the channel of communication.<sup>3</sup> The witness, however, may still be asked,—though little practical advantage can be gained by putting such a question,—whether the person to whom the information was communicated was a magistrate or not.<sup>4</sup>

§ 862. It may well be doubted whether this rule of protection extends to ordinary prosecutions;<sup>5</sup> and even when it applies, as unquestionably it does whenever the Government is directly concerned, it may sometimes, if rigidly enforced, be productive of great individual hardship; since, where a witness is giving an account of what occurred at a distant period, it is obviously material to ascertain whether he gave substantially the same account recently after the transaction; and if the object be to shake the credit of the witness, it is equally important to know whether a communication, which he asserts that he made to a certain person, was, in fact, ever so made. On the other hand, it is absolutely essential to the welfare of the State, that the names of parties who interpose in situations of this kind should not be divulged; for otherwise, be it from fear, or shame, or the dislike of being publicly mixed up in inquiries of this nature, few men would choose to assume the disagreeable part of giving or receiving information respecting offences, and the consequence would be that many great crimes would pass unpunished.<sup>1</sup>

§ 863.<sup>2</sup> The opinion which seems best supported by decided cases and dicta, is, that the proceedings of grand jurors should, on similar grounds of public policy, be regarded as privileged communications. Some persons imagine, though it would seem erroneously, that the preliminary inquiry as to the guilt or innocence of a party accused ought to be secretly conducted; and, in furtherance of this object, every grand juror is sworn to secrecy. One reason may be, to prevent the escape of the party, should he know that proceedings were in train against him; another may be, to secure freedom of deliberation and opinion among the grand jurors, which might be impaired if the part taken by each could be made known to the accused or to the Crown; and although these reasons are clearly fallacious, since the first is answered by the fact, that most crimes are primarily investigated by an open inquiry before the committing magistrate, and the second rests on an assumption of pusillanimity and meanness, which the gentlemen who constitute the grand jury but little deserve; still, they are the best that can be furnished in support of a system, which is doubtless often productive of perjury, often of collusion, and sometimes of oppression.<sup>3</sup> The rule includes not only the grand jurors themselves, but their clerk,<sup>4</sup> if they have one, and the prosecuting officer,<sup>5</sup> if he be present at their deliberations; all these being equally concerned in the administration of the same portion of penal law. They are not permitted to disclose what number of jurors were present when a case was brought before them, or the number or names of the

<sup>4</sup> 12 Vin. Abr. Ev. H.; Imlay v. Rogers, 2 Halst. 347. Mr. Chitty, in his 1st vol. of *Crim. Com. 126, narrates that, at York, a grand juror, hearing a witness swear in court contrary to the evidence which he had given before the grand jury, told the judge, "and the witness was committed for perjury, to be tried upon the testimony of the gentlemen of the grand jury." What became of this case does not appear. By the N. York Cr. Code, § 267, "Every member of the grand jury must keep secret, whatever he himself, or any other grand juror may have said, or in what manner he, or any other grand juror, may have voted on a matter before them." § 268. "A member of the grand jury may, however, be required by any court to disclose the testimony of a witness examined before the grand jury, for the purpose of ascertaining whether it is consistent with that given by the witness before the court; or to disclose the testimony given before them by any person, upon a charge against him for perjury in giving his testimony, or upon his trial therefor." This appears to be the common-sense view of the matter.

§ 864.<sup>2</sup> On similar grounds of public policy, and for the protection of parties against fraud, the law excludes the testimony of traverse or petty jurors, when offered to prove mistake or misbehaviour by the jury in regard to the verdict. Thus, where a motion was made to amend the postea by increasing the damages, the court refused to admit an affidavit sworn by all the jurymen, in which they stated their intention to have been to give the plaintiff such increased sum.<sup>3</sup> So, also, on several occasions, affidavits that verdicts have been decided by lot have been rejected on motion for new trials, whether such affidavits were sworn by individual jurymen,<sup>4</sup> or by strangers, stating the subsequent admissions of jurors to themselves,<sup>5</sup> or even that a declaration had been made by one juror in the hearing of his fellows in open court after the verdict had been pronounced.<sup>6</sup> In all cases of this kind, the court must obtain their knowledge of the misconduct complained of, either from the officer who had charge of the jury,<sup>7</sup> or from some other person who actually witnessed the transaction.<sup>8</sup> But, although a jurymen's affidavit of what occurred in the jury-box during the trial cannot be received, it is admissible to explain the circumstances under which he came into the box.<sup>9</sup>

§ 865. On a like principle of public policy, no witness,—whether he be a Peer, a Member of the House of Commons, an officer of either House, or a shorthand writer,—can be forced, without the permission of the House having been first obtained, to disclose in a court of justice what took place within the walls of Parliament, or

§ 866.<sup>4</sup> On similar grounds, the official transactions between the heads of the departments of Government and their subordinate officers, are, in general, treated as secrets of State.<sup>5</sup> Thus, communications between a colonial governor and his attorney-general, on the condition of the colony or the conduct of its officers,<sup>6</sup> or between such governor and a military officer under his authority;<sup>7</sup> the report of a military commission of inquiry, made to the commander-in-chief;<sup>8</sup> the report submitted to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland by an Inspector General of the prisons;<sup>9</sup> and the correspondence between an agent of the Government and a Secretary of State;<sup>10</sup> or between the Directors of the East India Company and the Board of Control, under the old law;<sup>11</sup> or between an officer of the Customs and the Board of Commissioners,<sup>12</sup>—are confidential and privileged matters, which the interest of the State will not permit to be revealed. to produce papers or disclose information communicated to them, when, in their own judgment, the disclosure would, on public considerations, be inexpedient.<sup>1</sup> And the same doctrine, as it would seem, prevails in England, whenever Ministers of State are called as witnesses for the purpose of producing public documents.<sup>2</sup> If, however, the Minister, instead of attending personally at the trial, should send the required papers by the hands of a subordinate officer, the judge would probably examine them himself, and would compel their production, unless he were satisfied that they ought on public grounds to be withheld.<sup>3</sup> When the law is restrained by public policy from enforcing the production of papers, the like necessity restrains it from doing what would be the same thing in effect, namely, receiving secondary evidence of their contents.<sup>4</sup> It has, however, been held, that, in an action of trespass brought against the governor of a colony, a military officer under his control might be asked in general terms, whether he did not act by the direction of the defendant, though the written instructions could not be given in evidence.<sup>5</sup> But communications, though made to official persons, are not privileged, where they are not made in the discharge of any public duty; such, for example, as a letter by a private individual to the chief secretary of the postmaster-general, complaining of the conduct of the guard of the mail towards a passenger.<sup>6</sup>

§ 867.<sup>7</sup> The law excludes, on public grounds, a fifth species of evidence, namely, that which is indecent, or offensive to public morals, or injurious to the feelings of third persons; the parties themselves having no interest in the matter, except what they have impertinently created. The mere indecency of disclosures does not suffice to exclude them, where the evidence is necessary for

But where the parties have impertinently interested themselves in a question, tending to violate the peace of society by exhibiting an innocent third person in a ridiculous light, or to disturb his peace and comfort, or to offend public decency by the disclosures which its decision may require, the evidence will not be received. § 868. In like manner, when the legitimacy of a child is the question in dispute, the testimony of the parents, that they have or have not had connexion, has, on the same general ground of decency, morality, and policy, been uniformly rejected.<sup>5</sup> This rule,—if, indeed, it be not indirectly superseded by the Act of 32 & 33 Vict. c. 68,<sup>6</sup>—excludes, not only all direct questions respecting access, but all questions which have a tendency to prove or disprove that fact, unless they are put with a view to some different point in the cause;<sup>1</sup> and it applies to the depositions of the parents equally with their vivâ voce testimony.<sup>2</sup> Neither is it affected by the circumstance, that, at the time of the examination of one of the parents, the other is dead; because the rule has been established, not simply on the ground that the tendency of such evidence is to promote connubial dissension, but on the broad basis of general public policy.<sup>3</sup> But this rule does not preclude the parents from proving that the supposed marriage was either invalid,<sup>4</sup> or valid,<sup>5</sup> or that their children were born before or after its celebration, though the effect of such evidence is, in the first and third case, to bastardise the issue, and, in the others, to establish its legitimacy.<sup>6</sup> For this purpose, too, their declarations or their answers in Chancery are admissible evidence.<sup>7</sup> It is clear also, that in a case of bastardy, a married woman may, when the fact of her husband's non-access has already been proved by independent evidence, confess her adulterous connection with another person, and thus enable the justices, in the event of her testimony being corroborated in some material particular,<sup>8</sup> to make the order of maintenance.<sup>9</sup> But this exception to the general rule of exclusion is founded on necessity; since the fact, to which she is permitted to testify, is probably within her own knowledge and that of the adulterer alone.<sup>10</sup> It may here be added,—as the point has been considered worthy of discussion,—that in an action against a husband for
